The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. J. Res. 152, for the improvement of Chevy Chase Circle with a fountain and appropriate landscape treatment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have received some complaints on this bill, which I am looking into, and I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BOYLAN. Our colleague is absent on account of work connected with the Bicentennial Commission, but I do not know of any objection to the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have some objections, and I want to talk them over with the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]?

There was no objection.

AMENDING NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 258, to amend sections 22 and 39, Title II, of the national prohibition act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PORTRAIT OF FORMER PRESIDENT CALVIN COOLIDGE

The Clerk called the next business on the Consent Calendar, S. J. Res. 75, authorizing the Joint Committee on the Library to procure an oil portrait of former President Calvin Coolidge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to offer an amendment to that resolution, that the work be done by an American artist.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman from Illinois accept that amendment?

Mr. KELLER. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER. Permission to consider the joint resolution has not yet been given. The time for offering amendment has not arrived.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, unless the amendment is accepted, I shall object.

Mr. LUCE. It will not be.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, former chairman of the committee, states that the amendment would not be accepted. Therefore I shall object.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I would like the amendment to go into the RECORD, if possible.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reservation of objection has been made. The gentlewoman from California offers an amendment which provides that this work should be done by an American artist.

Mrs. KAHN. A citizen of the United States. It seems to me there is entirely too much of that kind of work being done by foreign artists. We have just as good American portrait painters in this country. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I desire to offer to this joint resolution may be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the amendment for the information of the House, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. KAHN: In line 6, strike out the period, insert a comma and the words: "Provided, The artist so engaged be a citizen of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution, with the inclusion of the amendment offered by the lady from California?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I have just received a telegram from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT], the chairman of this committee, saying he has been hurt in an automobile accident, not seriously but painfully, and that is the reason he could not come here this afternoon. He asked me to take charge of these bills, and in view of this old discussion, as I understand it to be, I ask the lady from California and the gentleman from New York to permit this joint resolution to be passed over without prejudice until Mr. GILBERT'S return.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWALS OF PUBLIC LANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8087, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to vacate withdrawals of public lands under the reclamation law, with reservation of rights, ways, and easements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a most important bill. The Committee on the Public Lands will have the call in a week or so, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE FOX RIVER

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the next two bridge bills on the calendar, H. R. 8236, granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois to reconstruct a free highway bridge across the Fox River at Geneva, in Kane County, State of Illinois, and H. R. 8237, granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois to construct a free highway bridge across the Fox River, 5½ miles south of McHenry, in McHenry County, State of Illinois, be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the next two bills on the calendar be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE COMPENSATION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill H. R. 92, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, and acts in amendment thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the author of the bill as to the maximum pension paid to any disabled volunteer soldier by reason of disabilities which are similar to disabilities suffered by those who are in civilian employment?

Mr. BURDICK. I can not say officially, but I think it is $90.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In addition he gets his allowance. He gets about $150, I think.

Mr. BROWNING. One hundred and fifty dollars, and $200 for a double permanent disability.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then he will get his insurance?

Mr. STAFFORD. The insurance feature is out of the question entirely. This only relates to the compensation and where he has a disability that requires the constant attendance of another person.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. He would get $230.

Mr. BROWNING. If he has a double total disability.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice from the reading of the report that the chairwoman of the Compensation Commission was not desirous of taking the responsibility that would be conferred on the Compensation Commission under the authorization in the bill when introduced. A reading of her letter leads me to believe that she did not want to assume the responsibility of determining when these unfortunates require the services of an attendant.

Mr. BURDICK. I do not so read it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The very purpose of her amendment is to excuse the commission—and they have not so much to do—from the responsibility of ascertaining when this additional $50 allowance should be given. She says in her letter of three years ago—nearly four years now:

> The difficulty in providing an additional sum for those who need an attendant is that a majority of persons totally disabled will believe that they are entitled to an allowance if the law is not definite and specific as to the classes of cases covered. It may be readily admitted that a person who is totally blind, or a person who has lost both hands, or one who is paralyzed so as not to be able to walk, is in actual need of constant aid and assistance in order to be properly taken care of. When it comes to conditions which involve total disability, but the injured one is usually able to care for himself, it would be difficult to determine to what extent, if any, the service of an attendant is necessary.

Mr. BURDICK. That is a criticism of the first bill I put in. Then they suggested an amendment, which I have recently introduced.

Mr. STAFFORD. They suggested an amendment for the sole purpose of being relieved of the responsibility of determining the cases where an actual attendant is necessary in certain described cases.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no.

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; that is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. The author of the bill agrees with me. I have read the bill very carefully and the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BURDICK], who has given this bill much study, agrees with my contention.

Mr. BURDICK. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this a sham battle that is going on here?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; far from it. We are trying to get information.

So the gentleman's committee, to harmonize the views of the chairwoman of the commission, wishes to grant this $50 to these specially designated classes and then also carry out the original intendment to grant it to others where they think it is necessary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let the RECORD show that the bill does not designate any classes at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that the Congress of the United States has not yet passed the Patman bill, being H. R. 1, which is to require this Government to pay off at once, and in cash, the adjusted-compensation certificates that it justly owes the ex-service men of our Nation. This is a debt of honor. And it must be paid. And we who are dependable friends of the men who carried our flag to France are not going to let this Congress adjourn until this debt is paid.

Many of these World War veterans are in dire need. Many are about to lose their homes. Many are in serious distress. The wives and little children of many are suffering. Their problem should appeal to every Representative here. We must quit talking about helping them, and pass this bill to pay the debt due them, which is all they want. They are not asking for a dole. They are asking the Government to pay its just debt to them that has been owing since the Armistice was signed on November 11, 1918.

This Congress supported President Hoover in his moratorium gift of $250,000,000 to foreign countries. I voted against it, because I believe in helping Americans first. This Congress supported President Hoover in his program of voting $2,000,000,000 to help "busted" railroads and "busted" big business. I voted against it, because I did not believe that it would materially help the American people, and I was unwilling to saddle upon them that additional tremendous debt.

This Congress voted to support President Hoover in giving an additional $125,000,000 to Federal Land Banks. I voted against it, because these Federal land banks, and joint-stock land banks, are daily demanding their pound of flesh from farmers and are foreclosing their mortgages against farms, suing farmers hundreds of miles away from their homes, and dispossessing them, and turning their wives and little children out in the cold without a roof to cover their heads, and I shall never vote to give them another cent, but stand ready to vote to repeal the acts that created them and force them to liquidate, and stop them from robbing farmers, for the farms which these land banks are taking away from farmers are worth several times the amount of their mortgages. They have taken judgments against these farmers for their debt, for 10 per cent attorneys fees, for costs of foreclosure, and big sheriff's fees, which preclude the farmer from ever redeeming his farm. I am one Representative who is going to make an uncompromising fight here to redress this terrible wrong. These Shylocks must stop taking farms from farmers. They must stop robbing them in this depression and crisis.

There is no good reason why this Government should not pay this debt of honor to our veterans of the World War. The Secretary of the Treasury has just had his $900,000,000 2 per cent loan oversubscribed, which shows that we can borrow money at a low rate of interest, and we have already paid over $3,000,000,000 on our Government debts ahead of our debt-paying program, and we can draw on this reserve, so to speak, in paying off these adjusted-compensation certificates.

And, until decisive steps are taken to pay these certificates in cash to our ex-service men, I am going to object to the passage of such bills as the one now up for consideration. It should not pass until we have paid this debt of honor to our World War veterans. Hence, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I am making this objection as a protest on the inaction of the House in failing this far to get up and pass the Patman bill, H. R. 1, which must be passed before we adjourn. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7916, to extend the times for the commencement and completion of the bridge of the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad, in said county, in the State of Minnesota and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg, in said county, in the State of North Dakota, across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the author of this bill, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SELVIG], was here a few moments ago and canvassed the situation and left word with me to notify him to be here. The gentleman wants to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. I wonder if I would be asking too much if I requested that this bill be passed over temporarily.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman wishes the Senate bill substituted, and it is an identical or similar bill, why not make the request? It is a minor bridge bill, and there is no objection to the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill (S. 3132) be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved July 1, 1922, and revived and reenacted by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1931, granting the consent of Congress to the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad in said county, in the State of Minnesota, and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg in said county, in the State of North Dakota, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River of the North at or near the section line between sections 24 and 25, township 145 north, range 49 west, fifth principal meridian, on the boundary line between Minnesota and North Dakota, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from March 3, 1932.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

MANAGEMENT OF INDIAN COUNTRY

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8178, to transfer certain jurisdiction from the War Department in the management of Indian country.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not see anything in the report on this bill in the way of a letter from the War Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will note from the letter of the Secretary of the Interior that when this law was originally passed these Indian reservations were under the jurisdiction of the War Department.

Mr. GOSS. I read that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Since then the jurisdiction has been transferred to the Interior Department. What objection can there be under these circumstances?

Mr. GOSS. I did not know whether there was any or not. That is what I was inquiring about.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not see where there can be any objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER IN ILLINOIS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8247, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Mound City, Ill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CONNECTICUT RIVER

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8510, granting the consent of Congress to the Connecticut River State Bridge Commission, a statutory commission of the State of Connecticut, created and existing under the provisions of Special Act No. 496, of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, 1931 session, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Connecticut River.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute an identical bill, S. 2985, for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Connecticut River State Bridge Commission, a statutory commission of the State of Connecticut created and existing under the provisions of special Act No. 496 of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, 1931 session, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Connecticut River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Hartford and East Hartford, Conn., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the words "operate a" insert the words "free highway."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion by Mr. LONERGAN to reconsider was laid on the table.

The House bill was laid on the table.

COEUR D'ALENE AND ST. JOE NATIONAL FORESTS

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6658, for the inclusion of certain lands in the Coeur d'Alene and St. Joe National Forests, State of Idaho, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NORTHERN PACIFIC HALIBUT FISHERY

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8084, for the protection of the northern Pacific halibut fishery.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I am not quite ready on this bill, and I would like to have it go over.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been on the calendar since February 10. I have never heard an objection from any source. It is recommended by the Secretary of State and by the Commissioner of Fisheries, and it is simply to carry into effect a convention which has been ratified between the United States and the Dominion of Canada for the protection of the halibut fishery in the northern Pacific. As it stands now there is no law in force, because the act of 1924, enacted in pursuance of the 1923 convention, expired on the adoption of the new convention. So there is now no law of the United States which is necessary for the protection of the halibut fishery.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that I have examined the bill and the report, and I believe there are urgent reasons, as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, for the immediate passage of this bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am not ready at present, and I ask that it be passed over for the present.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the understanding that it may be returned to later in the day?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be passed over.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF IMPROVEMENTS ON WEST SIDE OF GEORGIA AVENUE

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 361, to provide for the extension of improvements on the west side of Georgia Avenue, north of Princeton Place, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, does this recede or extend the building line? If it extends it, what provision is being made to take care of it?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. The object is to allow the owner to extend his property 3.64 feet, so that all lots will have a uniform frontage. The city commissioners have approved this, and it only affects 3.64 feet.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report shows that this favored property owner wishes to obtain preferential consideration because the adjoining owner has extended his line 3 feet beyond the property line.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. No; the owner of the property at one time gave the land to the city. The city afterwards found out that they did not need it, so the only way he can get it back is by legislation of this kind. In other words, it applies to a frontage of 3.64 feet and in no way affects the remainder of the property.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman states that the adjoining property owner has a right to extend the building line 3 feet?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. The adjoining property owner did not give the land to the city.

Mr. STAFFORD. If we grant this privilege to this property owner, how will it affect the property owners on the other side of him?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. It makes them all even.

Mr. STAFFORD. This will be the only one interested in the extension?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. All that I know of. In other words, the block can not be even without this legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. This will not induce property owners on either side to come to Congress and ask further extensions in their behalf?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. And there will be no break in the building line?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Oh, no.

Mrs. NORTON. I have some very interesting photographs that will make that very plain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the owner of lot 14, square 2897, in the District of Columbia be, and said owner is hereby, authorized to use for building purposes a strip of land in front of said lot 14, square 2897, so that the front face of the front wall of the building or improvements so erected shall be in a direct line with the front face of the front wall of the building immediately north thereof located on lot 835, square 2897, said strip herein authorized to be used and occupied being described as follows: Beginning for the same at the northeast corner of lot 14, square 2897, and running thence with the extension of the northerly line of said lot 14, easterly 3.64 feet; thence southerly 24.45 feet to a point in the extension of the northerly line of Princeton Place, 60 feet wide; thence with said extension westerly 3.52 feet to the southeast corner of said lot 14; thence with the easterly line of said lot 14 northerly 25 feet to the point of beginning: Provided, That the piece or parcel of land herein described shall be occupied, used, and owned by the owner of said lot 14, square 2397, its successors and assigns, subject to any and all assessments and general and special taxes which may be levied or charged thereon the same in all respects as other private property in the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

"FIGHTING SHIP"

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8874) to amend section 14 of the shipping act, 1916 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 812), as amended by section 20 of the merchant marine act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 842).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then I object to the bill.

Mr. BOYLAN. Then I object to the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BOYLAN. I asked unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I objected to that request, but I am perfectly willing to reserve it.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, of course, it is the privilege of gentlemen to object to the consideration of this bill, and of that I am not complaining, but I want to make an explanation of the bill in the light of the large amount of very misleading propaganda that has been put out against it. The bill simply clarifies the definition of a "fighting ship." There has been legislation against a "fighting ship" by the leading maritime nations of the earth for a very long period. That is for the protection of their own merchant marines. The specific reason for this particular bill was a practice of the following kind which had grown up: Foreign ships engaged in the North Atlantic trade would operate during the spring and summer and fall in that trade, and then in the winter, when the trade was slack, they would draw off their regular runs and engage in competition with American lines between American and West Indian ports. In other words, they would come in and pick off the cream from the regularly established American lines which were operating American ships in this service the year round, during the slack season as well as the flush season. The result is that all of the foreign shipping interests are fighting this legislation just as they always fight legislation in the interest of the American merchant marine.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that I have stood with him in every attempt to successfully fight foreign competition, but is it not true that under this new law there is a provision that complaint can be made where there is a "fighting ship," and in that way have the matter adjudicated.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; it is the law now, but this bill simply clarifies the definition of a "fighting ship" and the manner in which a procedure may be had against a fighting ship. So far as the legislation itself is concerned, it is not new to this country, and it is not new to other countries. Some countries go very much farther. For instance, a citizen of Italy can not sail from an Italian port or go into an Italian port except upon an Italian ship. Other nations have various measures that go infinitely farther than this bill or any other American bill for the protection of our merchant marine. It is just a question of whether or not we want an American merchant marine or do not want it. If we do not want it, and we want to rely upon foreign ships in peace times and consequently in war times, then let us defeat all these measures at the behest of the foreign shipping interests. I have some of their propaganda. They have stirred up the cotton shippers by misrepresenting the facts; they are telling them that this will hurt them in their shipments of cotton. Since we have established American lines out of the Gulf and other American ports, everybody familiar with the situation knows that American shippers are getting much better rates than they got before, and since 1920, when the merchant marine act was passed, American shippers have been saved hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars in ocean cargo rates. That will continue if we maintain competition between American lines and foreign lines. Foreign ship lines are in their own rate conferences.

The only man who appeared against this bill was the representative of a foreign conference. He admitted upon cross-examination that all of the lines in that conference were foreign lines. He said that there had been one American line in it. That is the source of the opposition. So far as the cotton business is concerned, what will result if the foreign lines are permitted to put in "fighting ships" and destroy our American lines and put them out of business? We will then have to revert to the situation we had before, and we would be dependent absolutely upon foreign lines, and while there may be temporary advantage in rates to shippers while that cutthroat competition is going on, yet when they destroy the American lines then they will put the rates back up in their agreements as they did before and the shippers will be subject to them and their will absolutely and have to pay whatever rates they charge, just as they had to pay before. That is the situation in a nutshell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. Is there objection?

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WEST. I object.

AMENDING SECTION 8 OF ACT OF JUNE 19, 1886, AS AMENDED

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8875, to amend section 8 of the act of June 19, 1886, as amended by section 2 of the act of February 17, 1898 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 289).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROTECTION OF NORTHERN PACIFIC HALIBUT FISHERY

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in accordance with the understanding recently had, that we may return to the bill (H. R. 8084) for the protection of the northern Pacific halibut fishery.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. That this act may be cited as the Northern Pacific halibut act.

DEFINITION OF TERMS

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this act "close season" shall mean the period from the 1st day of November in any year to the 15th day of February in the next following year, both days inclusive, unless this period or any part thereof shall be opened to fishing by regulation of the International Fisheries Commission, as empowered by the provisions of the convention for the preservation of the halibut fishery of Northern Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, signed on behalf of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada May 9, 1930, or any other close season hereafter established by the International Fisheries Commission in accordance with the provisions of that convention; "territorial waters of the United States" shall mean the waters contiguous to the western coast of the United States and the waters contiguous to the southern and western coasts of Alaska; "territorial waters of Canada" shall mean the waters contiguous to the western coast of Canada; and "convention waters" shall mean the territorial waters of the United States, the territorial waters of Canada, and the high seas, including Bering Sea, extending westerly from the limits of the territorial waters of the United States and of Canada.

FISHING UNLAWFUL; WHEN

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to fish for, or catch, or attempt to catch, any halibut (Hippoglossus) at any time in any of the territorial waters of the United States closed to fishing under the provisions of the above-mentioned convention or by any regulations adopted in pursuance thereof, or under the provisions of this act, or for any national or inhabitant of the United States to fish for, or catch, or attempt to catch, any halibut at any time in any of the convention waters so closed to fishing, or to violate any regulations established pursuant to the authority of the convention. The unintentional catching of halibut, when legally fishing for other species of fish, shall not constitute a violation of this act if such halibut shall be used for food by the crew of the vessel catching the same or be landed and immediately delivered to any official duly authorized by the Secretary of Commerce of the United States to accept delivery, or delivered to the proper authorities of the Dominion of Canada. The halibut delivered to any official of the United States pursuant to the provisions of this section shall be sold to the highest bidder for cash, and the proceeds therefrom, exclusive of necessary expenses in connection therewith, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

UNLAWFUL PORT USE; DEPARTURES

SEC. 4. No person, firm, or corporation shall use any port of or place in the United States to furnish, prepare, or outfit any vessel, boat, or other craft intended to be used in violation of the convention for the preservation of the halibut fishery or in violation of this act, nor shall any person permit, or cause to be permitted, any vessel, boat, or other craft intended to be used in violation of the said convention or of this act to depart from any port of or place in the United States.

UNLAWFUL PORT ENTRY; POSSESSION

SEC. 5. It shall be unlawful for any vessel, boat, or other craft having on board any halibut caught contrary to any of the provisions of the said convention or of this act to enter any port or place in the United States, or for any vessel, boat, or other craft to enter any such port or place while upon or in the prosecution of any voyage during which the vessel, boat, or other craft fished or was used in fishing for halibut in convention waters closed to fishing. It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to have in his possession in any port of or place in the United States or in any territorial water of the United States any halibut unlawfully caught under the provisions of the said convention or of this act. It shall also be unlawful for any person to land in any port of or place in the United States halibut caught in convention waters during any period closed to fishing.

PENALTY

SEC. 6. Any person violating any of the provisions of the said convention or of this act shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

PATROLS; SEARCHES

SEC. 7. The President shall cause a patrol of naval or other public vessels designated by him to be maintained in such places and waters as to him shall seem expedient for enforcing the said convention and this act, and any officer of any vessel engaged in such service, and any other officers designated by the President, may stop, board, and search any vessel, boat, or other craft in the territorial waters of the United States and any vessel, boat, or other craft of the United States on the high seas when suspected of having violated or being about to violate any of the provisions of the said convention or of this act.

CANADIAN VESSELS AND NATIONALS

SEC. 8. Every national or inhabitant and every vessel, boat, or other craft of Canada found violating the said convention or this act shall be delivered as soon as practicable to an authorized official of Canada at the nearest point to the place of seizure or elsewhere as the officials of the United States seizing the same and the authorized officials of Canada may agree upon, and the witnesses and proof necessary to the prosecution of said persons and vessels of Canada shall be furnished with reasonable promptitude to the authorities of Canada having jurisdiction thereof.

SEIZURE AND FORFEITURE

SEC. 9. Every vessel, boat, or craft, employed in any manner in violating any of the provisions of the said convention or of this act shall be seized by any collector, surveyor, inspector, officer of a revenue cutter, or person specified in section 7 hereof, and except as provided in section 8 hereof, every such vessel, boat, or craft, including its tackle, apparel, furniture, cargo, and stores, shall be forfeited to the United States by proper proceedings in any court of the United States in Alaska, California, Oregon, or Washington.

FISHERIES COMMISSION EXEMPTION

SEC. 10. None of the inhibitions contained in this act shall apply to the International Fisheries Commission when engaged in any scientific investigation.

DURATION OF ACT

SEC. 11. This act shall take effect immediately and shall continue in force until the termination of the convention signed by the United States and the Dominion of Canada, on May 9, 1930, for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the northern Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 9, strike out the words "any court of the United States in Alaska, California, Oregon, or Washington," and insert: "the district court of the United States, including the United States district courts of Alaska, in the judicial district in which the violation is alleged to have occurred; or in the United States district court in the nearest judicial district within the United States, if the violation is alleged to have occurred outside the territorial waters of the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, with very great pleasure I present to the House its baby Member in years, Hon. W. CARLTON MOBLEY, of Georgia, who is 25 years and 3 months old to-day. While the baby Member in years, yet in knowledge and ability and experience, he is far from it. He was elected to succeed Hon. Samuel Rutherford, recently deceased.

His commission has been filed and he is ready to take the oath of office. [Applause.]

Hon W. CARLTON MOBLEY appeared at the well of the House and took the oath of office as prescribed by law.

IMMIGRATION LAWS WITH RESPECT TO SINGERS AND CHORISTERS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8978, to clarify the application of the contract-labor provisions of the immigration laws to singers and choristers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a restriction measure. This bill will simply prevent a group of bootleggers operating for the benefit of the operas, from bringing in a number of singers and choristers to the United States to fill the places of American choristers and singers, thereby destroying opportunity for American labor and destroying the livelihood of hundreds of American families.

I will ask the gentleman who asked to put this bill over, to listen to this story and perhaps he will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am listening to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Chicago Opera Co. has imported over a hundred singers and choristers, and has deprived a hundred American citizens of their places. One reason is that they could get labor cheaper. Secondly, they seem to like foreign names much better than the names of American families, even though the American can sing just as well as the foreign talent.

Under the present law, immigration has been restricted in such a way that families of American citizens still remain separated, but a gap has been left open for the admission of choristers, movie stars, and musicians, through certain exceptions placed in the law.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. Is it not a fact, too, that in America we have just as good or just as fine and even superior talent to this foreign talent?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is one time I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I wish to point out to the gentleman who sponsored this bill that I fear it is too broad under the exception whereby it is provided that he has distinguished merit and ability as a chorister. I would strike out the word "chorister," because I would like to point out to the gentleman that they will get around that in this way: They will train them for certain operas on the other side, and they will say that these choristers are distinguished choristers. I would suggest to the gentleman striking out the word "chorister" from the exemption entirely.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What would the gentleman suggest instead of that?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would say that he is of distinguished merit and ability as a solo singer. Then you would absolutely cut out the choristers. That is what I am afraid of.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I proceed and further call the attention of the House to the fact that under the act of 1917, in the case of a person who seeks to come to this country for the purpose of doing work, some one must, in the first instance, petition the Department of Labor to waive the contract-labor provision of the immigration law? If this bill is enacted, that will be necessary in the case of an alien singer or an alien chorister. But the law of 1917 makes an exception for artists, professional actors, singers, and certain others whereby they do not have to apply to the Department of Labor for the waiving of contract labor. Therefore all they have to do is to say that they are an artist or an actor or a singer and immediately they come in. After they are in here—and they are brought here by these groups of opera companies—their time is extended for months and years, and, as a result of these extensions to these foreign individuals, there are hundreds of American families who are in serious financial distress because American singers or American choristers are thrown out of work who are able to do even better work than these foreign singers.

There was an open gap in the immigration law, where we have separated American families, but we are allowing singers and actors and musicians to come into this country by the hundreds. It is about time that this matter was called to the attention of the House, and I ask that I may have your support in bringing out this bill and thereby giving an opportunity to American families that have in their circle American citizens who are singers or who are choristers—who can compete with any foreigner in the line of singing—enabling them to have their jobs back. At present they are starving, because there are 100 or 150 of these alien singers who are taking up their jobs. That is all this bill seeks to do.

May I particularly call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] to the following observation:

Section 2 of this bill seeks only to place a reasonable limitation as to which "alien singers" and as to which "alien choristers" may properly claim exemption from the contract-labor provisions of the immigration laws. Only such "alien singers" or "alien choristers" may claim to be "artists" or "singers" or "professional actors" as are able to establish that: First, their professional engagements in the United States are of such a character requiring superior talent; and, second, they are able to meet those requirements for superior talent because they are "singers" or "choristers" of distinguished merit and ability as such. This provision is a distinct benefit to outstanding personalities and will not deprive the United States of real artists or singers having genuine established ability.

Testimony presented to the committee by representatives of American choral organizations indicated the grand opera chorister is not in fact an artist at all. All he needs is his voice to get any kind of a job, whereas a genuine artist or a distinguished professional singer must undergo a higher education in music. The majority of choristers in this foreign element learned their stuff just as do bricklayers or tailors—they work six days a week, receive wages on Saturday, and punch a time clock just as do manual workers in factories. During the past few years certain managers have imported these foreign elements under the exemption clause, claiming they are artists, paying these choristers certain agreed-to compensation, and then collecting back certain percentages of the salary of these so-called artists. Why should this be permitted to continue when these same managers refuse work to our own citizens having families starving and subjected to public effort to relieve their distress?

Let me say in closing that this bill will not deprive the United States of the enjoyment afforded by the public or private performances of distinguished singers or choristers from abroad who have the trained ability and talent to contribute to our genuine enjoyment and uplift. But the provisions of this bill will keep out pseudoartists whose primary object is the money they can earn at the expense of our American citizens of equal or superior ability.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] explain what is expected to be considered during the balance of the week?

Mr. RAINEY. To-morrow we have the anti-injunction bill. If we get through with that in a reasonable time, we might then go on with the Private Calendar. The next day is Calendar Wednesday. On Thursday we expect to take up the tax bill, and subordinate every other measure until we get it through, so far as the rules will permit. At the present time this Government is running behind $3,400,000 every day, and we are anxious to get the provisions of that bill in operation as soon as we can. The bill provides that the manufacturers' sales tax shall go into operation 30 days after the approval of the President and that the excise taxes shall go into effect 15 days thereafter. So the sooner we get it into operation the better it will be for the country, and I am assured that the Senate will at the earliest possible moment bring the bill to the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman is entirely right as far as the tax bill is concerned, that we should take it up at once and stick to it until we finish it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Was the tax bill reported to-day?

Mr. RAINEY. It will be reported to-day at 2 o'clock. I was assured copies of the bill would be available by 1 o'clock, but they say they are not available.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] said they would be available when he introduced the bill.

Mr. RAINEY. But they tell me they are not available. Of course, that is not our fault.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7897, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River approximately midway between the cities of Owensboro, Ky., and Rockport, Ind.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

IMPROVEMENT OF INLAND WATERWAYS FROM NORFOLK TO BEAUFORT INLET

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6184, for the improvement of the inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice so that I may have further time to study its provision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

MEN GIVE UP THEIR LIVES IN THE COAST GUARD SERVICE

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, last night during the terrific blizzard at Atlantic City some members of the Coast Guard crews gave up their lives for their country.

As reported by Chief Boatswain (L.) Irwin B. Steele, fifth district, over the telephone from Atlantic City, 10.15 a. m. Monday, March 7, 1932:

Yesterday the wind began to breeze in the morning. At 2 p. m. was blowing 66 miles. At 1 p. m. Mr. Turner, in charge Atlantic City station, received word that there were three fishermen out. He proceeded to sea in the CG–2301. It is thought that he ran about 5 or 6 miles and seeing nothing returned. After he had returned he learned that two of these boats had beached and the crews were saved (this is a fact). The skiff L–5085 was in distress 10 miles offshore, and the fishing smack Helen took her crew off and landed on the beach at Sacramento Avenue, Atlantic City. The skiff afterwards came ashore in Atlantic City.

On learning that the American gas screw Anna was still out, Mr. Turner got in touch with the officer in charge, Great Egg station, when both proceeded to sea, officer in charge, Atlantic City station, out of Absecon Inlet, and officer in charge, Great Egg station, from his station. What I am telling you now is learned from Mr. Turner, officer in charge, Atlantic City station, at the hospital. When about 2 miles offshore the motor in the CG–2301 went dead. She took a sea and capsized immediately. They hung on to the bottom of this boat for a period of approximately 90 minutes, then drifted in with the wind, still bottom up. They finally were washed off and drifted under the Steel Pier, Atlantic City, where civilians threw lifebuoys to them, and it has been told by civilians that Surfman Garton got one of these buoys and was about halfway up on the pier when he became exhausted and fell into the sea and was lost. Nothing was seen of Garton or Livingston after that. Turner was finally washed ashore, aided by his own swimming.

Between 4.30 and 5 p. m. (Sunday) some one telephoned the station and said that the picket boat CG–2301 had capsized. The station crew immediate rushed to the Atlantic City boathouse, where Boatswain's Mate (Second Class) (L.) Rhodes and Machinist's Mate (Second Class) Graham and Surfman Barnett manned the power surfboat and proceeded to sea.

In this connection let me say to you that this man William Graham comes from my district and is a son of two humble people, a farmer and his wife, and David Barnett was a North Carolinian, a resident of Congressman LINDSAY WARREN's district, and it is this connection that I want to pay tribute to heroism where tribute is due. They gave up their lives for their country and in its service.

On the way out of Absecon Inlet they met the lifeboat from Great Egg. The lifeboat from Great Egg rounded to and after clearing their carburetor up proceeded after them to sea. Boatswain (L.) Turner, of the Great Egg station, states that when the surfboat was opposite Heinz's Pier she was seen to jump in the air, pitch-poling, as he thought. That was the last that the Great Egg lifeboat saw of the surfboat. Surfman Salter, of the Atlantic City station, was on Heinz's Pier at the time, and claims that he watched the surfboat for a period of 10 minutes after that. That was the last seen or heard from the surfboat. Boatswain (L.) Turner after cruising around for considerable period in the lifeboat thought he could be of no further assistance to anybody and he put in at Atlantic City boathouse, where he stayed until Monday morning (this morning) just after daylight, when he proceeded to sea again in company with Boatswain (L.) Elwood Butler and C. M. B. (L.) Charles Wright. They proceeded to sea between 4 and 5 miles in the Great Egg lifeboat, when the boat and men became iced up and it was thought dangerous to proceed further. They returned to the Atlantic City boathouse at 9.30 Monday morning (this morning), where they stayed a few minutes, and are now endeavoring to assist the gas screw Anna. They are out at the time of this conversation (10.25 a. m.).

Names of men missing: CG–2301, Harold Livingston, surfman; William Garton, surfman. Motor surfboat Atlantic City, No. 2889, Marvin E. Rhodes, B. M. 2c. (L.); William Graham, Mo. M. M. 2c. (L.); David Barnett, surfman.

The picket boat is coming ashore in pieces all the way from the Steel Pier to Ventnor. Nothing whatever is coming ashore from the power surfboat.

The New York division of the Coast Guard are patrolling the area on lookout for bodies or the surfboat. Commander McLean, base 9, is standing by as soon as weather permits to undertake patrol with airplane. There is still blowing a gale at Atlantic City, possibly 60 miles.

Thus these men go down in the sea, men who have done their duty by their country in the great service of the Coast Guard of the United States of America. [Applause.]

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT AT ROCKINGHAM, N. C.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6456, to release the city of Rockingham, N. C., from the obligation of providing at its own expense a place for holding United States district court.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in the fifth paragraph of section 98 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided, That the city of Winston-Salem shall provide and furnish at its own expense a suitable and convenient place for holding the district court."

With the following committee amendments:

Line 4, after the word "amended," insert the following: "(Sec. 179, Title 28, U. S. C.)."

Line 5, after the word "the," strike out the balance of the line and also lines 6 and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "cities of Winston-Salem and Rockingham shall each provide and furnish at its own expense a suitable and convenient place for holding the district court until Federal buildings containing quarters for the courts are erected as such places."

Amend the title of the bill so as to read: "A bill to amend section 98 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BROWNING). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

IMMIGRATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8174, to exempt from the quota fathers and mothers over 60 years of age of United States citizens.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to state with reference to this bill that it is a bill that will lay down the bars. It is an immigration bill that will lay down the bars, and the reason I use that phrase is because it is a common phrase employed by restrictionists who on many occasions have made the statement that they are not in favor of any provision that lays down the bars. I do not want to go into an extensive discussion of this proposition——

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman has not been allowed any time to speak on the bill.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT RANDOLPH, MO.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8072, to extend the times for commencing and completing construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, and I would not object if he would consent for an amendment providing for a railroad bridge. But otherwise I shall be constrained to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believed the original enactment practically provided for a railroad bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. A railroad bridge or a combined bridge?

Mr. STAFFORD. It says in section 2 that it is to construct, maintain, and operate such bridge and the necessary approaches thereto as a railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains or street cars, or both, or as a highway bridge for the passage of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles. It is sponsored by the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., and shortens the distance of the leading railroads entering Kansas City by a distance of 2 miles. I do not think the major purpose is to have it used as a vehicle bridge; but if the construction can be so arranged that it is economical from an investment standpoint to have it used as a vehicular bridge also, the gentleman would not object to having it used as a railroad and vehicular bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It takes more than a bridge bill to get the railroads to comply with this law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me say that I represent a trust estate having a few shares of stock in the Kansas City Railroad, and at the time the deceased testator died the stock was worth over a hundred dollars, and to-day it is worth $12. The railroad is in no position, like other western railroads, to secure money in these depressed times to build new railroad bridges.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Secretary of Agriculture says that it is the view of the department that a private highway toll bridge should not be constructed at this point and recommends against the enactment of the bill unless the authorization is revised to eliminate that part of it relating to the construction of a highway bridge or a combined highway and railroad bridge, and for that reason I shall object.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman withhold that for a minute?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman let it go over without prejudice so that the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Missouri can be present when it is taken up at some other time?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NONIMMIGRANT STATUS OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8766, to amend the sixth exception in section 3 of the immigration act of 1924, with reference to nonimmigrant status of certain aliens.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, in view that other immigration bills have gone over, I ask that this be passed without prejudice.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I object to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JENKINS. I object to the bill.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to speak out of order for five minutes on the bill H. R. 8174, page 43.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. JENKINS. I shall object, Mr. Speaker, unless I be given five minutes to reply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. JENKINS. I object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that all requests for speeches hereafter on any subject not pertaining to the bill under consideration will be objected to, as we want to get along with the bills on the calendar.

DIVISION OF THE WATERS OF THE BIG HORN RIVER

The Clerk read the next bill on the calendar, H. R. 7914, granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Big Horn River.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, will the author of the bill explain the necessity for this legislation and whether it involves a water-power proposition?

Mr. LEAVITT. The bill was first introduced with regard to the Big Horn River only. There were some proposals there which involved a possible power development and flood control, and the irrigation of lands on the Crow Indian Reservation.

The river rises in Wyoming, and it was thought as a matter of good judgment, while the Army engineers were completing their report on the engineering features and other preliminaries were being gone through, that the States might come to an agreement as to the allocation and division of the waters.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this a boundary stream or does the Yellowstone flow through the two States?

Mr. LEAVITT. It rises in Wyoming and crosses the boundary into Montana. The Big Horn River flows into the Yellowstone. Because there are some other projects under discussion that involve other tributaries of the Yellowstone it was considered advisable to include the entire Yellowstone while the compact was being made and thus settle the entire question at one time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Wherein is this stream different from any other navigable stream subject to the Federal Power Commission?

Mr. LEAVITT. Under the law in both Wyoming and Montana water rights are acquired by prior use. The lower parts of this stream are in Montana, but they rise in Wyoming. In order to avoid any possible dispute as to water rights between the citizens of the two States we are following here the usual practice of having a compact entered into between the States, to be ratified by Congress. That agreement will determine what water is the property of the citizens of Montana and what water is the property of the citizens of Wyoming.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the enactment of this measure supersede the authority conferred upon the Federal Power Commission?

Mr. LEAVITT. It has nothing to do with that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Do I understand that the purpose of the bill is only as to the division and use of the water as water?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not for power purposes?

Mr. LEAVITT. No.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is the gentleman going to press the committee amendment?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the gentleman to say that there are power projects contemplated on these respective streams?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes. This bill, however, has nothing to do with the use of water for power purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall reading during the summer a decision by the Supreme Court affecting the Colorado River. If my memory serves me right, I think there was an allocation of water in connection with it.

Mr. LEAVITT. Following a compact between the various States.

Mr. STAFFORD. The question was whether that stream was navigable, and whether the Federal Power Commission had jurisdiction over it. Because of that, I do not wish to have any legislation passed by unanimous consent which will supersede control by the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. LEAVITT. This supersedes nothing. The Power Commission has authority over the Big Horn because the canyon is on an Indian reservation, regardless of its being navigable.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Federal Power Commission has control of the Tennessee River, regardless of whether it covers the national domain or not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The compact has to be approved by the Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the assurance that there is nothing here which supersedes the authority now vested in the Federal Power Commission, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. LEAVITT. I can give the gentleman that assurance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement not later than January 1, 1936, providing for an equitable division and apportionment between the States of the water supply of the Big Horn River and of the streams tributary thereto, upon condition that two suitable persons, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, one from the Department of the Interior and one from the War Department, shall participate in said negotiations as the representatives of the United States and shall make report to Congress of the proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into: Provided, That any such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon either of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislature of each of said States and by the Congress of the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "two" and insert "one," and the word "persons" and insert the word "person."

Page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "one from the Department of the Interior and one from the War Department."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LEAVITT: Page 2, line 3, after the word "the" strike out the word "representatives" and insert in lieu thereof the word "representative."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River."

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXAMINATION OF EDISTO RIVER, S. C.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3951) to provide a preliminary examination of the Edisto River and its branches, South and North Edisto, S. C., with a view to a control of its floods.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object. This requires three objections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Are there any other objectors to the consideration of the bill? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Edisto River and its branches, South and North Edisto, S. C., with a view to control of its floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC DEFENDER FOR CANAL ZONE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7513) to provide for the appointment of a public defender for the Canal Zone.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, the only matter I had in mind was whether or not $1,200 would be sufficient to take care of that position. If I can get some information about that it will be helpful to me the next time this bill is presented.

Mr. LEA. I can give the gentleman the information, if that is the point.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withhold my request that this bill go over so that the gentleman from California may make that explanation.

Mr. LEA. All the authorities agree that this $1,200 recommendation is sufficient.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, I pity his client.

Mr. LEA. There are only five or six attorneys in the Canal Zone who are qualified to be appointed for the defense of these men. At the present time they defend these men without any compensation whatever.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think the idea is good, and I think it has been successful in the gentleman's State. I understand there is something like this in California.

Mr. LEA. We have them in some counties in California, but it is not a full-time job.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, the criminal code that is recommended by the committee is fashioned after the procedure in California.

Mr. LEA. It is; yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman states that in California there is a public defender to represent criminals in cases similar to this?

Mr. LEA. In some counties; yes. It is optional with the counties whether they have a defender or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, with the information that has been furnished by the gentleman from California, I withdraw my request to have this bill passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Panama Canal shall appoint a duly qualified member of the bar of the Canal Zone as a public defender, whose duty it shall be to represent, in the district court of the Canal Zone, any person charged with the commission of a crime within the original jurisdiction of said court who is unable to employ counsel for his defense.

SEC. 2. The public defender shall receive a salary of $1,200 per year, together with such of the privileges of a Canal Zone employee as the governor may grant.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CANAL ZONE POSTAL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7514, in relation to the Canal Zone postal service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, my only objection to this bill is that under existing law we use United States stamps with a surcharge "Panama Canal" or whatever it is. Under the bill proposed it would provide for a different issue of stamps. I do not believe that is quite necessary.

Mr. LEA. The stamps will be selected by the Governor of Panama.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not visited the canal since 1909 or 1910. At that time there was a distinctive Canal Zone stamp. Whether it has been changed in recent years I do not know.

Mr. LEA. That has been changed. Under the original provision a 40 per cent bonus was given to the Republic of Panama, but that has been eliminated by agreement, and since then the postal service has been bringing in a surplus each of the last five years, with one exception.

Mr. STAFFORD. So all the revenues arising from the Canal Zone go into the Canal Zone treasury?

Mr. LEA. They do.

Mr. STAFFORD. For the support of the postal service and the government of the Canal Zone?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. I notice on the second page of the report there is a letter written by the distinguished Postmaster General. He does not quite agree with the position taken by the committee. He does not object strenuously, but he makes a suggestion. If the gentleman will turn to that, I would like to call attention to it.

Mr. LEA. Yes. He recommends that the service be placed in charge of the Postmaster General at Washington.

Mr. JENKINS. Is that all his report indicates? It strikes me he makes a comparison with the postal conditions in other of our insular possessions, and suggests that this should be on the same basis. Is that not right?

Mr. LEA. Of course, theoretically that would seem to be the logical contention, but as long as the service there is entirely satisfactory and is making a profit and nobody desires to change it who is familiar with it, we thought it was better to leave it alone.

Mr. JENKINS. Then there is no sharp controversy at all with the Postmaster General?

Mr. LEA. Not at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not only that, but here is an operating agency of the Government which requires support. All the revenues go to the support of that operating agency down there.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Still reserving the right to object, my inquiry has not yet been answered. Why the necessity of authorizing a new issue of stamps?

Mr. LEA. This simply authorizes the governor to select the stamps. There is no point about a particular stamp required. It is simply general authority for the governor to provide stamps.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the postal service of the Canal Zone shall be governed by such of the laws, rules, and regulations of the Postal Service of the United States as are not inapplicable to the conditions existing in the Canal Zone, and the Governor of the Panama Canal is authorized to establish new post offices or discontinue those already established, to provide such rules and regulations as are necessary for the operation of the service, to appoint the personnel thereof, and to prescribe the postage stamps and other stamped paper which shall be used in such service: Provided, however, That the expenses of operating the Canal Zone postal service shall be defrayed, so far as possible, from the revenue derived therefrom, the use of which for that purpose is hereby authorized.

SEC. 2. That deposit money orders issued in the Canal Zone in lieu of postal savings certificates in accordance with rules and regulations heretofore established by the President, or that may hereafter be established by him, shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent per annum.

SEC. 3. That the interest received from the Canal Zone money-order funds deposited in banks under Canal Zone regulations shall be available to pay the interest on deposit money orders authorized by the preceding section. Such interest, which shall form a part of the postal revenues, shall also be available to pay the losses which are chargeable to the Canal Zone postal service.

SEC. 4. That all other laws for the operation of the Canal Zone postal service, excepting section 43a of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone, are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTIONS 7, 8, AND 9 OF PANAMA CANAL ACT

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7523, to amend sections 7, 8, and 9 of the Panama Canal act, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is of considerable extent. There are other bills following, some 20 or more. I think it would be well and instructive to the House if the gentleman who is reporting these bills [Mr. LEA] would give some preliminary statement as to what these various bills purpose.

The subcommittee, of which the gentleman is chairman, has given a tremendous amount of time to the consideration of these codifications, and I think it would be informing to the House now to have the gentleman take 10 or 15 minutes in explaining them, and we would save a lot of time, and the gentleman could explain just what is purposed by these various bills.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I had the same idea in mind. I think the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] has 25 bills on this calendar and they cover a great variety of subjects. I think the gentleman should be given all the time he desires to explain the bills.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may proceed for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may proceed for 10 minutes to explain the bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to this bill, but I want the RECORD to show that I did not scrutinize this particular bill and therefore I want to be absolved of that responsibility.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, in 1928 Congress authorized the President to secure a revision and codification of all the laws of Panama. The President was given complete authority to carry out that revision. He was authorized to employ a professional codifier and all the assistants necessary for that purpose. The professional codifier was secured from the West Publishing Co. He was selected entirely on the basis of his experience and competency for that work. The law authorized the Governor of the Panama Canal to call upon the district judge in Panama and the district attorney there to cooperate with this professional codifier. They spent about 15 months in revising and codifying the laws. In addition to that, the governor appointed a committee of eight, six of whom were lawyers, to make a study of these proposed revisions and codifications. Their work came to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee last year. Mr. Denison, of Illinois, was chairman of the subcommittee. A great deal of attention was given to the subject, and the committee eventually unanimously reported the 26 bills that are before you to-day.

I want to call your attention to the situation in the Panama Canal Zone to show the necessity of what is proposed here: The Panama Canal Zone is not a Territory under the Constitution. The ordinary rules of the Constitution are the rules of Panama only so far as established by acts of Congress.

When the United States secured possession of the zone in 1904 the only law they had was the law of Colombia. The Napoleonic Code, which had been transported from Europe to Chile and from Chile to Colombia, became the general law in this zone. Congress passed an act giving the President legislative power over the zone. No other legislative body, other than the Isthmian Canal Commission, has ever been created for the Canal Zone. It is a Territory without a legislative body. It has a court, of course, and peace officers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is its population?

Mr. LEA. There are about 40,000 people in the Canal Zone to-day. At the present time 20,000 of the people there are aliens, mostly West Indians and Panamans; 10,000 of them are soldiers and 10,000 of them are American citizens, civilians in the employ of the Government, together with the members of the families of the employees of the Government. They constitute the sole population of Panama.

There is no private ownership of real estate and we have only one court of record, two magistrate courts, and, of course, an appeal system. An appeal from the magistrate courts to the district court and from the district court to the circuit court at New Orleans.

This particular bill deals with the judiciary of the zone.

When the Panama Canal Commission was appointed in 1904 it was given legislative jurisdiction which it exercised until 1912. During the same period the President made a number of orders which had the force of law in the zone, and Congress from time to time ever since has passed acts which have become laws in the zone. In 1912 the legislative power was taken from the Isthmian Canal Commission, but the Presidents, under different administrations, exercised the power of making orders which have had the force of law in the zone. Now it develops that many orders made by different Presidents were without legal authority. In a number of instances they were without any authority to impose penalties for the violation of the laws they proclaimed.

So we have great necessity for revising the laws of the zone. It is a small territory, not much bigger than an ordinary county in the United States, yet it must have practically a complete system of law.

At the present time their laws come from many complicated and confusing sources.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 15 additional minutes or so much thereof as he may desire to use.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may be permitted to proceed for 15 additional minutes, or so much thereof as he desires to use. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. As to the sources of the laws in the zone, in the first place, the President made an order keeping in effect a large body of the law that had been inherited from Colombia. Two or three years later they adopted a code of civil procedure as transported from California, but not the original code of California, but as it had been transported from other sources. Then a portion of the penal code was adopted, but not the Penal Code of California, but as it had been transported from Hawaii and Porto Rico. They still maintained the old Colombian Civil Code in the practice of the Panama Canal Zone. Therefore, lawyers and judges have had the difficulty of trying to apply the civil procedure of the United States to the civil code that was inherited from Napoleon's day in Europe. Some of those laws that belonged to Colombia have not been translated into English at the present time.

I do not name that particular circumstance as an important one, but it indicates the confusion that exists in the zone to-day. One result has been that in order to render judgment in many civil cases the judges have had to develop an undue amount of judge-made law and render decisions not based upon statutory enactment.

There was no common law in the Canal Zone. The Napoleonic Code, from which the zone inherited its laws, was entirely statutory, with certain exceptions that are not in harmony with what we know as the common law in the United States.

So 26 bills are now presented here for the purpose of revising the laws of Panama.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Is not the government down there practically a military government rather than a civil government?

Mr. LEA. No; it is not. We have the Governor of the Panama Canal, who is a civilian and who has charge of the operation of the canal. The operation of the canal is the big thing in the Canal Zone. He is the important man, from an executive standpoint; but the courts are entirely free, for all practical purposes, of the Governor of the Canal Zone. The district court there is practically as free as a district court in the United States except the judge is appointed for only a 4-year term.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Are not the only people in the Canal Zone the employees of the Government and a few outsiders who are permitted to be there by the governor of the zone, who is a military officer?

Mr. LEA. That is true, but there are a great many sailors that stop in the zone temporarily, and there are 10,000 soldiers and then there are 20,000 of these aliens.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. All subject to military law?

Mr. LEA. Oh, no; it is civil law. It is not a military government, it is a civil government controlled by law as given by Congress through its laws, or Executive orders of the President made by the authority of Congress, or orders made by the Isthmian Canal Commission.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. The military operations in the Canal Zone are entirely separate and distinct from the civil government there.

Mr. LEA. That is true. Of course, the military organization is important, but it is a military organization and is subordinate to the civil government.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. I am much interested in this bill because it relates to the judiciary and I would like to ask the gentleman for my own information whether there is any other insular possession or any possession over which we have any control whatever where the committee that deals with the organic law deals also with the judiciary, or is it true that in all other cases all judicial questions go to our Judiciary Committee?

Mr. LEA. So far as I am aware, and I may be in error about the matter, this is an exception, but the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has jurisdiction of everything that relates to the Canal Zone.

The authority given to the President was to revise and codify the laws. The 26 bills presented to Congress to-day are for the purpose of revising the laws, preliminary to the codification that is expected to follow. The substantive changes that are expected to be made in the law are embodied in these 26 bills, and they are presented with the purpose that after the substantive law is enacted, then the sections will be numbered and classified, and we will come here with a codification bill which makes no changes whatever in the substantive law.

Most of these measures are routine in character. I do not mean by this statement they are not important, but they pertain mostly to routine matters of government.

The particular bill that is presented here relates to the judiciary in the Panama Canal Zone. The judicial system of the Panama Canal consists of two magistrate courts and two district courts served by one district judge. We offer legislation here that affects the courts in a material way.

In reference to the magistrate courts, at the present time they have jurisdiction of very trivial criminal matters in most cases, but they also have jurisdiction of matters involving city ordinances and the possession and right to personal property.

It may occur that a case involving thousands of dollars, where personal property is in controversy, may be within the jurisdiction of the magistrate's courts. These courts should not properly exercise such jurisdiction, and we propose to take that jurisdiction and give it to the district court, because it properly belongs to a higher court.

We propose to slightly extend the criminal jurisdiction of the magistrates by giving them jurisdiction where the penalty is not more than 30 days in jail or $100 fine. There are no jury trials in the magistrate courts.

Then we propose to give the district court jurisdiction to try all criminal cases above the jurisdiction of the magistrate courts, and we propose to give a right of appeal to the circuit court of the United States at New Orleans for every case in which the district court has original trial jurisdiction. This broadens the present right of appeal.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. I have not read the report on this point, but has this measure met with the approval of the Attorney General and the Department of Justice?

Mr. LEA. Yes; the Attorney General——

Mr. STAFFORD. The Attorney General, in his reply to the chairman of the committee, has stated that it is a matter that he is not interested in and one that does not pertain to his department, and he dismisses it in a willy-nilly way.

Mr. LEA. Yes; he does not attempt to pass upon that, but the judge down there and the bar association have made a rather extensive study of this problem since last year.

Mr. JENKINS. To what branch of the Government does the gentleman's committee appeal for information and statistics with reference to these judicial matters?

Mr. LEA. Our information is primarily through the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, and the reports are referred to the Secretary of War, and in this particular instance to the Attorney General.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was my high privilege, back 20 years ago, to serve on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce when the bill providing for the jurisdiction of the Canal Zone was under consideration. I remember that our committee hesitated and proceeded very slowly in throwing additional burdens on the appellate jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals in New Orleans.

Now the gentleman states that the proposed legislation would confer on the circuit court of appeals at New Orleans all appellate power in these matters where the district court had original jurisdiction. How extensive is the jurisdiction? The gentleman does not wish to impose too much work on the circuit court of appeals at New Orleans.

Mr. LEA. Practically everything that you would regard as an important case. The minimum limit at the present time requires $1,000 to give the right to appeal.

Mr. STAFFORD. Every person in the Canal Zone in any wise litigious would take advantage of it. The gentleman does not wish to help them stay the hand of justice by granting them the right to appeal to the circuit court of appeals in minor cases.

Mr. LEA. The question the committee had that gave us most concern was giving the right of appeal in cases between $300 and $1,000.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. There may not be as many appeals as the gentleman from Wisconsin fears, because they do not have the constituents.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the State of Wisconsin we are striving to bring about a reduction in litigation. We have courts in my State which have jurisdiction of $2,000, with the right of appeal to the circuit court, but if there is any evidence whatever that supports the finding of the lower court the circuit court on appeal will not revise it. Now, here you have a little justice court case from $300 to $1,000 tried by the district court, and you grant the right of appeal to the circuit court of appeals. I do not like that feature.

Mr. LEA. I had the same reaction as the gentleman from Wisconsin, but we find precedents for this in the district courts of Hawaii and Porto Rico. This broad right to appeal is given from the courts in Hawaii and Porto Rico.

Mr. STAFFORD. But Hawaii and Porto Rico have other courts beside the municipal and district courts.

Mr. LEA. They have corresponding courts.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question whether you will find in the Judicial Code authority in cases in Hawaii involving less than $1,000 with the right of appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think, unless there was great merit in the case, a litigant would not appeal to the court of appeals in New Orleans.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is young in his professional experience. The gentleman has not run across these litigious cusses that keep on fighting and fighting in order to embarrass and needlessly delay an ultimate decision.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I was simply pointing out the absurdity of a man's going a thousand miles to appeal a case that involves only a thousand dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. I knew an attorney in my home State who was continually coming to the Supreme Court here on certiorari in many minor cases.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Well, the gentleman has some queer clients.

Mr. STAFFORD. He was not a client of mine.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There has been a good deal of trouble in the Panama Zone, and a year ago I had a big file on my desk in regard to it. It occurred to me that the trouble is with the administration of justice in the courts and the prosecution of criminal cases. It always happens that way when you put it in the hands of soldiers. Now, we are codifying the law, and it seems to me it would have been a good thing to turn it over to the Department of Justice, where it belongs.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, in connection with that, the governor and, I believe, the Secretary of War, at least the governor, has agreed on the plan of transferring it to the supervision of the Department of Justice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. He has?

Mr. LEA. Yes. Not by law, but by the power already existing in the hands of the President to transfer this control to whatever department he sees fit.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That ought to be done.

Mr. LEA. There is another point that I wish to call to the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. I am in harmony with the theory he advances, but there is a condition in Panama where we ought to try to produce a more wholesome situation.

One phase of it has been this one court of important jurisdiction in the zone has been under a suspicion that he has been under the domination of the governor. That is not so true now as under different officers in earlier years. We have a large group of laborers, and they are the principal persons affected so far as American citizens are concerned; and I am convinced from what I have learned of the situation that it is important to make that court just as respectable as we can, and one way to do it is to relieve him from the charge of arbitrary rulings by leaving the way open for disappointed litigants to go to the circuit court in the United States. This is an isolated court, with the danger of concentrated and arbitrary use of power. In this one case I think we ought to give a liberal right of appeal, although I would not be in favor of an equally liberal right in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to present a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. After all this discussion goes on, which may take hours, are all the bills going to be voted upon as one, or do they have to be taken up separately?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are on the Consent Calendar, and as each bill is called any Member has the right to object to its consideration. The bills will have to be taken up singly and individually in their order. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the time of the gentleman from California be extended for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to consume time, but I think this discussion will save much time in the consideration of the remaining bills.

Mr. STAFFORD. I note the amendment found on page 9 of the report which authorizes the President to appoint a special district judge in case of the incapacity of the sitting district judge, and which authorizes the special district judge to receive the same rate of compensation and same mileage and per diem as that paid to the district judge. What is encompassed in that "same mileage and per diem" provided for in this amendment? Under existing practice I believe the district judge when he goes outside of his home district receives an allowance of $10 per day and perhaps mileage allowance. Is it the purpose to authorize this special district judge to have certain mileage allowance to go from his home, say, in New York City, down to the Canal Zone, stay there a couple of weeks, and receive $10 a day during his absence from New York City? Is the Canal Zone going to be a mecca for judges to rest while the permanent district judge is taking a vacation in the Temperate Zone?

Mr. LEA. I am sorry, but I can not tell the gentleman the amount of the fee. I know the general circumstances. The law gives the present judge a vacation of 60 days each year, and the necessity for this provision is to cover that lapse due to the absence of the present judge. The present judge has been taking this vacation without substituting other judges in recent years, as I understand it.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Outside of additional judicial machinery, is there much new substantive law throughout all of these bills or is it merely a codification of the present law?

Mr. LEA. It is mostly a revision, and it involves routine matters almost entirely, although some of them are important. This legislation is substantially routine. Everybody down there who is interested—the governor, the committee of eight, the revision committee, the bar association, and the labor organizations—have all agreed, notwithstanding that some of them do not get all they want in these bills, that they desire that they go through rather than have delay.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Are there any new additional blue laws?

Mr. LEA. No. We have followed the general policy of eliminating the minimum sentence, placing a maximum, and leaving the penalty to the discretion of the judge within the maximum limit.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The district judge, United States marshal, and the district attorney are all appointed by the President, the same as they are in the States?

Mr. LEA. They are under this plan.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Is the salary the same for the Canal Zone as for those same officers in the district courts here?

Mr. LEA. No; the salaries are fixed by the President.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Not fixed by the act?

Mr. LEA. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To amend sections 7, 8, and 9 of the Panama Canal act, as amended

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That the Governor of the Panama Canal shall, in connection with the operation of such canal, have official control and jurisdiction over the Canal Zone and shall perform all duties in connection with the civil government of the Canal Zone, which is to be held, treated, and governed as an adjunct of such Panama Canal. Unless in this act otherwise provided, all existing laws of the Canal Zone referring to the civil governor or the civil administration of the Canal Zone shall be applicable to the Governor of the Panama Canal, who shall perform all such executive and administrative duties required by existing law.

"The President is authorized to determine or cause to be determined what towns shall exist in the Canal Zone, and subdivide and from time to time resubdivide said Canal Zone into subdivisions, to be designated by name or number, so that there shall be situated one town in each subdivision, and the boundaries of each subdivision shall be clearly defined.

"In each town there shall be a magistrate's court with exclusive original jurisdiction coextensive with the subdivision in which it is situated of all civil cases in which the principal sum claimed does not exceed $300, and all criminal cases wherein the punishment that may be imposed shall not exceed a fine of $100, or imprisonment for 30 days, or both, and all actions involving the forcible entry and detainer of real estate.

"Such magistrates' courts shall also hold preliminary hearings in all charges of felony and in charges of misdemeanor in which the punishment that may be imposed is beyond the jurisdiction herein granted to the magistrates' courts, where such charges of felony or misdemeanor are begun by complaint filed in such magistrates' courts, and commit or bail in bailable cases to the district court.

"A sufficient number of magistrates and constables, who must be citizens of the United States, and other employees necessary to conduct the business of such courts, shall be appointed by the President or by his authority for terms of four years and until their successors are appointed and qualified, and the compensation of such persons shall be fixed by the President, or by his authority.

"Before assuming office the magistrates and constables shall take and subscribe on oath of office before a notary public of the Canal Zone to the effect that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their respective offices.

"The rules governing said courts and prescribing the duties of said magistrates and constables, oaths, and bonds, the times and places of holding such courts, the disposition of fines, costs, and forfeitures shall be established by order of the President.

"The Governor may grant pardons and reprieves and remit fines and forfeitures for offenses against the laws of the Canal Zone and reprieves for offenses against the laws of the United States until the decision of the President is made known thereon.

"The Governor of the Panama Canal shall appoint all notaries public, prescribe their powers and duties, their official seal, and the fees to be charged and collected by them.

"Appeals from the judgments and rulings of the magistrates' courts to the district court are authorized in all civil and criminal cases."

With the following committee amendments:

Pages 2 and 3, lines 25 and 1, strike out "where such charges of felony or misdemeanor are begun by complaint filed in such magistrates' courts" and page 3, line 2, after the word "court" insert a semicolon and the following: "but this provision shall not deprive the district attorney of the right to present an information to the court after a defendant has been discharged by a magistrate court."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, to call special attention to the limitation of jurisdiction that the committee has placed upon the magistrate's court, which throws open to district court jurisdiction all cases involving $300 and over.

I may say that back in the early beginnings of my practice we had justice courts in the city of Milwaukee, and grave abuses arose in the trial of cases in justice court which required retrial in the circuit court. Later our legislature, to correct this evil, created a civil court with jurisdiction up to $2,000 that superseded the justice courts.

By this bill the jurisdiction of magistrates is limited to $300. In harmony with that suggestion, you have provided that the original jurisdiction of the district court shall begin with $300. Has the gentleman given any consideration to increasing that amount so that we will not burden the district court with the trial of minor civil cases, which are really justice court cases?

Mr. LEA. We rather increased the jurisdiction of the magistrate's court as to crimes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not considering crimes. I am considering civil cases entirely, where you have prescribed $300 as a maximum.

Mr. LEA. We, of course, did not reduce that amount. That is the existing law.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I was trying to ascertain whether the gentleman's committee gave any consideration to increasing it to $1,000 or $500.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BURTNESS. Of course, in the Panama Canal Zone the civil litigation is comparatively minor. There is not any business down there except business conducted by the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman was not in the Chamber when I was criticizing the proposal that all original jurisdiction which the magistrate court has is subject to review on appeal before the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. BURTNESS. I understand. I was in the Chamber at the time, sitting just in front of the gentleman. The fact is that the civil business is relatively minor as compared with the criminal work down there.

Mr. STAFFORD. But why do we restrict it to $300? Unless the committee desires, I do not wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. LEA. Of course, the magistrate's court is not a court of record, and $300 is a parity to the California law, from which this is probably taken.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the subcommittee which has had this in charge is satisfied, I shall not offer to raise the amount, but I think the amount should be raised to $500, and that could be consistently done without doing injustice to the litigants. You would thereby relieve the district courts of this minor litigation.

Mr. LEA. One hundred or two hundred dollars would not make a great deal of difference. I would not have any objection to the gentleman offering such an amendment if he desires.

Mr. HOCH. I would have no objection to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, then I offer an amendment, on page 2, line 16, to strike out "300" and insert "500."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is that original jurisdiction or appeal jurisdiction?

Mr. STAFFORD. In the magistrate's court they will have jurisdiction up to $500, and in the district court their jurisdiction would be from $500 up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 16, strike out "300" and insert in lieu thereof "500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 8 of the Panama Canal act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. There shall be in the Canal Zone one district court, to be known and designated as the United States District Court for the District of the Canal Zone. There shall be two divisions of said district court, one including Balboa and the other including Cristobal, and the boundaries of the divisions shall be determined by the President.

"There shall be one district judge of the said district; provided that the President may appoint a special district judge to act, when necessary, during the absence of the district judge from the Canal Zone or during any period of disability or disqualification from sickness, or otherwise to discharge his duties, and such special district judge shall receive the same rate of compensation and the same mileage and per diem as is paid to the district judge. Terms of the district court shall be held in the Balboa and Cristobal divisions at such times as the judge may designate by order.

"The rules of said district court shall be prescribed by the district judge.

"The said district court shall have jurisdiction of:

"All criminal cases wherein the punishment that may be imposed exceeds a fine of $100 or 30 days' imprisonment, or both;

"All cases in equity;

"All cases in admiralty;

"All cases of divorce and annulment of marriage;

"All cases at law involving principal sums exceeding $300;

"All appeals from judgments rendered in the magistrates' courts;

"All cases and proceedings involving laws of the United States applicable to the Canal Zone;

"All other matters and proceedings wherein jurisdiction is conferred by the codes of law and procedure of the Canal Zone;

"In addition to the jurisdiction now specifically conferred on it by certain acts of Congress, the said court shall have jurisdiction of offenses under the criminal laws of the United States when such offenses are committed upon the high seas beyond the territorial limits of the Canal Zone, on vessels belonging in whole or in part to the United States, or any citizen thereof or any corporation created by or under the laws of the United States or of any State, Territory, or District thereof, and the offenders are found in the Canal Zone or are brought into the Canal Zone after the commission of the offense: Provided, That this provision shall not be construed to deprive the district courts of the United States of any jurisdiction now provided by law. The procedure and practice in such cases shall be the same as in other criminal cases tried under the laws of the Canal Zone.

"The jurisdiction in admiralty herein conferred upon the district judge and the district court shall be the same as is exercised by the United States district judges and the United States district courts, and the practice and procedure shall be the same as in the United States district courts.

"The judge of the district court shall provide for the selection, summoning, and serving of jurors from among the citizens of the United States subject to jury duty to serve in the division of the district in which such jurors reside, and a jury shall be had in any civil or criminal case originating in the said court on the demand of either party, subject to such limitations as may be contained in any codes which may hereafter be enacted for the Canal Zone. Any citizen of the United States who is employed by the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad Co. within the Canal Zone, and who resides in a residence owned by the Panama Canal or Panama Railroad Co. in territory contiguous to the Canal Zone shall, for the purpose of this subdivision, be deemed to reside in the division nearest his place of residence. Jurors who are employed by the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad Co. shall receive their full pay for time attending court and shall not receive any other compensation from the court for their attendance as jurors. Any juror who is not an employee of the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad Co. shall be allowed a jury fee of $5 per diem during the time of his attendance.

"The said district judge shall receive the same salary as is allowed to United States district judges, and when holding court away from home shall be allowed the same mileage and per diem as is allowed to United States district judges.

"The district judge shall appoint the clerk of the district court and the President may authorize the appointment of such deputy clerk or deputy clerks and clerical assistants to the judge and the clerk as he shall deem necessary; and all of such officials and employees shall receive such compensation as the President shall prescribe.

"When no special judge has been appointed and the district judge is absent from the Canal Zone and is in the United States or any of the Territories or possessions thereof, he may make in the place where he is any order or orders which in his discretion may be necessary, and which could have been made in chambers on the Canal Zone, notwithstanding the fact that such order or orders were made by him out side of the jurisdiction of said court. Any such order so made shall have the same force and effect as though made in chambers on the Canal Zone.

"Whenever any such order is made as provided in this section the judge shall forward the same to the clerk of the court by mail. He shall also communicate the substance of such order to the clerk of the court by radio or other means, and upon the receipt of such message the clerk of the court shall proceed to have the same carried into effect as fully as though such procedure were had on a written order made by the judge in chambers.

"The judge shall make such rules respecting such radio procedure, including the fixing and the payment of the cost thereof, as may, in his discretion, be necessary.

"There shall be a district attorney for the Canal Zone, whose compensation shall be fixed by the President.

"It shall be the duty of the district attorney to conduct all legal proceedings, civil and criminal, for the Government of the United States and for the government of the Canal Zone, and it shall also be his duty to advise the Governor of the Panama Canal, upon request of the latter, on matters pertaining to the office of the governor.

"The district attorney shall be allowed such assistant district attorneys, clerks, and other employees as the President may authorize, and all of such officials and employees shall receive such compensation as the President shall prescribe.

"There shall be a marshal of the said district whose compensation shall be fixed by the President. The said marshal shall be allowed such deputy marshals as the President may authorize, and such deputies shall receive such compensation as the President shall prescribe.

"It shall be the duty of said marshal to attend the district court when sitting and to execute throughout the district all lawful precepts directed to him and issued under the authority of the United States or of the government of the Canal Zone, except process returnable to the magistrates courts; and he shall have power to command all necessary assistance in the execution of his duty. He shall perform such other duties, not inconsistent with law, as may be prescribed from time to time by the President.

"The district judge, the district attorney, and the marshal shall be appointed by the President, as heretofore, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of four years each. They shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices, unless sooner removed by the President, until their successors shall be appointed and qualify in their stead. During their term of office they shall reside within the Canal Zone, and shall be allowed 60 days' leave of absence each year, with pay, under such regulations as the President may from time to time prescribe."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 5, line 11, strike out "$300" and insert "$500."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This would not prevent a civil case involving $500 or $400 going to the district court, would it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The jurisdiction is not changed?

Mr. STAFFORD. Making the minimum jurisdiction of the district court $500 instead of $300.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There are no jury trials in the magistrate court?

Mr. STAFFORD. No.

Mr. LEA. But there would be a right of appeal to the district court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 9 of the Panama Canal act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. The Circuit Court of Appeals of the Fifth Circuit of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, modify, reverse, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the said district court, and to render such judgments as in the opinion of the said appellate court should have been rendered by the trial court in all actions and proceedings in which the Constitution or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States is involved, and in cases in which the value in controversy exceeds $1,000, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or by other competent evidence, and also in criminal cases wherein the punishment that may be imposed is imprisonment for one year or more; and also in civil and criminal cases in which the jurisdiction of the trial court is in issue, but whenever any such case is not otherwise reviewable in said appellate court the question of jurisdiction alone shall be reviewable by said appellate court. And such appellate jurisdiction, subject to the right of review by the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases authorized by law, may be exercised by said Circuit Court of Appeals in the same manner, under the same regulations, and by the same procedure as nearly as practicable as is done in reviewing the final judgments and decrees of the district courts of the United States.

"Cases pending in the said Circuit Court of Appeals at the time of the passage of this act shall not be affected hereby, but the same shall be disposed of as though this act had not been enacted.

"That it shall not be necessary in the district court to exercise separately the law and equity jurisdiction vested in said court."

With the following committee amendment:

Beginning on page 10, line 16, after the word "all," strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, and on page 11 strike out lines 1 and 2 and insert "cases whereof original trial jurisdiction is in the district court."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROHIBITION OF GAMBLING IN THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7498, to amend Act No. 4 of the Isthmian Canal Commission, entitled "An act to prohibit gambling in the Canal Zone, Isthmus of Panama, and to provide for the punishment of violations thereof, and for other purposes," enacted August 22, 1904.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman having the bill in charge whether the committee considered any saving clause as to prosecutions and trials that are pending when this law supersedes the provisions that are stricken out.

Mr. LEA. Not in this bill; but there is a provision to the effect that the present prosecutions can maintain their status.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that has been taken care of.

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Act No. 4 of the Isthmian Canal Commission, enacted August 22, 1904, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Every person who conducts and carries on, or causes to be conducted or carried on, either as owner, agent, or employee, whether for gain or a chance for gain by deducting a percentage either of the profits or of the stake being hazarded, any game of faro, monte, roulette, lansquenet, rouge-et-noir, ronde, tan, fan-tan, studhorse poker, poker, seven-and-a-half, twenty-one, hokey-pokey, or any other game, for money, checks, credit, or other representative of value; and

"Every person who has in his possession or under his control, either as owner, agent, employee, or otherwise, or who permits to be placed, maintained, or kept in any room, space, inclosure, or building owned, leased, or occupied by him, or under his management or control, any slot or card machine, contrivance, appliance, or mechanical device, upon the result of action of which money or other valuable thing is staked or hazarded, and which is operated or played by placing or depositing therein any coins, checks, slugs, or other articles or device, or in any other manner and by means whereof, or as a result of the operation of which, any merchandise, money, representative or articles of value, checks, or token, redeemable in, or exchangeable for, money or any other things of value; and

"Every person who has in his possession or under his control, or who permits to be placed, maintained, or kept in any room, space, or inclosure or building owned, leased, or occupied by him, or under his control or management, any device or game on which any money or other valuable thing is staked or hazarded, and as a result said money or valuable thing may be won or lost;

"Shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, in line 4, strike out the sign and figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the sign and figures "$1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE KIDNAPING OF THE LINDBERGH BABY

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby by inserting an editorial from the St. Louis Star.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an editorial from the St. Louis Star. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the St. Louis Star:

[From the St. Louis Star, March 3, 1932]

THIS MAN-BRED MONSTER

Homer told in the Odyssey how all ships passing the cave of the sea monster Scylla had six oarsmen snatched from the seats and devoured, one by each of the six heads of the awful creature. Chance decided who should be taken. They were victims of the supernatural cruelty that planted such a demon in the sea, and had to give their lives that their fellows might be spared.

The American people have bred a monster—organized crime—and it is taking its toll from those who pass. No power, divine or devilish, planted this monster among us. It is of our own creating, nourishing, and training. Nobody knows who will be its victim tomorrow; to-day it holds the baby son of the Lindberghs in its horrible maw.

This baby was stolen from its cradle just after the Attorney General of the United States, William D. Mitchell, had finished telling a congressional committee that he was opposed to a Federal law making it a crime to transport a kidnaped person across a State line. He was opposed because, he said, it would take special officers to enforce it. Out upon such reasoning! It is false to begin with, and reflects ignorance of this crime itself, of its amazing development, and the means employed to evade pursuit and thwart prosecution. The first and immediate effect of the Lindbergh kidnaping should be to send the Patterson-Cochran antikidnaping bill through Congress.

But what about Scylla itself—the monster, organized crime—which reaches out and takes daily toll in life and property from the people who bred it?

Shall Scylla remain alive to slay and devour?

The damnable crime committed in New Jersey should jolt the American people out of their lethargy and create a fierce and overruling determination to wipe organized crime out of the United States.

How?

By striking at the forces protecting it, chief of which is our legal system

Criminal law in the United States is as out of date as a blunderbuss on a 35,000-ton battleship. A trial is a battle of wits between lawyers trying to obey or evade rules that were has-beens in the days of Queen Elizabeth.

Criminals go into court to-day represented by lawyers who every bar association president knows should be in the penitentiary. Perjury, intimidation of witnesses, and absurd technicalities sanctioned by the courts form the fundamentals of defense in criminal trials; and every attempt at reform is blocked by lawyers.

Crime will rule the United States until racketeering is driven out of the legal profession.

Crime will rule the United States until politicians who protect crime and share its profits are driven out of office.

Crime will rule the United States until the people decide that it shall not.

The Lindbergh baby could have been left unguarded and safe in England, France, Germany, Italy, Yugoslavia, Finland, Russia, Brazil, South Africa, Japan. It would have been safer in the African Congo, Patagonia, or the interior of China than on the outskirts of New York.

There are vast communities in Europe where crime is utterly unknown, where not a single theft occurs from one year's end to the next, where no man living remembers a murder. In all the annals of the American Colonies there is just one recorded instance of highway robbery. To what depths have we sunk!

Poverty, the slums, the deadly perverted training of boys in the streets of our cities, the false heroics of crime fostered by a maudlin civilization, the criminal-training school of the penitentiary—these give birth to crime and nourish it.

But it is the disgraceful system of American jurisprudence that makes it flourish.

Why should lawyers who love justice and truth and honor sit idly by and let their profession be made a hissing and a byword and the law a cloak for thieves? Why should the people tolerate this monstrous anachronism of the law, knowing that it loads them with fear and misery?

Whenever the lawyers in Congress and on the bench and in legislatures and in bar associations say the word, the American legal system will be cut as clean of crime as a surgeon cuts a tumor-ridden body.

When the law no longer furnishes shelter for thieves, thieves will no longer take shelter under it.

When the law offers no aid to rascals, rascals will cease to practice law.

And that will mark the end of the American reign of terror.

Poverty, the street gang, the penitentiary, corrupt politics, the antiquated law, the crooked lawyer—these are the six heads of Scylla, and the last three are within reach of the sword. Strike them off and sear the stump. Organized crime has terrorized this Nation too long.

SUPPRESSION OF LOTTERIES IN THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill (H. R. 7499) to amend Act No. 3 of the Isthmian Canal Commission relating to the suppression of lotteries in the Canal Zone, enacted August 22, 1904.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I call the attention of the gentleman from California to the fact that lotteries are quite an institution in the Republic of Panama. I am sure the gentleman is aware of that.

Mr. LEA. That is true.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The government runs the lottery there if I am not mistaken.

Mr. LEA. That is true.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course, we have banned lotteries in this country for a great many years, but it struck me that the penalties here provided are rather high, considering the habits of the people down there and the proximity of the Republic of Panama, where, I believe, there is only the division of a street, on one side being the Republic of Panama and on the other side the Canal Zone. Are not the penalties provided here too high?

Mr. LEA. We have reduced these penalties. We have tried to harmonize these with those provided in the other antigambling laws. The gentleman will notice we have reduced this from $5,000 to $1,000 as the maximum fine. There is very little trouble in the zone about lotteries, because they have got to buy their lottery tickets, if they buy them at all, in the Republic of Panama.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But if lottery tickets are found in their possession within the Canal Zone, that would be a crime under this law.

Mr. LEA. Exactly; but, as I have said, there is very little trouble in the Canal Zone, and we have harmonized the penalties and reduced the penalties.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The intent is to prevent the establishment of a lottery system in the zone?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the penalties here fixed are simply the maximum penalties?

Mr. LEA. That is all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of Act Canal Commission No. 3, August 22, 1904, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"If any person or persons shall establish, set on foot, carry on, promote, make, or draw, publicly or privately, within said Canal Zone, any lottery, policy-lottery, gift concert, or similar enterprise of any description, by whatever name, style, or title the same may be designated or known; or if any person or persons shall by such ways and means expose, set aside or offer for sale any house or houses, lands or real estate, or any goods or chattels, cash or written evidences of debt, or certificates of claims, or any thing or things of value or tokens thereof whatever; every person so offending shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000 or imprisoned in the penitentiary not to exceed five years, or both, for the first offense; and for the second or subsequent offense by both fine and imprisonment."

SEC. 2. That section 4 of Act Canal Commission No. 3, August 22, 1904, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. If any person or persons within said Canal Zone, shall vend, sell, barter, or dispose of any lottery ticket, or tickets, order or orders, device or devices, of any kind, for, or representing any number of shares, or any interest in any lottery, or scheme of chance, or shall be concerned in any wise in any lottery or scheme of chance, by acting as owner or agent in said Canal Zone, for or on behalf of any lottery or scheme of chance, to be drawn, paid, or carried on, either outside of or within said Canal Zone, every such person shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding two years, or both, at the discretion of the court, and for the second or subsequent offense be punished by both fine and imprisonment."

SEC. 3. That section 5 of Act Canal Commission No. 3, August 22, 1904, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. Whoever shall by printing, writing, or in any other way publish an account of any lottery, or scheme of chance of any kind or description to be carried on, held, or drawn, either outside of or within the said Canal Zone, stating when or where any lottery or scheme of chance by whatever name, style, or title the same may be denominated or known, is to be drawn, for the prizes therein or any of them, or any information in relation to said drawing or prizes or any of them, of the price of the ticket, show, or chance therein, or where any ticket may be obtained or in any way aiding or assisting in the same, or in anywise giving publicity to such lottery or scheme of chance, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding two years, or both, at the discretion of the court."

SEC. 4. That section 6 of Act Canal Commission No. 3, August 22, 1904, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. Whoever shall cause to be brought within the said Canal Zone, from abroad, for the purpose of disposing of the same, or depositing the same therein, for the purpose of having them disposed of within said Canal Zone, any papers, certificates, or instruments purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, policy-lottery, gift concert, or other enterprise offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance; or shall cause any advertisement of any such lottery, policy-lottery, gift concert, or other enterprise offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance to be brought within the said Canal Zone, or deposited in or circulated in said Canal Zone, shall be punished for the first offense by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment in the penitentiary not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court; and for the second and subsequent offenses, by both fine and imprisonment."

SEC. 5. That sections 7, 8, and 9 of Act Canal Commission No. 3, August 22, 1904, be, and they are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 6. That section 10 of Act Canal Commission No. 3, August 22, 1904, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. The governor may issue a permit for conducting a raffle or gift enterprise whenever it shall appear to him after proper investigation that the gross proceeds of said enterprise are to be used for charitable purposes, and when such permit shall have been issued by the governor the preceding sections of this act shall not apply."

With the following committee amendments:

On page 2, line 4, after the word "things," insert the word "of."

Page 2, line 6, strike out the words "the penitentiary" and insert the word "jail."

Page 2, line 6, at the end of the line, strike out the words "five years" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one year."

In line 22, strike out the words "the penitentiary" and insert the word "jail."

In line 23, strike out the words "two years" and insert the words "one year."

At the end of line 16, strike out the words "the penitentiary" and insert the word "jail."

Page 3, line 17, strike out the words "two years" and insert the words "one year."

Page 4, line 10, strike out "$500" and insert "$1,000."

Page 4, line 10, strike out the words "the penitentiary" and insert the word "jail."

Page 4, line 11, strike out the words "two years" and insert the words "one year."

Page 4, line 12, strike out the word "and" and insert the word "for."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PROHIBITION OF FIGHTS BETWEEN BULLS, DOGS, OR COCKS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7500, to amend an Executive order promulgated August 4, 1911, prohibiting promotion of fights between bulls, dogs, or cocks.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the Executive order of August 4, 1911, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. Any person who sets on foot, instigates, promotes, or carries on any fights between cocks or other birds, or any dog fight, or bull fight, or fight between other animals; or who does any act as assistant, umpire, or principal in furtherance of any fight between any such animals shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $50 or by imprisonment in jail not to exceed 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PREVENTION OF FIRE-HUNTING AT NIGHT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7501, to prevent, in the Canal Zone, fire-hunting at night and hunting by means of a spring or trap, and to repeal the Executive orders of September 8, 1909, and January 27, 1914.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are several bills on the calendar following this one which are similar in character. The purpose of enacting them into law is because of the invalidity of certain Executive orders.

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That being so, why does not the gentleman provide in these bills for the repeal of the Executive orders if the orders were invalid?

Mr. LEA. We are enacting substantive law the same as the presidential orders. We repeal the presidential orders and then the law becomes absolute.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the order was invalid because of lack of power to issue the order.

Mr. LEA. It is being more or less observed, but in many instances it is the opinion of the lawyers that the penalties prescribed are illegal.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It seems to me if the purpose of the bill is to write a proper method law, as we are now doing by the enactment of these bills into law, because of the doubtful validity of an Executive order, the Executive order should not be repealed in this manner if it were null and void ab initio.

Mr. HOCH. If the gentleman will yield, it seems to me as long as there is any doubt about the Executive order, it is a good thing to get it off the books, so there will not be any doubt about it. If you were to repeal it ab initio, of course, that would raise a very serious question, and I am sure you would not want to do that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; I would not refer to them in the bill at all. I would strike out section 2.

Mr. HOCH. Then you would substitute this for an Executive order which may or may not be invalid. There is some doubt about the matter in some cases. Why should we not repeal this doubtful order so it will no longer be around to clutter up the books?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Especially, if proceedings have been had under it.

Mr. LEA. When the codifier came along he would not kick it out on the ground it was unconstitutional, but would embody it in the codification.

Mr. HASTINGS. It can not possibly do any harm, anyway.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; it can not do any harm.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every person who shall hunt at night, between the hours of sunset and sunrise, with the aid or use of a lantern, torch, bonfire, or other artificial light, or who shall hunt by the use of a gun or other firearm intended to be discharged by any animal or bird, by means of a spring or trap, or other similar mechanical device, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

The penalties imposed by this act shall be in addition to the punishments authorized by the law against carrying arms without a permit.

SEC. 2. That the Executive order of September 8, 1909, amending section 454 of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone, and the Executive order of January 27, 1914, numbered 1884, be, and they are hereby, repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

USE OF ARMS IN THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7502, to regulate the carrying and keeping of arms in the Canal Zone.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to regulate the carrying and keeping of arms in the Canal Zone

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for anyone to carry on or about his person any firearm or any dirk, dagger, or other knife, or other weapon, manufactured or sold for the purpose of offense or defense, or any slung shot, air gun, sword cane, blackjack, or any knuckles made of metal or other hard substance.

SEC. 2. That the preceding section shall not apply to a person engaged in the military or naval service of the United States, or as a peace officer or officer authorized to execute judicial process of the United States or the Canal Zone, or in carrying mail or in the collection or custody of funds of the United States or the Canal Zone, while such officers or persons are engaged in the performance of their respective duties; nor to a member of a gun or pistol club organized for the promotion of target practice, a certified copy of the constitution and by-laws of which have been approved by the Governor of the Panama Canal and filed with the chief of the police and fire division, when such member is going to or from a target range or is engaged in practice at the target range. A certificate of membership in the gun or pistol club shall be issued by the organization and approved by the chief of police and fire division, which shall entitle the holder to carry firearms as is provided in this section.

Neither shall the preceding section apply to any person authorized to have or carry arms by permit granted under the terms of this act.

SEC. 3. That the Governor of the Panama Canal may authorize the granting of permits to have and carry arms, as follows:

1. To hunt upon the public lands of the Canal Zone or upon lands occupied by private persons, when authorized by the latter.

2. To have arms in residences, offices, business places, and plantations and to watchmen or overseers of plantations, factories, warehouses, docks, or piers. Applications for such permits shall be made to the Governor of the Panama Canal, and shall contain the full name, residence, and occupation of the applicant; and if the applicant is a minor it shall not be granted without the consent of his parent or guardian; but no permit shall be granted to a minor under 15 years of age.

3. To carry arms in private aircraft for hunting or protection of crew or cargo.

SEC. 4. That when an application is granted by the governor for a permit to hunt, he shall indorse his approval thereon and file the application, and he shall cause a permit to be issued to the applicant, upon his payment of a fee of $1.

Hunting permits issued by virtue of this act will allow the holder thereof to have, carry, and use firearms in the area or areas prescribed by the Governor of the Panama Canal, and on the conditions imposed by him under such general or special rules and regulations as he may issue from time to time. And the governor is hereby empowered to designate the area or areas of the Canal Zone in which hunting is permitted, and the class of arms that may be used in hunting in such areas; and no hunting shall be allowed outside of the areas so designated by him. And the Governor of the Panama Canal may, in such general or special rules and regulations, impose such other conditions in respect to hunting as he may deem necessary in the interests of public order and to prevent injury to persons or property.

A permit granted under this section shall run for the fiscal year in which it is issued, and it may be revoked at any time for cause by the Governor of the Panama Canal.

SEC. 5. That permits heretofore issued by authority of law, to have and use firearms, shall not be affected by this act, but such permit shall continue in force until the expiration of the period for which they were issued.

SEC. 6. That anyone not authorized by this act, who carries on or about his person any of the prohibited arms mentioned in section 1 of this act, or who hunts or engages in hunting without first obtaining the permit provided for in this act, or who after obtaining such permit engages in hunting in violation of the provisions of this act or any rule or regulation established by the governor hereunder, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 7. That penalties for the infringement of this act shall be in addition to such punishment as may be imposed upon the offending person for any other offense that he may have committed in connection with the carrying or using of arms in violation of this act.

SEC. 8. That sections 449 to 460 of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone, and the Executive orders of December 1, 1909, November 3, 1911, November 7, 1913, and March 6, 1920, and all other laws in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LABORERS OF THE ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION AND THE PANAMA RAILROAD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7503, to repeal the Executive order of November 23, 1909, making the enticing of laborers from the Isthmian Canal Commission or the Panama Railroad a misdemeanor.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Executive order of November 23, 1909, making the enticing of laborers from the Isthmian Canal Commission or the Panama Railroad a misdemeanor be, and it is hereby, repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE IN THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7504, to provide for the extradition of fugitives from the justice of the Republic of Panama who seek refuge in the Canal Zone.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of inquiring how general is the practice of fugitives from justice from the Republic of Panama seeking refuge in the Canal Zone.

Mr. LEA. It is common.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there no existing procedure whereby the Canal Zone authorities can return the fugitives from justice from the Republic to its authorities?

Mr. LEA. It is the common practice to return them, but much doubt has been raised as to whether or not the law justifies the practice. So this bill is to regulate what is already being done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to provide for the extradition of fugitives from justice of the Republic of Panama who seek refuge in the Canal Zone

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who have been condemned, prosecuted, or accused before the courts of the Republic of Panama as authors or accomplices of crimes, transgressions, or offenses against the laws of said Republic, who seek refuge in the Canal Zone, shall be, upon apprehension, taken into custody by the authorities of the Canal Zone and delivered to the authorities of the Republic of Panama, upon the demand of the Government of that Republic and compliance with the procedure hereinafter prescribed.

SEC. 2. That the government of the Canal Zone is at liberty to decline compliance with a demand of the Government of the Republic of Panama for the arrest and delivery to the authorities of said Republic of a fugitive from the justice of the Republic of Panama when said fugitive is a citizen of the United States. The discretion hereby reserved shall be exercised by the Governor of the Panama Canal.

SEC. 3. If the person whose arrest and delivery is demanded should be accused of or under sentence for any crime, transgression, or offense committed in the Canal Zone, he shall not be delivered to the authorities of the Republic of Panama until he has been acquitted, pardoned, or undergone his sentence pursuant to the provisions of the laws of the Canal Zone.

SEC. 4. If, in the course of the proceedings in the courts of the Republic of Panama in the case to which the arrest and delivery appertain, it should appear that probable cause exists for believing the delinquent guilty of another and graver offense against the laws of the Republic of Panama than that which gave rise to the request for his apprehension and delivery, the Government of that Republic may prosecute said fugitive for such other offense after notice to that effect to the government of the Canal Zone.

SEC. 5. The demand for the arrest and delivery of a fugitive from the justice of the Republic of Panama, pursuant to the terms of this act, will be complied with when made in writing and signed by the Secretary of Foreign Relations of the Republic of Panama, or by his direction, and presented to the Governor of the Panama Canal. If the demand is for a condemned and fugitive criminal, it must be accompanied by a duly certified copy of sentence pronounced by a court of competent jurisdiction, and, as far as possible, a description of the fugitive sought to be reclaimed.

SEC. 6. In case of urgency, where there are reasonable grounds for fearing that the fugitive may avoid apprehension, his detention may be asked for by telegraph. The arrest and detention shall be accomplished in the manner and by the officials prescribed by the laws of the Canal Zone, and detentions authorized by this act shall not continue longer than 15 days, during which the procedure for securing the delivery of said fugitive to the authorities of the Republic of Panama shall be completed.

SEC. 7. For the purpose of accomplishing the delivery of the fugitives apprehended and delivered in pursuance of this act the Republic of Panama may send its agent or agents duly authorized to receive said fugitive into the territory of the Canal Zone, but said agent's action and authority shall be limited to receiving such fugitive at the point of departure for return to the Republic of Panama and, at the moment of departure and thenceforth, to exercise the necessary vigilance and restraint to prevent escape of the person in custody.

SEC. 8. It is hereby made the duty of the authorities of the Canal Zone on the line of transit to provide the person or persons charged with the conveyance of such fugitives so delivered with all the means necessary to prevent escape and to remove all unlawful obstacles that may hinder or delay the return of such fugitives to the territory of the Republic of Panama.

SEC. 9. All papers and other objects found in the possession of the fugitive at the time of his detention that refer to the crime, transgression, or offense of which the fugitive is accused or convicted shall be delivered to the Government of the Republic of Panama. These papers and objects must be restored after the conclusion of the case if there are third parties who assert a right to or over them. The authorities of the government of the Canal Zone may provisionally retain said objects and papers so long as they are required for use as evidence in some other case pending or contemplated in the courts of the Canal Zone, whether such case be related or not to the case wherein the demand for the apprehension and return of the fugitive originated.

SEC. 10. The expense of capture, detention, and transportation of a fugitive from the justice of the Republic of Panama shall be paid by that Republic, but such expenses shall not include compensation for the services of the judiciary, military, or police authorities of the government of the Canal Zone.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 4, lines 4 and 5, strike out the word "exercise" and substitute therefor the word "exercising," and at the end of line 5 insert the word "the" so that the last clause of section 7 will read "to exercising the necessary vigilance and restraint to prevent the escape of the person in custody."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF BIRDS IN THEIR NESTS

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7505, to provide for the protection of birds in their nests in the Canal Zone.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Panama Canal is hereby empowered and directed to make suitable regulations, from time to time, for the protection of birds and their nests within the Canal Zone, and to prescribe the form and manner in which birds may be hunted therein and the kinds of birds that may be hunted and that shall not be molested.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to hunt, trap, capture, willfully disturb, or kill any bird of any kind whatever, or to take the eggs of any bird, within the Canal Zone, except in the form and manner permitted by the regulations provided for by this act.

SEC. 3. That a violation of any of the regulations established under this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment in jail for not more than 30 days for each offense.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, section 1 provides "that the Governor of the Panama Canal is hereby empowered and directed to make suitable regulations from time to time." It occurs to me that the law should direct the publication of suitable regulations. I think you should provide for the publication, otherwise there might possibly be a governor who would make regulations and have no publication at all—perhaps make nothing but typewritten copies, and the public would not have the information.

Mr. LEA. I see no objection to it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think all authority for making regulations should also contain a provision for publication.

Mr. THATCHER. I think that is a good suggestion, and it should be made in the Canal Zone Record.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would that be a justification for the continuance of the Record?

Mr. THATCHER. I do not know about that. It would be one justification.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I move the following amendment: On page 1, line 4, after the word "make" insert "and publish."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "make" insert "and publish."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPEAL OF AN ORDINANCE ENACTED BY THE ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION, AUGUST 5, 1911

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7506, to repeal an ordinance enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission, August 5, 1911, and approved by the Secretary of War August 22, 1911, establishing market regulations for the Canal Zone.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the ordinance enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission on August 5, 1911, and approved by the Secretary of War on August 22, 1911, establishing market regulations for the Canal Zone be, and it is hereby, repealed.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RADIO EQUIPMENT ON OCEAN-GOING VESSELS

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7507, to regulate radio equipment on ocean-going vessels using the ports of the Canal Zone.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS. Reserving the right to object, this bill provides that ocean-going vessels carrying 50 or more persons shall be equipped with an efficient apparatus for radio communication. I want to ask why it was provided in the bill that the regulations shall not apply to vessels plying between the Canal Zone ports and ports less than 200 miles therefrom?

Mr. LEA. The object was to accommodate the ocean-going traffic.

Mr. DAVIS. But the bill does not apply to any vessel except the ocean-going vessels, and, of course, the requirement for a radio is for safety of life. It occurs to me that there would be good reason for requiring it on a vessel that goes 100 or 200 miles from the zone.

Mr. LEA. Perhaps the real reason is that the existing law and the practice does not apply to those vessels.

Mr. DAVIS. It looks like it might be in the interest of some line. I wanted to know if the gentleman knew why the exception was put in?

Mr. LEA. No; I do not.

Mr. DAVIS. A vessel could get into distress in a much less distance than 200 miles from the zone.

Mr. LEA. When it went into effect it was not intended to cover vessels in the local traffic.

Mr. DAVIS. Any traffic that goes 200 miles away from the Canal Zone would be into other countries.

Mr. LEA. They would be exempt.

Mr. DAVIS. And the one that goes 100 or 200 miles would necessarily go to foreign countries.

Mr. LEA. Being engaged in the problem of revision only, we did not take up the question the gentleman suggests. We accepted the law as it is.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall not object to the bill, but I wondered why the distinction was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any ocean-going vessel carrying 50 or more persons, including passengers and crew, to leave or attempt to leave any port of the Canal Zone unless such vessel shall be equipped with an efficient apparatus for radio communication, in good working order, in charge of a person skilled in the use of such apparatus, which apparatus shall be capable of transmitting and receiving messages for a distance of at least 100 miles, night or day. This requirement shall not apply to vessels merely transiting the canal or to vessels plying between Canal Zone ports and ports less than 200 miles therefrom.

SEC. 2. That any vessel leaving or attempting to leave a Canal Zone port not equipped as required by section 1 of this act shall be liable to a fine not to exceed $5,000, and each such departure or attempted departure shall constitute a separate offense. Fines shall be recovered in the district court of the Canal Zone, and the amount so recovered shall be a lien upon such vessel, and it may be seized and sold to satisfy same, as well as all costs of the court proceedings.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

INSPECTION OF VESSELS NAVIGATING CANAL ZONE WATERS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7508) to provide for the inspection of vessels navigating Canal Zone waters.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Why is it that in section 9 it is provided that vessels under 65 feet in length, before carrying passengers for hire in the Canal Zone waters, shall obtain a certificate from the Canal Zone authorities to engage in this business, and no such requirement is made as to vessels in excess of 65 feet in length?

Mr. LEA. I could not tell you why. This is the present law.

Mr. DAVIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but it is not the present Executive order. The present Executive order in section 9 provides that vessels before carrying passengers for hire in the Canal Zone waters shall obtain a certificate from Canal Zone authorities engaged in this business. This insertion of the limitation to "vessels under 65 feet in length" is an amendment to existing regulations offered by the committee in this bill.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman will find that the present law uses the word "small" before the word "vessels." The only change is to strike out the word "small" and to insert the words "under 65 feet in length." That particular paragraph in the present law is evidently enacted to cover only small vessels.

Mr. DAVIS. Why is it that a certificate is required only as to small vessels carrying passengers. There would naturally be much more reason for a vessel carrying a larger number of passengers being required to obtain a certificate than there would for a small one. For instance, it is a matter of safety of life and it is provided in the bill that such certificate shall specify the number of passengers and life preservers and fire-fighting apparatus which the vessel may carry, and that such vessel shall be subject to annual inspection and the certificate referred to shall be granted for one year only, and so forth. I can not conceive of any good reason why such a certificate should be required as to small vessels under 65 feet in length and not be required as to larger vessels that would doubtless carry a larger number of passengers and perhaps go a longer distance out to sea.

Mr. LEA. I was not of the impression that that is the fact. Of course, one main object of this is to provide for this inspection. Frequently vessels passing through the canal want this inspection to protect their insurance. The particular restriction the gentleman refers to is as to small vessels that would not be included in the transoceanic shipments.

Mr. HOCH. And reading the rest of the law, it provides very broad powers with reference to all vessels.

Mr. DAVIS. But there are so many exceptions that it is difficult to determine to just what particular vessels they apply to. I just noted that distinction, which it occurred to me was without merit.

Mr. HOCH. I take it there is no complaint about that, or else that question would have been raised; and I have no doubt as a matter of fact that all vessels do have to meet those requirements.

Mr. THATCHER. All vessels have to be inspected in the Canal Zone waters.

Mr. LEA. Certain exceptions are provided in section 1 and section 5 covers other vessels. Those the gentleman refers to include small vessels.

Mr. DAVIS. But section 1 says all vessels navigating the waters of the Canal Zone, except public vessels of all nations and private vessels merely transiting the canal, shall be subject to annual inspection of hulls, boilers, machinery, equipment, and passenger accommodations. This section 9 is a different proposition. It deals with the subject of life preservers and fire-fighting apparatus. It may be that there are no vessels over 65 feet in length, but if there are it should certainly apply to them.

Mr. LEA. Does not section 5 cover that?

Mr. DAVIS. Of course, I have no interest in this matter except the same interest that the gentleman has in this legislation.

We all know from experience that it frequently happens that somebody, perhaps without knowledge of the members of committees, will succeed in some way in having some exception made in the interest of some class. I do not know, regardless of any provisions in these other sections, why that should not apply to all ships.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman from Tennessee observed the existing regulations as found on page 3 of the report? As I read the proposed section 9, it seeks to give control to the canal authorities over pleasure craft, which operate perhaps on Gatun Lake, that are not required to have their hulls and boilers inspected before they are privileged to operate if they are under 65 feet in length. They must obtain a certificate because they are carrying passengers, and the real purpose is to give the canal authorities some jurisdiction over that character of motor-propelled vessel so that it will not ply ad libitum on Gatun Lake or through the canal.

Mr. HOCH. As has already been stated, there is no attempt here to change substantive law. Section 9 is precisely the regulation that now exists, except to change the word "small" and insert the words "under 65 feet in length." It is simply a description in order to make it more definite as to what they mean by "small vessels." I confess I do not know why, in this particular section, the same provision should not apply to all vessels, but as a practical matter I have no doubt it does. The committee considering this matter did not attempt to go into any changes in substantive law except where they were called to our attention by those who have been preparing for this codification. That is the reason we did not go into all of those questions which the gentleman raises.

Mr. DAVIS. But Congress is asked to ratify Executive orders, which were doubtless issued by some subordinate official without knowledge of the President, because the President can not give attention to those matters, and reasons for those orders should be looked into. For instance, admittedly under section 9 a vessel 66 feet long would not have to get a certificate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think if the gentleman will examine section 7, he will find that such a vessel would be obliged to have a certificate. "Registered, certificated, and numbered." I read section 7:

> Other than public vessels of the United States or of the Republic of Panama, small vessels propelled in whole or in part by machinery shall be required to be registered, certificated, and numbered, and to display the numbers assigned in a conspicuous place in prescribed form. Such vessels shall not be operated except by an operator holding a license to operate, issued after examination by the board of local inspectors, and approval of such examination by the marine superintendent or such other officer of the Panama Canal as may be designated by the governor.

I am strengthened in my position, expressed a moment ago, that section 9 seeks to cover pleasure craft that are operated perhaps by an outboard motor, that are not required to be operated by a licensed operator, as covered by section 7.

Mr. LEA. These small boats are operated on Gatun Lake and, of course, they pass into the canal. So that there should be a provision covering that class of boats. If we take sections 7 and 5 together, I think we have everything.

Mr. DAVIS. But section 7 specifically excludes vessels of the United States or of the Republic of Panama of any size.

Mr. STAFFORD. Public vessels?

Mr. DAVIS. Public vessels.

Mr. STAFFORD. That does not mean privately owned vessels. That refers to vessels owned by the United States or by the Republic of Panama?

Mr. THATCHER. Owned and operated, such as revenue vessels, men-of-war, cruisers, and vessels of that sort.

Mr. STAFFORD. Vessels attached to a squadron; no matter how large or small.

Mr. DAVIS. Suppose that a vessel 70 feet or 100 feet long wants to operate in the Canal Zone waters—if we adopt this there is nothing to prevent it.

Mr. THATCHER. I think existing law would perhaps cover those larger vessels. That is my impression.

Mr. LEA. Why are they not covered by section 5?

Mr. THATCHER. I think the existing law would cover those larger vessels.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know where it is. It is not in here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That all vessels navigating the waters of the Canal Zone, except public vessels of all nations, and private vessels merely transiting the canal, shall be subject to an annual inspection of hulls, boilers, machinery, equipment, and passenger accommodations; and the governor is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations concerning such inspection, provided that such regulations shall, as nearly as practicable, conform to the laws and regulations governing the Steamboat Inspection Service of the United States.
> SEC. 2. A foreign vessel of a country which has inspection laws approximating those of the United States, having an unexpired certificate of inspection duly issued by the authorities of the said country, shall not be subjected to an inspection other than that necessary to determine if the vessel, boilers, and life-saving equipment are as stated in the certificate of inspection; but no such certificate of inspection shall be accepted as evidence of lawful inspection unless like privileges are granted to vessels of the United States under the laws of the country to which such vessel belongs.
> SEC. 3. When the board of local inspectors of the Panama Canal approves a vessel and its equipment, a certificate of inspection, in triplicate, will be issued by the canal authorities, two copies of which shall be displayed in conspicuous places in the vessel where they are most likely to be observed by passengers and others, and there kept at all times framed under glass.

SEC. 4. Should the board of local inspectors not approve the vessel or its equipment, a certificate of inspection will be refused, and the board of local inspectors will make a statement in writing giving the reason for failure to approve, filing such statement in the records of the board, and giving a copy thereof to the owner, agent, or master of the vessel.

SEC. 5. Any vessel, other than those excepted in section 1 of this act, that navigates the waters of the Canal Zone without having an unexpired certificate of inspection issued by the canal authorities or by the Steamboat Inspection Service of the United States, or an unexpired certificate accepted by the canal authorities under section 2 of this act, shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $1,000; and whenever any passenger is received on board a vessel not having certified copies of the certificate of inspection placed and kept as required by section 3 of this act, or whenever passengers are received on board a vessel in excess of the number authorized by said certificates of inspection, such vessel shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $100 for each passenger so received. Fines shall be recovered in the district court of the Canal Zone, and the amount so recovered shall be a lien upon such vessel, and it may be seized and sold to satisfy same, as well as the costs of the court proceedings.

SEC. 6. In case a vessel holding an unexpired certificate issued by the canal authorities shall change its condition as to hull, boilers, machinery, equipment, or accommodations for passengers in such manner as not to conform to the regulations under which such certificate was issued, the board of local inspectors is authorized to make an inspection and to recommend revocation of the certificate of inspection, and upon approval of such recommendation by the marine superintendent, or such other officer of the Panama Canal as may be designated by the governor, a notice of revocation will be issued to the owner, agent, or master of the vessel; and after such notice of revocation the navigating of Canal Zone waters by such vessel shall subject it to the penalty prescribed by section 5 of this act.

SEC. 7. Other than public vessels of the United States or of the Republic of Panama, small vessels propelled in whole or in part by machinery shall be required to be registered, certificated, and numbered, and to display the numbers assigned in a conspicuous place in prescribed form. Such vessels shall not be operated except by an operator holding a license to operate, issued after examination by the board of local inspectors, and approval of such examination by the marine superintendent or such other officer of the Panama Canal as may be designated by the governor.

SEC. 8. Small vessels not propelled in whole or in part by machinery shall be registered and numbered, and when numbers have been assigned they shall be displayed in a conspicuous place in prescribed form.

SEC. 9. Vessels under 65 feet in length, before carrying passengers for hire in the Canal Zone waters, shall obtain a certificate from the Canal Zone authorities to engage in this business, and such certificate shall specify the number of passengers and life preservers and the fire-fighting apparatus which the vessel must carry. Such vessels shall be subject to annual inspection, and the certificate referred to will be granted for one year only. Small vessels carrying passengers without having first obtained a certificate from the canal authorities, or carrying passengers in excess of the number authorized by such certificate, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $100 for each passenger so carried.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "not" and insert in lieu thereof "no."

Page 3, line 12, strike out the word "certificates" and insert in lieu thereof "certificate."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Regarding these various bills, I am wondering why they were not incorporated in a general revision like the penal code or these larger measures that are more comprehensive?

Mr. LEA. The committee this year followed the practice of the committee in the last Congress. These same bills were reported in the same general way last year. We accepted that same program.

Mr. THATCHER. It seems to me it would be a more convenient method if they had all been included in a single compilation.

Mr. LEA. There was room for argument about that, but we adopted this program, and I think now it is the best way available.

Mr. THATCHER. Of course, they will be ultimately published in a single volume so that they can all be included in one cover.

Mr. LEA. Yes; they will all be codified in one general uniform volume number.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZATION FOR CERTAIN OFFICIALS OF THE CANAL ZONE TO ADMINISTER OATHS

The Clerk called the next bill (H. R. 7509) to authorize certain officials of the Canal Zone to administer oaths and to summon witnesses to testify in matters within the jurisdiction of such officials.

There being no objection, the bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That members of the board of local inspectors, customs officers, quarantine officers, and admeasurers, appointed by the Governor of the Panama Canal, are hereby authorized to administer oaths for the purpose of certifying the correctness of official papers.

SEC. 2. That members of the board of local inspectors, customs officers, quarantine officers, and admeasurers are hereby authorized to summon witnesses to testify in matters within the jurisdiction of said officials, and to require the production of books and papers necessary thereto. The district court of the Canal Zone is hereby authorized to issue processes, at the request of the designated canal officials, to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers, and to punish for contempt of court any who refuse to obey such processes, or who refuse to be sworn or to answer any material or proper question after being duly sworn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

DEPORTATION OF PERSONS FROM THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7510, to punish persons deported from the Canal Zone who return thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when a person returns to the Canal Zone after being deported and is again deportable, I do not see why we ought to feed him and keep him for two years. It seems to me a maximum penalty of six months would serve all purposes and act as much of a deterrent as anything else. I do not see any reason for keeping a man in jail for two years if you are then going to deport him.

Mr. LEA. This permits the deportation of a man who has had a permit to return if for any reason he should not be there.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am talking about his imprisonment.

Mr. LEA. One of the main purposes of the Canal Zone is the protection of the canal as a part of our national defense. If any undesirable characters are found to be there and they have no business there it is better to have far-reaching powers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Perhaps I do not make myself clear. When a man comes back to the zone who has been deported, and it is found he should not be there, you are going to deport him again, and I say what is the use of keeping him in jail for two years when if we should keep him in jail for six months it would serve the same purpose?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is to prevent such a man from coming back the third time. If he comes back a second time and is deported and then comes back a third time it may be that grave suspicion attaches to him and there is ground for belief that he is there for spying purposes. So if you let him go the second time he will come back the third time. If you keep him in jail he will not come back and get the information which he might wish to get for some other country.

Mr. THATCHER. And if you do not have a proper maximum penalty he is apt to come back.

Mr. STAFFORD. The judge may give him a punishment of a day or two; but if he is the wrong kind of a man, he may give him two years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who, after having served a sentence of imprisonment in the Canal Zone and after being deported therefrom, voluntarily returns to the Canal Zone shall be deemed guilty of a felony and punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not more than two years, and upon the completion of his sentence he shall be removed from the Canal Zone in accordance with the laws and orders relating to deportation. A voluntary entry into the Canal Zone for any purpose shall be sufficient to constitute a return to the zone within the meaning of this act: Provided, however, That in a case of necessity the Governor of the Panama Canal, in his discretion, may grant a permit to any such person to return to the Canal Zone temporarily, but should he remain in the Canal Zone after the time specified in the permit he shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act and punished as herein provided.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OPERATION OF STREET-RAILWAY CARS AT CROSSINGS IN THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7511, to regulate the operation of street-railway cars at crossings in the Canal Zone.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say to the gentleman from California that in codifying these laws I think we are putting on a lot of petty regulations and giving them the dignity of law. It seems to me that simple police regulations would accomplish the purposes of this bill.

Mr. LEA. There is no legislative authority there, and whether the law was made by the President or by Congress it would be a part of the law of the Canal Zone, and therefore it is necessary to codify all laws.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. To me codification has always meant the simplification of the laws and getting rid of obsolete and unnecessary laws. It seems to me we are going into small details when by act of Congress we provide that a motorman shall sound his bell.

Mr. LEA. There is no other source of legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for a motorman or any person in control of a street-railway car to run same over or upon any street crossing, road crossing, or street-railway crossing in the Canal Zone at a speed of more 12 miles per hour and without commencing to sound gong, horn, or whistle when at least 100 feet from said crossing, and continuing to sound same until the crossing has been passed.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for a motorman or any person in control of a street-railway car to run same over or upon any railroad crossing in the Canal Zone without bringing the car to a full stop at least 10 feet from nearest rail, and without ascertaining from a view of the railroad track made either by himself or by the conductor that the crossing may be safely passed.

SEC. 3. That a violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100, or imprisonment in jail for not more than 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, at the end of the line, after the word "any," insert the word "other."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF THE PANAMA CANAL ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7512, to amend section 5 of the Panama Canal act.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That that portion of section 5 of the Panama Canal act, approved August 24, 1912, which reads: "The President is authorized to make and from time to time amend regulations governing the operation of the Panama Canal, and the passage and control of vessels through the same or any part thereof, including the locks and approaches thereto, and all rules and regulations affecting pilots and pilotage in the canal or the approaches thereto through the adjacent waters" be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"The President is authorized to make, and from time to time amend, regulations governing the operation of the Panama Canal; the passage and control of vessels through the same or any part thereof, including the locks and approaches thereto; pilots and pilotage in the canal or the approaches thereto through the adjacent waters; the navigation of the harbors and other waters of the Canal Zone, including the inspection of vessels navigating such waters and the licensing of officers of such vessels.

"Any person violating any of the provisions of the rules and regulations established hereunder shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CUSTOMS SERVICE IN THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7515, to provide for the establishment of a customs service in the Canal Zone, and other matters.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Panama Canal shall have control for customs purposes over all articles, including passengers' baggage, introduced into the Canal Zone, and he is authorized to establish rules and regulations governing the entry and importation of goods into said zone, the disposal of goods brought into the Canal Zone in violation of such regulations, and to alter and amend such rules and regulations from time to time.

SEC. 2. That general powers of search, seizure, and arrest are hereby conferred upon customs officers in the Canal Zone, including deputy shipping commissioners and boarding officers when performing customs duties. In the exercise of these powers customs officers are authorized to enter any building, other than dwelling houses, to stop vessels and vehicles, and to search vessels, vehicles, and their contents; and to stop and search persons and any packages carried by them. Such right of entry, stopping, search, seizure, and arrest shall be exercised only when there are reasonable grounds for suspecting violations of the customs rules and regulations authorized hereunder or of the United States applicable in the Canal Zone.

SEC 3. That it shall be unlawful to enter or import, or attempt to enter or import, any articles or merchandise into the Canal Zone until the entry or importation of such articles or merchandise has been approved by the proper officers of the Canal Zone, and that it shall further be unlawful to pass, or attempt to pass, any false, forged, or fraudulent invoice or bill or other paper, for the purpose of securing the entry or importation into the Canal Zone of any articles or merchandise in violation of the rules and regulations to be promulgated in pursuance of the authority contained in the first section of this act, and any article brought into or obtained in the Canal Zone in violation of such regulations may be seized and held, and, unless within a period of 30 days from the date of seizure such articles are entered in conformity to the rules and regulations to be promulgated by the governor, they may be confiscated and disposed of as provided in such rules and regulations. Any person violating the provisions of this section or any of the rules and regulations authorized hereunder shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 4. That if any vessel arriving at the Canal Zone from any port, other than a port in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama, is found to have on board merchandise not manifested, the master of such vessel shall be liable to a penalty equal in amount to the value of the merchandise not manifested, and all such merchandise belonging to or consigned to or for the officers or crew of the vessel shall be forfeited: Provided, however, That such penalty shall not be imposed if it is made to appear to the customs officers, or to the court in which the trial is held, that no part of the cargo has been unloaded, except as accounted for in the master's report, and that the errors and omissions in the manifest were made without fraud or collusion; and in such case the master may be allowed to correct his manifest by means of a postentry. A permit shall not be granted to unload any such merchandise so omitted from the manifest before postentry or addition to report of manifest has been made.

SEC. 5. That if sea stores are found on board of a vessel from any port, other than a port in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama, which are not specified in the list furnished the boarding officer, or if a greater quantity of such articles is found than that specified in such list, or if any of such articles are landed without a permit being first obtained from the customs officer for that purpose, all of such articles omitted from the list or manifest, or so landed, shall be seized and forfeited, and the master of the vessel shall be liable to a penalty treble the value of the articles so omitted or landed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DOMESTIC ANIMALS IN CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7516, in relation to the keeping and impounding of domestic animals in the Canal Zone.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Panama Canal is hereby authorized to make, and from time to time amend, regulations governing the keeping of domestic animals within the Canal Zone, and prescribing where and under what conditions domestic animals may be permitted to be at large, and when, where, and under what conditions such domestic animals shall be confined. Such regulations shall provide for the impounding of animals; the charges to be paid for the impounding and care of such animals, if claimed by the owner; the disposition of unclaimed animals; and the disposition of the proceeds of the sale of such unclaimed animals, if sold.

SEC. 2. Any person violating any provision of the regulations established under section 1 of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished accordingly.

SEC. 3. The ordinance enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission at the one hundred and forty-fifth meeting, July 18, 1908, approved by the Secretary of War August 12, 1908, providing for the muzzling and impounding of dogs, and the ordinance enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission August 5, 1911, approved by the Secretary of War August 22, 1911, providing for the impounding of stray animals, are hereby repealed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. On page 1, line 4, after the word "make," insert the words "and publish." This is the same amendment I offered before.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I think that is a good amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 1, line 4, after the word "make," insert the words "and publish."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSPORTATION OF LIQUORS UNDER SEAL THROUGH THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H. R. 7517, to provide for the transportation of liquors under seal through the Canal Zone.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the difficulty we have been having in the Canal Zone is that vessels go through the canal, stop at either end, and sailors and passengers walk into Panama City where liquor is offefed for sale openly, of course, because it is not against the law in the Republic of Panama. They take it, intending to go to their ships with it, and in passing from one side of the street to the other arrests are made and people are fined. Manifestly, there ought to be some common sense in the administration of law where you have a situation such as we have in the Canal Zone.

Mr. LEA. Of course, to do that you would have to repeal the provision of the Volstead Act that applies to the Canal Zone. All we do here is to permit the liquor to be transported across the canal the same as the present national prohibition act permits it to be transported through the canal and on the railroad.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It seems to me there ought to be some common sense injected into the administration of the law where you have some one walking from the Republic of Panama across the street to one of our own ships or a foreign ship.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York had better be satisfied with what he is getting in this bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am just calling attention to this so as not to make ourselves ridiculous in the eyes of the whole world.

Mr. DYER. The purpose of the entire prohibition law is ridiculous.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 20 of the national prohibition act is hereby amended by adding after the proviso therein the following additional proviso: "And provided further, That this section shall not apply to the transportation of liquor, under seal, to or from points in the Republic of Panama over the highways or waterways of the Canal Zone under regulations to be prescribed by the President, when such liquor is not destined for use or consumption in the Canal Zone."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of lines 7, 8, 9, and 10, on page 1, and insert "in transit to and from points outside of the Canal Zone over the highways or waterways of the Canal Zone under regulations to be prescribed by the President, when such liquor is not destined for use or for consumption or final delivery in the Canal Zone."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRIVILEGES, RULES, AND REGULATIONS FOR CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar (H. R. 7518) to amend an act entitled "An act extending certain privileges of canal employees to other officials on the Canal Zone and authorizing the President to make rules and regulations affecting health, sanitation, quarantine, taxation, public roads, self-propelled vehicles, and police powers on the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, including provision as to certain fees, money orders, and interest deposits," approved August 21, 1916.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would suggest that we let this bill go over. I would like to work out an amendment with the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]. I think the giving of a license to practice medicine and then letting an executive prescribe the requirements is too broad.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, our distinguished colleague from California [Mr. LEA] has to-day passed 21 different bills, all introduced by himself. He had the warm support of every one of his colleagues, on both the Democratic and Republican sides of the aisle, and there was not a vote cast against any of his bills. This indicates the universal popularity of our friend from California in the House of Representatives.

Many of the 21 bills our colleague passed to-day are bills of importance. I could not let that fact pass without saying a few words in commendation of the splendid work our colleague has done.

I came to this House at the same time my good friend from California began serving here—in the Sixty-fifth Congress. I have felt it a distinct honor to have served with him ever since. I believe I speak the sentiment of the House when I say that he has the respect and high regard and friendship of every man in the House. [Applause.]

Coming from the great State on our western coast, he is a native of California, born in that State, attended the public schools in that State, attended Stanford University, and for 10 years he was the able district prosecuting attorney of his State. He was President of the District Attorneys' Association of California, and the remarkable thing about his present service is that he happens to be the only Democrat from California serving in the House of Representatives. That speaks well for him.

I hope he has company from California in the next Congress, without wishing any Republican colleagues from California any harm. [Laughter.]

This will be his twenty-second bill passed to-day if our good friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] does not object to it. Now, there are three other bills on the calendar introduced by our friend from California, which I hope the gentleman will not call up, for some of them are bills of extensive length, one of 550 pages and another of 570 pages.

Mr. LEA. I am afraid the gentleman has broken my resistance. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. There may be some corrections that ought to be made in them, and it will give us a better chance to check up and go over them, if he will not call them up to-day.

Mr. LEA. I have understood that some Members wanted time to look them over.

Mr. THATCHER. I want to say to the gentleman that I concur in that hope, because the bills are so extensive and cover so many subjects that I think we ought to have more time to look them over.

Mr. BLANTON. When one Member can pass 21 bills through the House with the gentleman from New York, Mr. LAGUARDIA, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. STAFFORD, present, he is doing awfully good work in one day. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will not the gentleman let this bill go over?

Mr. LEA. I am willing to let it go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill going over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the next four bills on the calendar be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the next four bills on the calendar be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ACCEPTING THE STATUE OF GEN. JOHN SEVIER

The Clerk read the next resolution on the Consent Calendar, House Concurrent Resolution 14, accepting the statue of Gen. John Sevier, presented by the State of Tennessee, to be placed in Statuary Hall.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the statue of Gen. John Sevier, presented by the State of Tennessee and placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered said State for the contribution of the statue of this eminent man, illustrious for his distinguished service as a pioneer patriot of said State.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of Tennessee.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

SALE OF WRITINGS OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1861) authorizing the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to print and distribute additional sets of the writings of George Washington.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can anyone inform us what the expense involved here is?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think there is no additional expense. I think the original act provided for some $157,975. I do not think there is any additional act.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. There is no additional expense. In fact, it is expected to get the entire amount appropriated back, and more, too.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain just what is the purpose of the change involved in the Senate bill under consideration?

Mr. TILSON. I do not know that I am able to explain it fully, for this is a Senate bill, and I did not see it till it appeared on the Consent Calendar to-day; but as I understand, it was necessary to make the proposed change in the original act in order that the disposition of these sets might be arranged for now and the volumes distributed as fast as they are printed. It is evident that if arrangements for their disposal be made during the bicentennial year it will be better than to wait until they are all printed, which may be three or four years from now, before disposing of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understood the reading of the report, the main purpose is to compel the libraries that under existing law are given the right to purchase sets at $50 to exercise that option by July 1 of this year, so that the commission would know how many copies would be available for distribution while the spirit is running at white heat.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman is correct. Until it is known how many sets will be bought by libraries at $50 per set the commission will not know how many sets are to be sold to the public nor for what price. It is for the purpose of enabling the commission to dispose of the remaining sets now while they may be disposed of to the best advantage.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are there any other changes?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is one more provision under this act that a complete set will be furnished to Members of the present Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. I remember that provision. That is to make it secure that those now serving in Congress will have a complete set even though they are defeated in November of this year.

Mr. TILSON. It is intended to have it so that the Members of the Seventy-second Congress, which is the bicentennial Congress, may be assured of having a complete set of this monumental work.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to enable the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans," approved February 21, 1930, is amended by striking out all preceding the last sentence therein and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington, established by the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in the preparation and completion of plans for the comprehensive observance of that greatest of all historic events, the bicentennial of the birthday of George Washington,' approved December 2, 1924 (hereinafter referred to as the commission), is authorized and directed to prepare, as a congressional memorial to George Washington, a definitive edition of all his essential writings, public and private (excluding the diaries), including personal letters from the original manuscripts or first prints, and the general orders, at a cost not to exceed $56,000 for preparation of the manuscript. Such definitive edition shall be printed and bound at the Government Printing Office and shall be in about the same form as the already published diaries of George Washington and shall consist of 25 volumes, more or less. There shall be 3,000 sets of such edition, 2,000 of which shall be sold by the Superintendent of Documents (1) at a cost of $50 per set for sets sold to such public libraries and institutions and societies of learning as shall order the same not later than July 1, 1932, and (2) the remainder of the 2,000 sets, at a cost equal (together with the receipts from the sets sold to such libraries, institutions, and societies) to the total cost under this section of preparing the manuscript and printing and binding the entire edition. The commission shall, upon the publication of each volume of the remaining 1,000 sets, distribute copies of each such volume as follows: Two each to the President, the library of the Senate, and the library of the House of Representatives; 25 to the Library of Congress; 1 to each member of the Cabinet; 1 each to the Vice President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives; 1 to each Senator, Representative in Congress, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner; 1 each to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives; and 1 to each member and officer of the commission. Every such recipient eligible to receive any volume or volumes of such writings at any time prior to the issue of the final volume (but not later than December 31, 1935) shall be entitled to receive a complete set of such writings. The remaining sets, if any, shall be distributed as the commission directs, including such number of sets as may be necessary for foreign exchange. The usual number for congressional distribution and for depository libraries shall not be printed."

SEC. 2. Section 1 of such act of February 21, 1930, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"The 1,000 extra copies (heretofore privately printed) of the first volume of such writings shall be considered to have been authorized by the commission and the commission may accept a donation of such extra copies for distribution for reviews, advertising, and for such other promotional purposes as it may deem advisable. If the commission shall direct the Superintendent of Documents to sell any such extra copies of the first volume, he shall offer the same for sale at a cost per copy equal to the cost per copy of the first volume as computed under clause (2) of the third sentence of this section. Such extra copies shall be the only copies of any volume of the set distributed or sold separately."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SUPPLIES FOR POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5612) to limit the purchases of the Post Office Department, so far as possible, to articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

WATERTON-GLACIER INTERNATIONAL PEACE PARK

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4752) for establishment of the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, though I shall not do so. I make the reservation of objection simply to put into the RECORD what I think is beautiful language, which is highly complimentary to our distinguished friend and colleague, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT], who sponsors the bill. I think the language ought to be incorporated in the RECORD:

> There is no area in America more replete with beauty of the highest order than that comprised within these two national parks. Tremendous mountains with carved cerques, in which the snows and glaciers of countless ages are encompassed, innumerable lakes, each a gem of its kind, canyons of that character described by Robert Service when he speaks of "canyons plumb full of hush"; these are the describable features of this region. But it has about it something indescribable. Perhaps the imminent presence which broods over it and which is universally felt may best be described as peace.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to inquire of the author of the bill whether the bill in its language is broad enough to provide for the National Government using appropriations for the purpose of improvements in the parks across the border.

Mr. LEAVITT. Oh, no; it is not. It especially provides that this Government shall take care of the Glacier Park side. I have a statement here from the Canadian Government to the effect that they will take similar steps on their side of the border.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not so concerned about what the Canadian Government may do. I am concerned with the phraseology of existing law as to whether it would bear a construction that would authorize the department of public parks or any other activity of the Government to build roads in Canada proper. From my reading of the bill it seemed that one of the main objectives was to build highways on our side as a convenient means to allow tourists from this side to go into Canada.

The gentleman well knows that there is a strong trend in various parts of the country, in New York, for instance, to cross the border into Canada because of the difference in our regulations with respect to liquor control. Should we be a party to providing easy access to those persons on this side who wish to satisfy their thrist, in order to go to Canada, into Alberta? I am serious in this position as to whether we shall accommodate persons with liberal ideas who have a thirst to quench, in order that they may be provided with easy highways to cross the border and indulge their taste in hotels or chalets, or whatever you wish to call them, on the Canadian side of this park.

Mr. LEAVITT. Of course, there is nothing in this bill and nothing in the intention of the bill that leads in that direction at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. But is not the main purpose to provide interconnecting highways?

Mr. LEAVITT. No. The main purpose of this bill, and the only purpose of this bill, grows out of the fact that Glacier National Park in Montana and Waterton Lakes National Park in Canada join to form one great scenic area. They are really one great park; and it is perhaps the supreme place along the border that can be dedicated to commemorate the long-existing friendship and spirit of good will between the two nations.

They are visited by thousands of people, not only the people of these two nations but the people of the world. The character of the country is such that the meaning of this enactment of Congress, which is to be followed by similar action on the part of the Canadian Government, will impress those who go there with this high purpose. It will become a great monument to the idea of international peace and good will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there not going to be some harmony of effort toward improving the highways so as to make it interchangeable?

Mr. LEAVITT. There is already a fine highway that leads from one of these parks to the other.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that popularly traversed?

Mr. LEAVITT. It is. I have always hoped they have gone up to see the magnificent scenery and get inspiration from that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that highway detrimental to the patronage of those who take lodgement in the hotels on the American side of the border?

Mr. LEAVITT. Well, some of the travel may be for that purpose. I very much hoped that this bill, which has had the consideration of the State Department of Canada, would be handled on the floor without any reference to anything except the purposes for which it is intended.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am directing my inquiries in good faith. I did not know there was a highway there.

Mr. LEAVITT. There is a highway.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, if this bill will not militate in any way against hotels located in Glacier Park, I will not interpose any objection.

Mr. LEAVITT. The hotels in the two parks are carried on by exactly the same people, so that the two parks now are handled as one great area. The circulation of the people of our country and the people of the other country is mutual.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the advantage to be gained by this joint venture?

Mr. LEAVITT. Its purpose has been well expressed by a recent editorial of the Manchester Union, printed in New Hampshire, that it is a fine gesture of good will between the two countries.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the real purpose to be attained by this merger of activities?

Mr. LEAVITT. It is a sentimental reason. It grew out of a joint meeting between some Rotarians in Montana and Alberta at Waterton Lakes last summer, in which it appeared to them it would be a fine thing to express the good will that was exemplified in their joint meeting.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it is not intended to have any general supervision by the respective forces of Canada and America?

Mr. LEAVITT. Oh, no. It is to be dedicated by the international Rotarians from all countries who will be on their way to the international meeting at Seattle this coming summer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THATCHER. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object, how much is involved in the Waterton Lakes National Park?

Mr. LEAVITT. Two hundred and twenty square miles in the Waterton Lakes National Park and 1,500 square miles in the Glacier National Park.

Mr. THATCHER. It is the same type of scenery?

Mr. LEAVITT. It is the same type of scenery. It is cut through by the international boundary. Waterton Lakes itself is divided by the international boundary.

Mr. THATCHER. The enactment of this measure will not entail any additional cost on our Government in the matter of administration or maintenance of the glacier section of the park?

Mr. LEAVITT. No, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of permanently commemorating the long-existing relationship of peace and good will existing between the people and Governments of Canada and the United States and upon the enactment by the proper authority of the Canadian Government of a similar provision respecting the Waterton Lakes National Park in the Provinces of Alberta and

British Columbia and upon the proclamation of the President of the United States, who is hereby authorized to issue such a proclamation, the Glacier National Park in the State of Montana shall become a part of an international park to be known as the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park.

SEC. 2. For purposes of administration and support by appropriations that part of the said Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park within the territory of the United States shall be designated as the Glacier National Park section of the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "administration," insert "promotion, development," and in line 9, after the word "Park," strike out "section of the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment to the bill. I am informed that none of this Waterton Lakes National Park is in British Columbia. I wish to offer an amendment, on page 1, line 9, to strike out the words "and British Columbia," and at the beginning of the line change the word "provinces" to "province."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEAVITT: On page 1, line 8, strike out the word "Provinces" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Province"; in line 9, strike out the words "and British Columbia."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky, in view of the fact that there will be but one park on the border where it will represent the feeling of amity and good will that has existed for over 100 years between this country and Great Britain, that the name should merely be the International Peace Park. Has the gentleman given any consideration to such a suggestion rather than the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park?

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not believe that should be done for the reason that the inclusion of the two names rather locates the park. I am sorry the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] is not here, because he could tell the gentleman of some plans that have been made with reference to an international garden and some other proposals in other places. So we would hardly wish to monopolize the name by having it called the International Peace Park, unless that were insisted upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, a recent editorial of the Manchester Union, that great New Hampshire journal, expresses the purposes of this bill and the sentiment behind it. I include that editorial in my remarks, as follows:

ANOTHER FRIENDLY GESTURE

At a time when national jealousies and conflicts are multiplying all over the world, the plan sponsored on both sides of the line to unite the Glacier National Park in Montana with the Waterton Lakes National Park in Canada has a particularly pleasing flavor. It is understood that a bill with this object in view will be introduced during the present session of Congress, to be followed by a similar action at Ottawa. The park will thereafter be a unit so far as its service to the public is concerned, although each country will continue to administer its own section.

This plan symbolizes the unique relation that exists between the American and Canadian peoples. Fundamentally, this relation is based on the fact that the two peoples are, to a large extent, racially similar, that they are free from traditional grudges, and that their economic interests largely supplement each other. Yet despite this fact, delicate issues continually arise which are a cause of estrangement between neighboring states elsewhere, and they are invariably adjusted in an amicable manner. Imagine, if you will, two nations in Europe agreeing to obliterate a section of their national boundary for the purpose of merging two national parks into an international preserve to be equally at the service of the citizens of each.

In the report I made on this measure, under the authority of the Committee on the Public Lands, I said:

The purpose of this bill is to establish an enduring monument of nature to the long-existing relationship of peace and good will between the people and Governments of Canada and the United States. The State Department of the United States Government has communicated with the State Department of the Canadian Government and has received a reply to the effect that this proposal meets with the approval of the Canadian Government and stating that upon enactment of this legislation to designate Glacier National Park as the United States section of the proposed Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park, suitable action will be taken by that Government to designate the Waterton Lakes National Park as the Canadian section.

Glacier National Park in Montana and Waterton Lakes National Park in Alberta and British Columbia, in Canada, are in reality a single great scenic area of unsurpassed glory. So closely are they linked that Waterton Lake, which gives its name to the Canadian park, is divided by the international boundary line.

There is no area in America more replete with beauty of the highest order than that comprised within these two national parks. Tremendous mountains with carved cirques in which the snows and glaciers of countless ages are encompassed, innumerable lakes, each a gem of its kind, canyons of that character described by Robert Service when he speaks of "canyons plumb full of hush"—these are the describable features of this region. But it has about it something indescribable. Perhaps the imminent presence which broods over it and which is universally felt may best be described as peace.

The region itself gave rise to the thought behind the movement to combine these two parks of Canada and the United States into one international park, dedicated as a monument to the peace and good will which have for so many generations existed between the two peoples. It first took form at a meeting of Rotarians from Montana and Alberta held at Waterton Lakes last year.

The measure does not contemplate any change in the handling of the two parks. The one will still be the Waterton Lakes National Park and the other Glacier National Park in so far as administration is concerned. Undoubtedly the working out of road and trail improvements in the future would have more fully in mind the international significance of the two. People of all nations visiting the one would be compelled by the very thought and intention of the proposal to visit the other.

The result would be the creation of a monument to international good will which, it is hoped, will become as eternal as the mountains of the international park.

When this bill was referred to the Secretary of the Interior for report he presented it to the State Department in order to ascertain the attitude of the Canadian Government toward such a proposal. The reply of the Canadian Government is expressed in a letter dated February 12. I present that letter:

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS, CANADA,
Ottawa, February 12, 1932.

No. 21.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your note No. 368 of the January 27, 1932, transmitting a copy of H. R. 4752, a bill for the establishment of the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park, and to state that in the event of the action which is proposed in the bill being taken by the appropriate authorities in the United States, the Canadian Government will have pleasure in recommending the necessary steps to provide that the Waterton Lakes National Park shall become a part of an international park to be known as the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

O. D. SKELTON,
For Secretary of State for External Affairs.

This measure has also the warm approval of our Secretary of the Interior and the director of our national parks.

An international dedication is to take place on June 18. Rotarians from various nations will stop on their way to their international convention in Seattle. This entire movement will give form and substance to an idea of good will among people such as will powerfully influence the thought of mankind.

AMENDMENT TO THE ACT CODIFYING LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9259, to amend section 106 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 187).

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 106 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 187) be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 106. The State of South Dakota shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of South Dakota. The territory embraced on the 1st day of January, 1932, in the counties of Aurora, Beadle, Bon Homme, Brookings, Brule, Charles Mix, Clay, Davison, Douglas, Gregory, Hanson, Hutchinson, Kingsbury, Lake, Lincoln, McCook, Miner, Minnehaha, Moody, Sanborn, Turner, Union, and Yankton, and in the Yankton Indian Reservation, shall constitute the southern division of said district; the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Brown, Campbell, Clark, Codington, Corson, Day, Deuel, Edmunds, Grant, Hamlin, McPherson, Marshall, Roberts, Spink, and Walworth, and in the particular territory set apart and reserved for the use and benefit of the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands of the Sioux Tribe of Indians, and known as the Lake Traverse Reservation, and in that portion of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation lying in South Dakota, shall constitute the northern division; the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Armstrong, Buffalo, Dewey, Faulk, Haakon, Hand, Hughes, Hyde, Jackson, Jerauld, Jones, Lyman, Potter, Stanley, Sully, and Ziebach, and in the Cheyenne River, Lower Brule, and Crow Creek Indian Reservations, shall constitute the central division; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Bennett, Butte, Custer, Fall River, Harding, Lawrence, Meade, Mellette, Pennington, Perkins, Shannon, Todd, Tripp, Washabaugh, and Washington, and in the Rosebud and Pine Ridge Indian Reservations, shall constitute the western division. Terms of the district court for the southern division shall be held at Sioux Falls on the third Tuesday in March and the third Tuesday in October; for the northern division, at Aberdeen on the third Tuesday in April and the second Tuesday in November; for the central division, at Pierre on the second Tuesday in May and the first Tuesday in October; and for the western division, at Deadwood on the first Tuesday in June and the first Tuesday in September. The clerk of the district court shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Sioux Falls, at Pierre, at Aberdeen, and at Deadwood, which shall be kept open for the transaction of the business of the court."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, we have made considerable progress on this calendar to-day. Although there are several bridge bills remaining on the calendar, I make the point of no quorum. I think we have done a good day's work.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his motion?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

WAR POLICIES COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 264)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of Public Resolution No. 98, approved June 27, 1930, creating the War Policies Commission, and Public Resolution No. 2, approved December 21, 1931, extending the time for the submission of its recommendation, I transmit herewith the final recommendations of the commission.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 7, 1932.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. MURPHY (at the request of Mr. CABLE), on account of sickness.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio (at the request of Mr. MOORE of Ohio), indefinitely, on account of illness.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain extracts from the hearings on the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, we hear much criticism in this and the other Chamber of the Congress, and we read much criticism in the press, and hear much in the country at large to the effect that the President and the executive departments of the Government are failing to meet their duty in this hour of stress by reducing more substantially the costs of the Federal Government.

I fully agree with the proposition that the President and the various heads of the governmental activities of the Nation should use every power at their command to effect this reduction. They tell us that they are doing this, but point out that they are limited in their efforts in this direction by the fact that the Congress itself has enacted various measures during the past few years, beginning with the World War period, which provide for the creation of new bureaus, offices, and activities; and that they, the executive officers of the Government, must undertake to carry out the will of Congress by discharging the functions thus imposed upon them and must make application to Congress for the necessary funds for this purpose. This is eminently true, and I wish to emphasize the point.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee I know that the committee from year to year has been cutting below the Budget estimates. During the time in which the Budget law has been in effect, commencing in 1921, several hundred millions of dollars have been cut from the estimates of the Budget by the House Appropriations Committee and by the Congress. Apparently, these cuts have been made without serious impairment of the service and do not constitute any serious criticism of the Budget system. On the whole, the system has worked well, and I believe it to be indispensable. Our committee, however, has gone as far as it believes it could appropriately go if the activities of the various departments of government, and the various boards and bureaus and the multiplied activities authorized by the Congress itself, are to be carried on in an appropriate manner.

I believe that most of these new offices, bureaus, and activities have been created as much through the initiation of the Congress itself as through that of the Chief Executive. In any event, the responsibility is of joint character, and we in Congress are not in a position to criticize the executive branch of the Government in presenting to Congress, from year to year, the estimates for appropriations needed for carrying on the work of the various bureaus, boards, offices, and operations thus created, except to the extent which they may be excessive. I have never been very much in favor of the establishment of independent offices and bureaus. As a general principle, I have thought that added activities of the Government should be placed under the supervision of the various Cabinet officials. However, special pleas in special cases have been sufficient to bring about the establishment of many independent bureaus and governmental activities, with the result that there have been created very expensive administrative overhead and personnel, also much duplication of effort. In the Congress, I may add, we are too much inclined to create, in one session, new boards and bureaus, and then, in the next, to tear them down. If we impose impossible tasks, how can we expect successful results?

If the President should fail or refuse to submit to Congress estimates for appropriations for the various governmental activities, or for any of them perhaps, we would hear, within or without this body, just as violent criticism because of this failure. It must be borne in mind that the President and the Bureau of the Budget submit to Congress no estimate for an appropriation except under authority of legislation enacted by Congress. So we should be perfectly fair in dealing with these matters. Let us not censure the administrative officials for that which we ourselves, the legislative arm, may be responsible.

It is, of course, the duty of the executive branch to submit recommendations for consolidations or abolishments of governmental boards, bureaus, offices, and activities wherever possible. On the other hand, it is the duty of the Congress itself, through its legislative committees, to initiate legislation designed to effect such consolidation or abolish-ments. My own view is and has always been that the executive and legislative branches should fully coordinate and cooperate in this work. The responsibility for this method of retrenchment is, in fact, of a joint character, resting on both the legislative and executive branches. So long as these enactments remain in full force and effect, the President must make the necessary appointments to fill the offices involved and the necessary machinery must be set up through Executive action. Thereupon there must be submitted to the Congress by the President the estimates required for the activities thus authorized.

Certainly, if the Congress did not authorize, and thereby direct, the carrying on of the various activities of government, there would not come to the Congress any estimates therefor. To the extent, of course, that the President approves the legislation involved, he shares in the responsibility for the resulting expenditures. So much for this phase of the matter.

I very much doubt the wisdom of vertical or lump-sum cuts in the appropriation bills. I believe that every cut should be based on thoughtful consideration and addressed to specific items, so that the absolutely necessary functions of government may not be seriously crippled or impaired. The subject is one that deserves the most thoughtful scrutiny lest in our endeavor to retrench we may do more harm than good. I earnestly favor the curtailment and consolidation of governmental activities to the greatest possible extent, and I also favor the abolishment of certain other activities. Each case, however, should be considered upon its own merits. One department of government or one activity might sustain, without any material detriment to the country, a very substantial cut in operating funds; whereas another activity of higher beneficial purposes might be practically destroyed by any substantial withholding of funds. It seems to me that arbitrary or lump-sum cuts from the totals of appropriation bills are more or less blind in character and, if made, put upon the executive offices of the Government a task of tremendous difficulty.

The House Appropriations Committee has followed the practice of making its reductions under specific heads or items and not from the total of the bill without regard to special items.

It is to be hoped that the various committees, special and otherwise, authorized by the present Congress to investigate these subjects may speedily evolve wise and practical plans for bringing about the enactment of the necessary legislation to eliminate unnecessary offices and activities and bring the cost of government, in these times of stress, to the minimum. I am sure that the House Appropriations Committee will be very glad to cooperate in this work in every way possible. The record of this committee I believe fully justifies this observation. We are in the midst of a war-time emergency in a peace-time period, and it must be dealt with as such. Any fair and just diagnosis of the situation must give recognition to the fact that the World War, with its $45,000,000,000 cost to us, has brought upon our people its inevitably sad and tragic aftermath.

AIR MAIL

And, now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to add something to what I have already said in general debate on this bill on the subject of air mail.

As a member of the subcommittee conducting the hearings upon and formulating the Treasury-Post Office Departments appropriations bill, I have been very much struck with the fact that while nearly every activity and enterprise has been suffering a loss of business, the air mail service has grown. It illustrates that aviation has come to stay. In general I believe the air mail set-ups have been wise; and they should become more and more self-supporting as time goes on. Accordingly, as the commercial operations and returns increase, the expense to the Government of air mail operations should decrease. The Postmaster General, in the course of the hearings on the 1933 bill for the Post Office Department, has expressed the belief that the air mail service within a few years should be on a parity with the Railway Mail Service so far as the cost of operation may be concerned.

DOMESTIC AIR MAIL

For the fiscal year 1931 the amount expended for the domestic air mail service was $16,942,454.39, with estimated revenues of $6,210,344.86.

This difference of $10,732,109.53 represents what may be termed a subvention or subsidy paid by the Government to the contracting operators for the purpose of having this air mail service performed and for building up the aviation interests of the country. Unless the cost of the air mail service may be reduced within a few years in the manner indicated, the payment by the Government of the subventions involved would certainly be without justification.

As a matter of information, and under leave accorded me, I now include certain portions of the hearings on the 1933 bill already referred to.

First, inclusion is made of a table, setting forth the names of operators, routes, mileages, and rates of pay of the domestic air mail service.

The amount carried in the bill for the domestic air service for 1933 is $19,000,000. The amount asked for by the Post Office Department and now urged as being necessary to maintain that service under the present set-up, with night flying on the newly lighted routes, is $20,000,000. Unless the department is able to exact absorption by the operating companies of this $1,000,000 of difference the domestic air mail operations will suffer. The Budget estimate was $19,000,000, and this total was written into the 1933 bill, which has passed the House and is now before the Senate for action.

FOREIGN AIR MAIL

The bill carries the total of $7,000,000 for foreign air mail service. This is the same amount as was appropriated for the fiscal year 1932, the current year. The contracts for this foreign service are of different character from those for the domestic air mail; they are not flexible in their terms, as are those of domestic character. Nearly all of our foreign air mail contracts are with Latin America and the West Indian islands. In these regions there is active competition between the aviation interests of the United States and those of certain European countries. The extracts now taken from the testimony before the subcommittee of Mr. J. T. Trippe, president of the Pan American Airways, one of the companies engaged in our foreign air mail service, may be of interest. This company finances and maintains 20,000 miles of air service.

Mr. TRIPPE. * * * I would like to cover briefly the position in South America in 1928. At that time the only American air service was that between Florida and Cuba. I have a map here which will show to the committee the extent of the foreign air mail service, subsidized by European governments, that was in existence at that time. The French were operating along the east coast of South America, and were organizing services along the north coast of South America, as well as extensions to Patagonia and to Asuncion. The Germans were also operating along the east coast of South America, the company being the Kondor, a subsidiary of the powerful German Lufthansa. The French company was the Aeropostale, backed by the French Government with large subsidies.

At that time Congress became interested in this situation, seeing the activity of foreign aviation interests, and enacted the foreign air mail act, which permitted the Post Office Department to advertise for services to other points in Latin America. During the next few years various mail contracts were advertised. On the west coast the contract was awarded to Pan American-Grace Airways, which is partly owned by Pan-American Airways and partly by the Grace Steamship interests. The other contracts were awarded to Pan American Airways.

* * * * * * *

When we commenced service between Florida and Cuba our capital was $500,000, all of which was privately subscribed. Today it is in excess of $18,000,000.

Mr. THATCHER. Paid-in capital?

Mr. TRIPPE. Paid-in capital.

Many different interests in the American aviation industry are stockholders in Pan American; various others directly interested in the company include business men and firms engaged in Latin American commerce. Interests identified with most of the steamship lines operating to South America are also interested in Pan American. Included among these are the A. G. W. I. steamship lines, the Munson Line on the east coast, and the Grace Line on the west coast, the latter being part owner of Pan American-Grace Airways.

There are no bankers, as such, connected with the company. I refer to "bankers" in the ordinary sense of the word. There have been no commissions ever paid for the raising of any capital in our company. There has been no promotion stock issued. In fact, when it has been necessary to secure loans—and it has been—to carry this system during the past years, we have been able to secure money from the banks only through personal indorsements of myself and certain of our other directors.

Our technical adviser is Colonel Lindbergh. He joined the company just after he completed his flight around the so-called Lindbergh circle in the Caribbean area. At that time he saw, also, what aviation would do for Latin America—what it would do to build up American good will in that territory as well as to extend our trade. I have personally witnessed several of the receptions that have been tendered Colonel Lindbergh when he opened certain of our mail routes, and I may say without fear of contradiction that he is as much admired in all of these countries as he is here in the United States. I believe he has been of great help in overcoming anti-American propaganda that has been developed in these countries by our trade rivals. He is truly a real "good-will ambassador" of the American people.

As to our compensation from the United States Post Office Department: We receive for our various contracts an average of $1.89 per mile for carrying the mails. Our contracts require that we carry from 800 to 1,000 pounds of mail. In South America the contracts held by the French company, Aeropostale, provide for a return to them of $3.30 per mile.

Mr. ARNOLD. That $1.89 that you refer to is $1.89 per mile?

Mr. TRIPPE. One dollar and eighty-nine cents per mile; yes, sir.

Mr. THATCHER. You would be permitted to receive $2, but the Postmaster General has scaled it to $1.89.

Mr. TRIPPE. On the west coast of South America the line held by Pan American-Grace Airways was bid in at $1.80 per mile. On the second trip which they received last year, the company agreed with the Postmaster General to operate at $1.60 per mile. The average of all these services is now $1.89 per mile, as against the $3.30 per mile figure for all the French services in Latin America.

* * * * * * *

Mr. TRIPPE. This map [indicating] will show the entire Pan American system routes. They are shown in blue. We operate from Brownsville to the Canal Zone, from Brownsville to Mexico City, from Miami to Salvador, where connection is made with the Central American route; we fly from Miami to the Canal Zone by way of Kingston and Barranquilla, Colombia, involving an overwater flight of over 500 miles. We fly along the east coast of South America to Buenos Aires, and through Pan American-Grace Airways, from the Canal Zone down the west coast of South America, across the Andes.

Mr. THATCHER. It is a 7-day trip from Montevideo to Miami, on the west coast?

Mr. TRIPPE. Yes, sir.

Mr. THATCHER. What is the time required for the flight up the east coast from Buenos Aires to Miami?

Mr. TRIPPE. The east-coast schedule is eight days, but that service embraces Rio de Janeiro and other Brazilian cities.

Mr. THATCHER. I thought the west coast was a shorter route.

Mr. TRIPPE. The west coast is seven days. The east coast is eight days.

* * * * * * *

Mr. TRIPPE. In the foreign field the contractor must provide his own airways, his radio aids to aerial navigation, his weather service, his intermediate airports, and other similar facilities which in the domestic field are supplied by the Department of Commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. That makes it a little more trying on the operators, does it not?

Mr. TRIPPE. That makes it more expensive for the operators, sir.

We have in operation more than 60 ground radio stations, which supply complete information to aircraft at all times, and the airways that we have provided, we think, are entirely adequate for the service. The regularity maintained over the system last year, according to the Post Office Department figures, was 99.62 per cent.

Mr. THATCHER. You have never had a fatality in the air, have you?

Mr. TRIPPE. We have not, sir, during the past two and a half years' service in Latin America since the initial development beyond Cuba.

Mr. THATCHER. From your standpoint, under present conditions, at present rates, and with the present increase of postal revenues, how long will it take for this service to be self-supporting?

Mr. TRIPPE. Well, sir, with the return to normal times, and using the index of the rate of increase during the past two years, we feel that the service will return to the department all or substantially all it costs to maintain the service within the next four or five years. That income, of course, is actual dollars to the Government net to the Post Office Department at Washington, and it includes any loss incurred in transferring funds from those countries whose currency is now depreciated. There are many other indirect advantages from this foreign service.

ADVANTAGES OF FOREIGN AIR MAIL SERVICE

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you tell us what they are.

Mr. TRIPPE. I could best come to that if I would be permitted by the committee to make a short statement off the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; you may proceed without interruption. What appeals to me most strongly is the possibility of the development of commerce and the good will to which you have referred.

Mr. TRIPPE. From the commercial viewpoint, these figures show the fact that the future important market for United States trade is South America. The 1930 figures of the Department of Commerce show that the trade between the United States and South America was $771,000,000, and the trade between Europe and South America was $1,532,000,000. The United States' proportion of South America's total world trade in 1930 was only 27 per cent; the European proportion was 52 per cent, the balance having been made up in Asia, Africa, and elsewhere.

The east-coast proportion of South American total world trade is 66 per cent, the west-coast proportion is 19 per cent, and the north-coast proportion is 15 per cent.

Those figures clearly show the fact that the east coast is the chief commercial area so far as world trade with South America is concerned, and it is on that coast that Europe is getting a greater proportion of trade than is the United States. It is on that coast also that we are faced with major European competition from both the French and the Germans, who are paralleling our air service throughout the whole east-coast area from Natal to Buenos Aires.

Mr. THATCHER. Is it not true that there ought to be a greater frequency than once a week on the east coast?

Mr. TRIPPE. Yes, sir. We are confident of the fact that if a second trip should be authorized the returns to this Government would be increased by over $400,000 a year.

We arrive at this conclusion from the actual results that followed the increase in frequency on the west-coast service from once to twice per week.

MONEY RETURN TO GOVERNMENT ON FOREIGN AIR MAIL

I want to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, the fact that not only have we built up good will in these foreign countries but also we are aiding United States trade. Furthermore, I have some charts here which graphically show that this Government is getting back a substantial sum in actual money from the air mail.

This chart [indicating] shows on the left, by years, the revenue of our Post Office Department in American gold dollars. As you know, many of the currencies in Latin America are greatly depreciated, and that fact has greatly retarded the growth of the mails. In fact, in some of the larger countries, such as Argentina and Brazil, exchange is off about 50 per cent. But notwithstanding the unfavorable economic conditions in these countries and the fact that even first-class mail to Latin America has been greatly reduced in volume, the air mail revenue to this Government has greatly increased.

Mr. THATCHER. Can you give us the figures?

Mr. TRIPPE. In 1929 the figure was $223,000.

Mr. THATCHER. Received by the United States?

Mr. TRIPPE. Received by the United States Post Office Department.

Mr. THATCHER. For the carriage of air mail?

Mr. TRIPPE. For the carriage of air mail to and from Latin American countries.

In 1930 the figure was $823,000; in 1931 the figure was $1,432,000.

The graph at this side [indicating] indicates the revenue developed by the French company. Of course, that revenue is retained for the company's own account, and does not revert to the French Government.

* * * * * * *

UNITED STATES TRADE WITH LATIN AMERICA

In 1930, in spite of generally unfavorable business conditions, the United States trade with Latin American countries and colonies served by the United States foreign air mail system was nearly $1,500,000,000.

Although the United States was able to secure 56 per cent of the $1,200,000,000 world trade of Mexico, the West Indies, and Central America in 1930, we were able to secure only 27 per cent of South America's much larger world trade of $2,852,000,000, while Europe secured 52.6 per cent of this latter trade.

Based on the 1930 figures, which are much lower than normal, every 5 per cent gained by the United States in its proportion of South America's world trade would increase the foreign trade of the United States by $140,000,000.

The principal United States business interests engaged in trade with South America are on record that the United States air service is a vital factor in the retention of existing trade and the building up of additional trade with South America. As you know, there are two well-organized air lines, subsidized by Germany and France, respectively, connecting South America with Europe. American air service is necessary to enable American business to meet the advantages in time afforded to European competitors by these European lines.

The increasing value of the service to American trade is exemplified by the figures showing its rapidly increasing use, even in the face of depressed economic conditions.

Pounds of air mail transported:
1928	68,400
1929	241,500
1930	453,500
Number of passengers transported:
1928	1,184
1930	34,717

NOTE.—While the final figures for 1931 are not yet available, they will show a substantial increase over the preceding year.

With this progress in a time of unfavorable conditions, it is obvious that under normal conditions the annual percentage of growth would have been and in the future will be substantially greater. It naturally follows that the more the service is patronized because of its trade benefits, the greater becomes the return revenue to the United States Government and the lower the net cost of maintaining the service.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, as I recall, under a former unanimous-consent agreement, the House meets tomorrow at 11 o'clock a. m.?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the minority leader I desire to propound this unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday it may be in order to move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and that between the hours of 8 o'clock and 10.30 o'clock p. m. it shall be in order to consider bills on the Private Calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 144.

Mr. SNELL. Unobjected-to bills?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair will designate the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to act as Speaker pro tempore on Wednesday evening during the consideration of the Private Calendar.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 5064. An act authorizing Vernon W. O'Connor, of St. Paul, Minn., his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rainy River at or near Baudette, Minn.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5064. An act authorizing Vernon W. O'Connor, of St. Paul, Minn., his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rainy River at or near Baudette, Minn.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 8, 1932, at 11 o'clock a. m.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. RAINEY submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Tuesday, March 8, 1932, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

(10 a. m.)

Public works administration (H. R. 6665 and H. R. 6670).

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

(10.30 a. m.)

General legislation.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—SUBCOMMITTEE ON INSURANCE AND BANKING

(10.30 a. m.)

Bill requiring certain insurance corporations to maintain their principal offices and places of business in the District of Columbia (H. R. 8991).

COMMITTEE ON COINAGE, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES

(10 a. m.)

Depressed value of silver (H. Res. 72).

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

(10.30 a. m.)

Bills dealing with general suspension, restriction, further restriction, and prohibition of immigration into the United States.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

470. A letter from the clerk of the Court of Claims of the United States, transmitting a list of cases dismissed by the court for nonprosecution January 4, 1932, which cases were referred to this court by resolution of the House of Representatives under the act of March 3, 1911, known as the Judicial Code; to the Committee on Claims.

471. A letter from the clerk of the Court of Claims of the United States, transmitting special findings of fact and opinion of the court by Williams, judge, and of the memorandum filed by the court overruling the defendant's motion for new trial; to the Committee on Claims.

472. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend article 5 of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1897, relating to the approval of regulations for preventing collisions upon certain harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

473. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated March 3, 1932, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on preliminary examination of inland waterway from Port Everglades to Caloosahatchee River, Fla.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

474. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement of the cost of alterations and repairs on the California State to fit that ship out as a nautical school ship; to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS AT THE UNVEILING OF STATUE OF JEFFERSON DAVIS IN STATUARY HALL

Mr. HARRISON submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 19), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed with illustrations and bound 15,000 copies of the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings held at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statue of Jefferson Davis, presented by the State of Mississippi, of which 1,000 shall be for the Senate and 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 11,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Mississippi.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer and shall procure suitable illustrations to be published with these proceedings.

PROPOSED REPEAL OR MODIFICATION OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. LEWIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 183), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that:

(1) The amendment to the Constitution of the United States designated as the eighteenth amendment be repealed or modified to the extent necessary to allow complete control by the States of the manufacture, distribution, and transportation of spirituous beverages and authorize the States by proper legislation to provide the content and qualifications of the beverage and any limitations of sale and distribution as will make and establish such form of temperance or commerce in connection with spirituous liquors in beverages containing alcohol as each State shall decide and elect to adopt as the policy of that State;

(2) The repeal, qualification, or limitation of the eighteenth amendment shall provide for the States the privilege of transmitting to local governments of the State, to wit: Cities or counties, such authority of police control or privilege of levying and collecting revenue from the disposition in commerce of spirituous liquors in such manner as the State shall provide by law through its legislature; and

(3) It is hereby reserved that the States shall have the right by State referendum or public vote in each local government within the State to authorize the disposition of the spirituous liquor by the local governments within the State, such as city or county, as the law of the State may provide, together with privilege of the local governments to license and collect revenue from such licensing as the State may provide.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF A PUBLIC RESOLUTION

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that on March 7, 1932, the President approved and signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) authorizing the distribution of Government-owned wheat to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress.

STATISTICS OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have been endeavoring to secure figures with regard to unemployment throughout the United States, and I have here a letter from the Secretary of Commerce giving the latest estimates of the Department of Commerce with regard to that subject, for which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, together with the tables attached thereto.

I should like particularly to call attention to Table II, in which the Secretary of Commerce compares the distribution of the population by States with the distribution of unemployment by States so far as the department has been able to determine it; and also to call attention to the fact that there are only four States in which the percentage of unemployment is largely more than their percentage of total population, and that in most of the States the percentage of unemployment is about the same as the percentage of population with regard to the total population of the United States. I have been asked to state the names of the four States whose percentage of unemployment varies from their percentage of total population, and I will say that they are the large States of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Michigan.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter, together with the tables attached thereto, presented by the Senator from Connecticut will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter and tables are as follows:

MARCH 7, 1932.

Hon. HIRAM BINGHAM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with your request, I am inclosing a memorandum which will give you most of the information you requested.

As indicated in this memorandum, it is impossible to state with any accuracy what the probable distribution of unemployed is among States at the present time, as there has been no enumeration of unemployment on a state-wide basis made since April, 1930. It seems probable, however, that so far as the relative severity of unemployment among the States is concerned, it is not greatly different than in April, 1930, with the likelihood that the increase of unemployment since that date has been most pronounced in those States in which unemployment at that time was already most severe.

I believe you will be particularly interested in the tabulation showing the distribution of relief expenditures for the first quarter of 1931, as compared with population and severity of unemployment in the different States.

If there is any further information you would like to have, please do not hesitate to call upon us.

Very truly yours,

R. P. LAMONT,
Secretary of Commerce.

MARCH 7, 1932.

To the Secretary.
From J. F. Dewhurst.
Subject: Senator Bingham's request for information on unemployment and relief expenditures.

The attached tabulations contain information which will give a partial answer to Senator BINGHAM'S request.

Table I shows the distribution of population and of the number of unemployed in Classes A and B among the States, according to the census of population and the census of occupations made in April, 1930.

Table II shows the percentage distribution of population and of unemployed (Classes A and B) compared with the estimated distribution of total relief expenditures in the first quarter of 1931. The last column is based upon Special Report—Relief Expenditures by Governmental and Private Organizations, by the Bureau of the Census. As these reports were not entirely complete, rough estimates have been made for the counties in each State for which relief expenditures were not reported.

Table III shows the percentage of gainful workers unemployed in Classes A and B in each State, compared with the per capita relief expenditures in the first quarter of 1931, and the relief expenditures per unemployed worker in the same period.

Table IV shows a comparison of relief expenditures and unemployment in two groups of States, viz: (1) The 12 States (exclusive of Rhode Island, for which data were not available) having the largest percentage of unemployment in April, 1930, and (2) the 12 States having the smallest percentage in April, 1930.

The summarized data for this last table, together with similar information for the United States as a whole, are shown below:

	United States	12 States with greatest unemployment	12 States with least unemployment
Population, April, 1930	122,775,046	59,441,377	22,405,630
Gainfully occupied, 1930	48,832,589	24,707,677	8,494,263
Unemployed, classes A and B	3,187,647	2,066,928	263,505
Per cent unemployed	6.5	8.4	3.1
Relief, expenditures, estimated (first quarter, 1931)	$80,297,562	$56,290,797	$6,321,399
Relief expenditures per capita (first quarter, 1931)	$0.65	$0.95	$0.28
Relief expenditures per unemployed worker (classes A and B)	$25.19	$27.23	$23.99

There is apparently a rough correspondence in the amount of relief expended in the first quarter of 1931 and the severity of unemployment in these two groups of States, thus the States with the least unemployment, having an average of 3.1 per cent, had per capita relief expenditures of 28 cents, while those having the greatest unemployment, with an average of 8.4 per cent, had per capita relief expenditures of 95 cents. The relief expenditures per unemployed worker show only a small difference between the two groups of States.

There are no current statistics to make it possible to give an exact quantitative measurement of the amount of unemployment in each State at the present time, as no comprehensive statistics have been collected since April, 1930. My own judgment is, however, that the increase in unemployment which has occurred since the time of the census has fallen most heavily in those States in which unemployment was shown to be most severe in April, 1930. In other words, if the States were ranked according to the severity of unemployment existing in each, my belief is that the ranking would be much the same as at the time of the census, but that the disparity or "spread" between those States with the lowest percentage of unemployment and those with the largest percentage would be greater now than in April, 1930.

This conclusion is based upon an examination of the distribution of unemployment as reported in the census of 1930 and a study of the employment indexes published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The States in which the percentage of gainfully occupied in classes A and B combined was greatest were also those States which are predominantly industrial in character, and it is precisely from these occupations, i. e., manufacturing, mining, and construction, as well as railroads, that the largest numbers have been laid off since April, 1930. The increase in unemployment has been relatively less severe in the more widely distributed mercantile and service occupations and in agriculture, so that it would seem that the nonindustrial States have experienced a somewhat less pronounced increase of unemployment.

Another factor which would tend to cause a relatively greater increase of unemployment in the States which already had a large percentage of unemployment in April, 1930, is that these States, such as Michigan, Illinois, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, New York, etc., are largely urban in character, with large cities into which the casual unemployed labor from the rural sections tends to drift in midwinter. Of course, this is merely stating what is generally recognized by students of the subject—that unemployment is largely an industrial and urban phenomenon.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the national secretary of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States has called my attention to an effort to deceive officers in connection with an appropriation bill, which I should like to take just a moment to explain to the Senate.

The national secretary has sent me an undated letter which was sent out by the Aero Digest. It is postmarked New York, March 4. In it the publisher of Aero Digest says that the deficiency appropriation bill is now before the Congress, that an appropriation of $100,000 was approved by the Senate to furnish additional flying for reserve officers and that Aero Digest intends to keep up the fight until it shall pass the House. The letter is as follows:

In a recent letter we told you of our plans in cooperation with General Fechet in an endeavor to secure additional appropriations in order that the Air Corps Reserve might have more flying time.

Well, the battle's now on, and we are pleased to report that after the first skirmish, a deficiency appropriation of $100,000 was approved by the Senate subcommittee and later passed by the Appropriations Committee as a whole, after a severe fight against it on the floor led by Senator DICKINSON, of Iowa, it won by a vote of 35 to 28; and from available private information, we are convinced the bill will pass the House of Representatives. This will mean $100,000 more flying time for the balance of the fiscal year.

We intend to keep up this fight until the Air Reserve secures what they are entitled to in the way of legislation and appropriations. This, of course, costs money—lots of it—and remember Aero Digest is paying the bill. We want your suggestions and cooperation. The Senator and Congressman that are elected from your State pay more attention to one word from you—a voter—than all of the testimony presented before the committee in Washington.

In our last letter, we offered you a special price of $2 for a year's subscription. The response from the Air Reserve was most gratifying. However, in checking the list we find your name missing. It will take a lot of 2-buck subscriptions to finance this job. We know you want to do your share. You can do it now by signing the inclosed card and returning it to us. No postage is required, but do it now.

Sincerely, FRANK A. TICHENOR, Publisher.

The national secretary of the Reserve Officers' Association writes me as follows:

As you are aware, the amendment to H. R. 6660 was lost on January 28, 1932. Paragraph 2 of the letter was a gross misstatement of the fact on the day the letter was mailed (March 4, 1932) and, further, the statement contained in paragraph 3 that "Aero Digest is paying the bill" is misleading. The letter is being used as a means to obtain subscriptions for the Aero Digest under the plea that the magazine is waging a successful fight in a cause that was definitely lost over a month before the letter was mailed.

The interest of our association is primarily that of protecting unknowing Air Reserve officers from contributing or taking subscriptions to lend financial aid to a cause which is now beyond financial assistance.

The facts are that the officers of the Reserve Officers' Association, which initiated this hundred thousand dollar appropriation, appeared before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, both in person and by letter, and helped carry it through the Senate. None of the persons connected with Aero Digest appeared before the committee to urge the passage of this appropriation. The credit for the effort to secure the appropriation should go to the Reserve Officers' Association. It is unfortunate that the House of Representatives did not see fit to agree with the Senate in this regard. These facts should be known to all reserve flying officers.

ACCEPTANCE OF STATUE OF GEN. JOHN SEVIER PRESENTED BY THE STATE OF TENNESSEE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 14), as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the statue of Gen. John Sevier, presented by the State of Tennessee and placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered said State for the contribution of the statue of this eminent man, illustrious for his distinguished service as a pioneer patriot of said State.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the Governor of Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution be considered at this time and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 8, accepting the statue of Gen. John Sevier, presented by the State of Tennessee, to be placed in Statuary Hall, introduced by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and now on the Table Calendar, will be taken from the table and indefinitely postponed.

TELEVISION AND GOVERNMENT RADIO PROGRAM SPONSORSHIP

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "The Future of Television," prepared by the National Association of Broadcasters, under date of March 5, and also another article entitled "Government Program Sponsorship," likewise prepared by the National Association of Broadcasters.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FUTURE OF TELEVISION

(By National Association of Broadcasters)

The Radio Manufacturers Association to-day (Saturday) issued a formal statement summarizing the present status and predicting the future of television. The present status of television is summarized as follows:

"First. For scanning, mechanical features using rotating parts are in wide use and offer a most practical means of securing passable television pictures.

"Second. A direct pick-up system which has come to the front rapidly this year is that of the camera idea. This system can be used for television pick-up in a lighted studio, for outdoor pick-up, etc.

"Third. A great deal of successful development has been made with the cathode-ray tube system for transmission and reception. This system has proven technically sound and shows the greatest possibility. Its chief difficulties are in the production of large quantities of these systems at a reasonable cost.

"Fourth. The television broadcast transmission spectrum allows only for five channels, namely, 2,000–2,100 kilocycles, 2,100–2,200 kilocycles, 2,200–2,300 kilocycles, 2,750–2,850 kilocycles, and 2,850–2,950 kilocycles. This frequency spectrum for television is not adequate for good picture transmission on account of the very wide side band frequency necessary for picture detail, so in addition to these bands, on the extreme short waves 5–7 meters, frequencies from 35,000 to 80,000 kilocycles have been requested for television service. Most of the present transmitters are operating in the first-mentioned bands, but a few operate in the neighborhood of 46,000 to 48,000 kilocycles.

"Fifth. The reception of television has been possible by tuning with either a superheterodyne or tuned radio frequency receiver designed for television reception. Synchronized sound very often accompanies the picture transmission, and it is common practice to receive the voice transmission on the standard broadcast receiver. This required two receivers for receiving synchronized sound and picture transmission. In the television receivers mechanical scanning and cathode ray electrical scanning have been employed. The cathode-ray type of scanning has been capable of excellent results and shows great possibilities for further development.

"Sixth. With the present economics of broadcasting it has been impossible to secure much data on the entertaining value of subjects that can be broadcast due to the cost in presenting programs. The Federal Radio Commission has up to the present time considered television only experimental and will grant no commercial rights. This means that all broadcasting must be done for the experimental value only and no paid programs can be transmitted by television. This ruling has made impossible the receipt of any money in staging television programs. With commercial rights granted by the Federal Government the problem will still be complicated as to whether advertisers will continue to assume the increased costs that television must impose for its successful operation, or whether the public can satisfactorily be taxed to bear this burden."

Television's future is summarized in the statement, as follows:

"First. Greater detail should be obtained in received picture.

"Second. Television transmission pick-up equipment should be portable and as easily used as present-day sound-picture pick-up equipment.

"Third. Transmitting systems must be evolved which will have a satisfactory and reliable service range.

"Fourth. Receivers as simple in operation as our present radio receivers must be designed and built at a reasonable cost.

"Fifth. Quiet and satisfactorily illuminated picture equipment for the home must be designed and built at a reasonable cost.

"Regardless of the present problems that confront the industry there has been enough work done to justify some predictions which can be conscientiously made. With the development of the new short-wave channels at frequencies higher than 35,000,000 cycles reliable transmission of television can be predicted. Ample room for an adequate number of transmitting stations can be visualized in this short-wave region. It is perfectly conceivable that a sight and sound service can be worked out to be received on a single receiver with a simplified tuning and control mechanism.

"As never before, the new art of television is going to require the rigid and sure hand of a governing body to set up the standards for both transmission and reception. Surely no body is better suited for this task than the Radio Manufacturers Association, which embraces both transmitting and reception. Surely no body is better suited for this task than the Radio Manufacturers Association, which embraces both transmitting and receiving set manufacturers. Because of this situation television presents a real challenge to the RMA, which, if accepted, can and will bring new prosperity to its members but only if this challenge is correctly and courageously met by the entire cooperation of its members."

GOVERNMENT PROGRAM SPONSORSHIP

(By National Association of Broadcasters)

A warning to the radio industry that it must beware of the campaign for Government ownership is contained in a letter written by Arthur V. May, of Van Sant, Dugdale & Corner (Inc.), New York, and published in the current issue of Advertising and Selling. "Hands off radio—and the listener's pocketbook" is the slogan advocated by the writer. The letter follows:

"If Government controls radio: We have a striking example of the weakness of Government control of broadcasting in that august body known as the B. B. C. (British Broadcasting Co.).

"Programs are all 'sponsored' by the government. It has its different boards of censors. Nothing that smells like 'commercialism' can possibly get over the ether. You can imagine the monotony of entertainment when all radio programs are sponsored by the one concern, no matter how brilliant may be some of the programs. Picture in your minds, if you will, the state of domestic affairs if every program in America conformed to a pattern. If 80 per cent of the programs were classical music. If 10 per cent were comic, according to the sense of humor of the board of censors. If 10 per cent were dull lecturers. If anything of controversial nature were prohibited. Government sponsorship would not only punish the advertisers but the public as well. True, in England the serious programs are oftentimes rendered by the best talent. True, they have the privilege of listening to the world's greatest authors, scientists, travelers. But radio without variety is lost on the ears of a nation. Variety is the spice of radio entertainment. That is why radio is such a success in this country, despite many inappropriate and sometimes dull programs now put over the ether by advertisers who should know better. Government control means nothing but dullness, monotony (or better still, may we say static?) all the time.

"Who pays for radio under government control? The answer is, so far as England is concerned, the already overtaxed radio owner. He pays his yearly tax, and that supports the industry. Along with this taxation come the official snoopers, an extra cost to the taxpayer. These snoopers are supposed to look for aerials and check up with the home owners as to whether they are dodging the tax or not. Should the owner have an indoor aerial, then it is the job of the telephone man to call, and while ostensibly inspecting the phone he snoops around to see whether there is a radio or not. For the telephone, you must be told, is also under government control through the post office. American tourists will tell in very colorful terms how efficient it is.

"If this sort of thing can happen under the control of the most respected government in the world—a government free from graft, a government that has the respect of every citizen, regardless of what party is in office—think what will happen in America should the United States Government have control of the radio industry! The handling of the 'noble experiment' gives one a pretty good idea as to what will happen. Political parsons will choose our programs for us. Single-tracked politicians will use the air for selfish ends. There will be no freedom of speech, no variety of entertainment. Taxation will go on the up and up. More juggling of public funds. More—well, why go further?

"The radio industry must beware of this pending disaster. It must retain the support of the people of America by giving more and better entertainment and less commercialism. It must start some strenuous propaganda against such an awful pass as Government control. Let it use as its slogan: 'Hands off radio—and the listeners' pocketbook.'"

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] and I are endeavoring to make some arrangements with reference to these amendments. I hope that we may be indulged for a few moments if some other amendment to the bill may be considered in the meantime.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Tennessee and the arrangements we are apparently about to enter into in regard to some of his amendments, and knowing that other amendments are to be proposed, I suggest that some other amendment may be now considered. I believe the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has a motion pending to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the grasshopper item.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] intends to speak on that motion, and he has been called from the Chamber momentarily. However, there is another matter to which I wish to make brief reference at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday I invited attention to some of the items of expense carried in the bill and also to the number of employees in the Department of Agriculture. I have a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Hyde, which contains a list of the numbers of employees and the grades in which they are found. I desire to place in the RECORD some of the data contained in the Secretary's letter.

My recollection is that the figures which I presented yesterday, showing approximately 28,000 permanent employees in the department, and supported by the data which I have here, although the number of employees is not totaled. The list furnished me by the Secretary shows that in the departmental service in Washington there are 449 employees whose salaries range from $1,800 to $1,900 and 702 employees in the field service whose compensation is the same. There are 279 employees in the departmental service stationed in Washington whose compensation is between $1,900 and $2,000. There are 309 employees receiving the same salaries in the field service. There are 195 in Washington whose salaries are between $2,000 and $2,100 and 1,680 whose salaries are the same who are employed in the field service. In the departmental service there are 192 employees with salaries between $2,100 and $2,200 and 965 in the field service whose compensation is the same. In Washington there are 93 employees whose salaries are from $2,200 to $2,300 and 395 serving in the field. The employees in Washington whose salaries range between $2,300 and $2,400 are 112 and those employed in the field number 394. There are 73 persons employed in the department whose salaries are $2,400 to $2,500 and 326 employed in the field whose salaries are within the same limits.

The number of employees in Washington whose salaries are between $2,500 and $2,600 is 82 and those in the field number 267. The number of employees in Washington whose salaries range between $2,600 and $2,700 is 183 and the number in the field is 446. There are 81 employees in Washington whose salaries are from $2,700 to $2,800 and the number in the field in the same grade is 294. Those whose salaries are from $2,800 to $2,900 and who are employed in Washington is 74 and those employed in the field of the same grade is 777. There are 66 employees in Washington whose salaries range from $2,900 to $3,000 and 324 engaged in field service. Forty-four employees in Washington receive between $3,000 and $3,100 annual compensation and 218 whose compensation is the same are engaged in field service. Twenty-four employees serving in Washington receive from $3,100 to $3,200 and in the field service there are 155 within the same grade. There are 163 employees in Washington whose salaries are between $3,200 and $3,300 and 313 in the same grade engaged in the field service. Eighty-four employees serving in Washington receive salaries amounting to between $3,300 and $3,400 and there are 203 of the same grade serving in the field. Fifty-six persons within the District of Columbia receive from $3,400 to $3,500; in the field the number in the same grade is 156. There are 39 employees in Washington whose salaries are from $3,500 to $3,600 and 130 in the field service drawing the same compensation. Twenty-four persons are employed in Washington whose salaries are from $2,600 to $3,700 and 117 drawing the same salaries are engaged in field service.

The number of employees in Washington whose salaries range between $3,700 and $3,800 is 27, while the number of persons in the field in the same grade is 74. There are 112 employees in Washington whose salaries are from $3,800 to $3,900, and 195 in the same grade engaged in field service. There are 33 persons whose salaries are from $4,000 to $4,100 who are serving in Washington and 106 serving in the field. Two in Washington receive salaries between $4,100 and $4,200 and eight are in the field. Twenty-one persons are employed in Washington whose salaries are from $4,200 to $4,400, and 50 in the same grade are in the field service. Eight persons whose salaries range from $4,400 to $4,600 are in Washington and 28 are in the field. There are 176 persons drawing compensation of between $4,600 and $4,800 per annum, and 265 in the same grade in the field service. There are 119 employees in Washington whose salaries are from $4,800 to $5,000, and 101 in the same grade doing field-service work. There are 40 whose salaries are between $5,100 and $5,200 serving in Washington and 57 serving in the field. Twenty-two persons receive salaries between $5,200 and $5,400 in Washington and 19 who are serving in the field. Fourteen persons are employed in Washington whose salaries are between $5,400 and $5,600, and four in the field in the same grade. Sixty-nine persons employed in Washington receive salaries from $5,600 to $5,800, and 33 persons in the field service in the same grade. Twenty-seven persons employed in Washington receive from $5,800 to $6,000 per annum each, and 19 serve in the same grade in the field. Fifty employees receive salaries from $6,000 to $6,500 who are serving in Washington, and 33 serve in the field in the same grade. Five persons in Washington receive from $6,500 to $7,000, and two in the field receive like salaries. Seven persons in Washington receive $7,000 to $7,500 compensation. Two in Washington receive $15,000 each, and one in the field service $7,500. Nine in Washington receive from $8,000 to $8,500 each, and three in the field receive the same compensation. Two employees serving in Washington are paid from $8,500 to $9,000 each. Four receive from $9,000 to $10,000 each, and one receives $15,000.

The so-called temporary employees, shown by the list furnished me by the Secretary, number approximately 125,000, and the compensation paid them is more than $13,000,000.

My understanding is that most of the temporary employees are not within the classified service. I have not inquired as to the authority possessed by the Secretary of Agriculture or his subordinates to employ this vast army labeled "temporary."

Yesterday I called attention to the fact that 96 persons were sent last summer by the Department of Agriculture into the congressional district of Hon. HAMILTON FISH, one of the Congressmen from New York. They claimed they were there to discover and destroy corn borers. They remained there for months, but Mr. FISH told me that there were no corn borers and communicated with the Department of Agriculture and attempted to secure the removal of this large number of Federal employees. They remained for a considerable length of time. Other parts of the United States have been visited by officials and employees of the Department of Agriculture where there was no greater reason for their presence than that which existed in the congressional district of Mr. FISH. It is safe to say that millions have been wasted by the Department of Agriculture in these needless and improper visitations.

We have heard considerable discussion concerning the mythical Mediterranean fly, which the Department of Agriculture claimed was to be found in Florida and menaced its trees, fruits, and vegetation. Nearly $7,000,000 were expended by the Department of Agriculture in Florida when there was no reason or justification for the same. Unfortunately, trees, shrubs, and plants were destroyed and the Government of the United States may be called upon to pay millions of dollars for the devastation wrought by the army of employees whose operations were directed by the Department of Agriculture. Frequent reference has been made to the fact that a substantial citizen of Florida posted a notice and gave great publicity to the same in which he promised to pay $1,000 to any person who would discover within the State of Florida a single Mediterranean fly. If there had been any Mediterranean flies in Florida, certainly one would have been found and the reward of $1,000 would have been claimed; but the authentic records are that none was found and the reward was never claimed. One loses confidence in the officials of the Agricultural Department—and particularly in the so-called scientists of the department—when examples such as the ones just referred to are brought to our attention.

Mr. President, in my opinion, many of the items in the pending bill can not be justified. The appropriation carried by the bill is entirely too large and should be materially reduced. It is only a few years ago when the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture were less than $4,000,000. This bill carries nearly $200,000,000. The demands of the executive departments are constantly increasing. It seems there is no limit to their ambition and to their exactions. With more than a million Federal employees we are confronted with demands for more than $1,300,000,000 to pay the salaries of this vast army of Federal employees. More bureaus, more Federal agencies, more employees, larger appropriations—and thus the chapters are written from year to year in the book of Federal activities.

Mr. President, I protest against the extravagant waste and inefficiency of the departments and agencies of the Federal Government. I know that all protests will be in vain and that efforts to reduce expenses will prove futile. The power of bureaucracy is increasing; the authority of the Federal Government is expanding; the cost of the National Government has become almost intolerable, and yet the executive departments demand more power, larger appropriations, and an increasing number of Federal employees.

EXHIBITION OF PORTRAITS OF WASHINGTON AND OTHERS IN CORCORAN ART GALLERY

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of Senators for just a moment while I call attention to an exhibit in the Corcoran Art Gallery, here in Washington, which embraces the greatest collection of portraits of George Washington and of his contemporaries that has ever been assembled at any one place, and which, of course, will not likely ever again be duplicated here or elsewhere.

This exhibit was arranged by the Bicentennial Commission, of which the Vice President is an honored member, in order to direct attention of Americans of the present day to the life and achievements of Washington. The exhibit occupies four rooms in the famous Corcoran Gallery, and there will be found on the walls about 160 different portraits, 50 of them being of Washington, and 2 or 3 of Martha Washington. The remainder are portraits of men and women prominent in the Revolutionary era.

There is one portrait in this collection by Sir Joshua Reynolds which, of course, is noteworthy. People would go a long distance to see any piece of work which that great artist produced. There is a portrait of Mrs. James Monroe by Benjamin West, admittedly one of the greatest portrait painters the Western Hemisphere has produced. It is a surprise to every person to have his attention called to so many portraits of Washington which were painted by the great American artist, Gilbert Stuart, and which now hang on the walls of this famous art gallery. There are also 10 other portraits painted by Gilbert Stuart of Jefferson, Madison, Hamilton, and other contemporaries of Washington.

The Rembrandt Peale portrait that ordinarily hangs in the Vice President's room is there; but there are 10 or more portraits of Washington that were painted by Rembrandt Peale's father, Charles Willson Peale, and 9 others of men other than Washington. The famous portrait of Washington's family by Edward Savage is there.

Then there are seven or eight portraits by Sharples. There are portraits by Thomas Sully and Lawrence Sully. The famous portrait of Patrick Henry by Lawrence Sully is there. The portrait of John Marshall by Robert Sully and Martin's portrait of John Marshall, which hangs in the Supreme Court room, are there. It is the most remarkable collection ever assembled of Washingtonia, the times of Washington.

I undertook to view with some care all of the portraits, but it is absolutely impossible for anyone to do so adequately unless he has plenty of time and there are few people in the gallery, in order that he may study them as he would like. The portraits will be there for the period of nine months, except those that have been brought from the Capitol. We are hoping to have those back before that time, but the others will remain there for the period of the nine months' celebration.

I am calling attention to this collection for this reason: It is an amazing thing to all of us that Washington was a figure who would justify the high art of Gilbert Stuart, of Charles Willson Peale, of his brother, James Peale, and of Rembrandt Peale, the son of Charles Willson. These were among the great artists of that time, and in looking over some of the copies recently coming to my notice I was amazed to know the different situations Washington had occupied which were regarded as sufficiently important to be the subject of paintings—the signing of the Constitution, Washington's retreat at Long Island, entrance of the American Army into New York, Washington and Lafayette at Valley Forge, Washington at Princeton, Washington crossing the Delaware, Washington introducing Rochambeau at Mount Vernon, Washington resigning his commission, Washington taking his leave of his officers, the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga, the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, Washington rebuking Lee at Monmouth, Washington's Cabinet, and inauguration of Washington, and so forth. I think there are about 20 scenes displaying his leadership, and probably a dozen more not connected with his official character which were the subject of the brush of men like Charles Willson Peale, Gilbert Stuart, John Trumbull, Rembrandt Peale, James Sharples, John Ramage, Edward Savage, the Sullys, West, Reynolds, and other eminent artists. Other portraits are the marriage of Washington, Lafayette visiting Washington at Mount Vernon, Washington on his farm at Mount Vernon, Washington's mission to the Ohio, and so forth.

I do not want this valuable collection to be overlooked; and I am making this suggestion to-day in the Senate Chamber in order that not only Senators but others who are within hearing of my voice, and those who will read the RECORD, may know what a very unusual collection we have been able to assemble here in Washington, and which is the best source for the study of the life and times of Washington.

The portrait committee of the Bicentennial Association is composed of Mrs. McCook Knox, of this city, chairman; F. Lammot Belin; Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis; Mantle Fielding; Mrs. Rose Gouverneur Hoes, I think a granddaughter of James Monroe, or at least a descendant; George B. McClellan; John Hill Morgan; Duncan Phillips; and Alexander Wilbourne Weddell. These people were responsible, under the direction of the commission, for assembling this very remarkable collection of portraits; and I hope at some time within the nine months every Senator will use the opportunity of viewing this wonderful collection of rare paintings by great artists of that day of this great man, an opportunity which should not be lost to any American citizen who appreciates the value of the influence of Washington.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Am I correct in understanding that the group that have made this collection have served without compensation or salary?

Mr. FESS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REED. I think we ought to be very grateful to them.

Mr. FESS. It is a great service that has been rendered. They have not only done that but they have gotten out a catalogue in which they have given the history of each picture, the painter, where the picture is now located, and where it has been. For example, the famous picture known as the Lansdowne picture of Washington, that is owned to-day by the Rosebery family, was sent here from London.

I can not overestimate the value of the work that has been done; and I think, probably, aside from the educational efforts in the school stimulated by the commission, this art collection, in a sense, is the most effective piece of work in connection with the bicentennial activities of this all-year celebration.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] and I have agreed upon certain reductions, so far as we are able to agree on them; and I hope the Senate will indorse them.

I desire to change the amendment that is now pending for the prevention of the spread of the gypsy and browntail moths. I withdraw the amendment I have already offered to strike out that item, and in lieu thereof I offer the following amendment:

On page 79, line 25, strike out the figures "$577,880" and substitute therefor the figures "$400,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 26, in line 22, under the same circumstances, I move to strike out the figures "$466,380" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$400,000."

Mr. SMITH. What page is that?

Mr. McKELLAR. Page 26—for investigating the disease of hog cholera.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think it well that I make a very brief statement in connection with my conferences had and understanding arrived at with the Senator from Tennessee so far as it may be deemed essential by the Senate.

The Senator has 26 amendments pending, all looking toward diminution in the aggregate appropriations made for specific projects carried under the Department of Agriculture. We have looked over eight or nine of those bearing the larger totals and have agreed that a 15 per cent reduction might be had by the Senate if concurred in by the membership present. We will take the amendments to conference, for the purpose of considering a reduction or restoration of the amounts agreed upon by the House.

So, to meet this situation, in order that we may have something liquid in the nature of determining whether we shall take the lower figure or the higher figure as the bill passed the House, I have consented, with the approval of the Senate, to accept that reduction in some of these major projects that we may have them in conference. I hope this will meet with the agreement and accord of the Members of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this particular amendment is somewhat in the nature of the one that came up with regard to the cattle tick.

I do not think there is a farmer in this country who does not realize the inestimable benefit that comes from the research of the Government and its development of an antitoxin for the disease of hog cholera. The Government experts have perfected a serum which will prevent a herd of hogs from having the cholera, and also a serum which will make them, when properly treated, entirely immune from this disease for the remainder of their lives. When one understands the incalculable destruction wrought by this disease to the swine industry of the country, I think this is a very modest sum to carry on this valuable work throughout the country for the preservation of the meat and lard supply.

This disease does its work, and does it immediately. It is spread throughout the country by the animals themselves, and by the vultures and the other carrion-eating birds. It breaks out in localities where it can not be quarantined against. It perhaps is the most fatal disease to which animals are subject. This is one item that ought to be preserved, because I myself can testify to the beneficial results of the Government's work in this connection, as observed in my own farming section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on page 33, under the same circumstances that I have just related and that have been related by the Senator from Oregon, I move to strike out, in line 9, under "blister-rust control," the figures "$469,997" and to insert in lieu thereof the figures "$400,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the same page, in line 15, under the item "botany," I move to strike out "$52,060" and insert "$42,060."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 35, in line 19, under "foreign plant introduction," I move to strike out the figures "$203,325" and substitute "$175,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 37, under "horticultural crops and diseases," in line 2, I move to strike out "$1,431,560" and to insert "$1,200,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 38, line 7, under "phony peach eradication," I move to strike out the figures "$82,150" and insert "$50,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the same page, page 38, line 25, under "rubber, fiber, and other tropical plants," I move to strike out "$113,932" and substitute "$75,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Again, on page 53, in line 8, under the item "Color investigations," I move to strike out "$90,160" and insert "$75,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 56, under the section of "fruit and shade tree insects," in line 9, I move to strike out "$447,645" and insert "$400,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 57, in line 7, under the section dealing with cotton insects, I move to strike out "$272,820" and insert "$200,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the same page, page 57, under "taxonomy and interrelations of insects," in line 15, I move to strike out "$234,930" and insert "$200,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 79, under the item for control of spread of the pink boll worm, in line 16, strike out "$430,400" and insert "$375,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 80, line 4, under the item for control of spread of Japanese beetle, to strike out "$375,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$350,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to. Is there objection to reconsideration? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. That completes the amendments I have offered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the appropriate place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Georgia offers the following amendment: On page 85, after line 13, to insert:

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT CORPORATIONS

For carrying into effect the provisions of Public Resolution No. 11, Seventy-second Congress, approved March 3, 1932, there is hereby appropriated $10,000,000, to be immediately available, of which amount not to exceed 2 per cent shall be available for expenses of administration, including the appointment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing, purchase of law books and books of reference, and other necessary expenses.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has pending a proposal. I do not know whether he desires to press it or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment in regard to the appropriation for the control of grasshoppers was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. As Senators who are championing the proposal are temporarily out of the Chamber, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Black	Bulow	Costigan
Austin	Blaine	Byrnes	Couzens
Bailey	Borah	Capper	Cutting
Bankhead	Bratton	Carey	Dale

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask that the pending question be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the Senator from Utah to reconsider the vote whereby the so-called grasshopper item, page 85, line 14, was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Oregon whether, unless there is objection to a reconsideration, the amendment may not be allowed to come before the Senate for such action as it may see fit to take?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] has just entered the Chamber, and I prefer that the query of the Senator from Utah be addressed to him.

Mr. KING. I have no desire, of course, to prevent proper debate. I was just asking the Senator in charge of the bill whether there would be any objection to unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of this item.

Mr. NORBECK. The grasshopper appropriation?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. NORBECK. I would do anything to accommodate the Senator from Utah, but he would not expect me to agree to that.

Mr. KING. It is obvious that the Senator does not agree to everything I ask him, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion proposed by the Senator from Utah to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate agreed to the amendment of the committee on page 85, line 14, the grasshopper item.

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. This matter was discussed a little the other day, but some Senators are now present who were not here at that time.

An unexpected plague of grasshoppers spread over the country and devastated large areas. One can drive a hundred miles in the northwestern section of the country without seeing any sign of a crop.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORBECK. In just a moment I will answer any questions to the best of my ability.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I yielded for a question, but as I have the floor I hope the Senator will withhold his remarks and not make a speech in my time. I shall not be long.

Mr. NORBECK. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not understand he was on the floor to make a speech. If he is, I want to listen to his speech.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator whether he would consent to an amendment cutting down this appropriation to $1,000,000?

Mr. NORBECK. I rose to answer the Senator from Utah. The department has said that it will take $3,000,000 to handle this matter, and they are proposing to appropriate a little less than that. That is their own statement, which appears in the record. It is a good deal like destroying any other pest; if part of it is to be left to breed the next year, the destruction is hardly worth while. The idea is to get after them and destroy them.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I say to the Senator that it is also true that this appropriation is bottomed upon an estimate of the number of grasshoppers which will come into being this spring, and, as I understand the matter, the experts of the Department of Agriculture have said that this sum will not be needed if we have some bad weather.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator is mistaken in that. The appropriation is based upon the estimate of the number of acres infested which have to be covered, it being realized full well that there may be a 90 per cent hatch or a 10 per cent hatch, but that it takes about the same amount of poison to spread over the land affected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland will permit me, I would like to ask the Senator from South Dakota whether out in the grasshopper section of the country there has been the same cold weather we have had here in Washington the last day or two. Will not all those grasshoppers which the Senator said the other day had been hatched be killed by the extreme cold and ice?

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the Senator misunderstood me the other day. When I spoke about the number of eggs to the square foot, and so on, I stated that it was too early for them to hatch. If they had been hatched, and then the bad weather had come on immediately, it would have been very destructive; but they were not hatched.

Mr. McKELLAR. The other day the Senator said that a great many had already been hatched.

Mr. NORBECK. No; I said they were there. The Senator was asking whether they were there or not. I said they were there in egg form, but the eggs had not hatched yet.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not doubt that there is need for some effort to curtail the grasshopper plague in the States referred to, but we are not in normal times now. Yesterday in the city of Detroit four people were killed and 60 wounded in a food riot participated in by those desiring to get work. Already our Federal Government has a deficit of about $2,000,000,000, and every dollar we appropriate means that much more in taxation.

It does seem to me that $1,400,000 appropriated for grasshopper relief at this time is in the nature of extravagance. I would like to vote for some appropriation to help curtail or minimize the effect of the grasshopper blight in these States, but certainly we have not $1,400,000 now to expend for that purpose.

When the new tax bill comes before Congress it will be found to be very burdensome. People are having difficulty in making ends meet now. These appropriations may be fine in normal times, when we are prosperous and able to stand them, but I do not think we can stand them now.

Business, individuals, agriculture, all lines of industry, are all finding it very hard to carry on, and yet we are going to tax the people more than we would have to tax them because of these large appropriations.

I do not know how many grasshoppers there are, but assuming that there are 10,000,000 grasshoppers to be hatched this spring, that means 1 cent per grasshopper, if this appropriation goes through. Congress has already held that it does not feel like making appropriations out of the Treasury to help people who are subject to disease because of unemployment, because of lack of nourishment, because of lack of food, because of lack of shelter, but we are asked to appropriate a cent apiece for 10,000,000 grasshoppers.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I confess to the Senator that I do not know whether all this money is necessary or not. I think it is necessarily somewhat of a guess; but that we will need some of it, I have not a particle of doubt. Neither have I any doubt that the Senator's estimate of the number of grasshoppers that are going to be there to contend with is clearly erroneous. Again I probably can not do any better than he can in a guess, but my guess is that the number will be in the billions. There is no question that it will be in the billions instead of the millions.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe the Senator is right. I think if a grasshopper plague happens again, as we all fear it may, perhaps the number will be in the billions.

Mr. NORRIS. There are two kinds of grasshoppers, both of which do a great deal of damage. One kind is the grasshoppers that are born in the very place where they do the damage. They are not so destructive as the grasshopper that is migratory. When the latter kind come, in the course of a few hours every living plant is destroyed. They come in great swarms to such an extent that they hide the sun like a cloud; the sun can not be seen through them.

However, to be fair with the Senator the appropriation, as I understand it, is not intended to meet that kind of an emergency. I do not believe we could make any appropriation that would do that because we never know when those grasshoppers are coming and we do not know just where they will stop. They will cover a large territory in the morning, eat everything that is there that can be eaten, and probably leave before night. Whence they come and where they go seems to be only a matter of conjecture. It would be wrong, however, to say that the appropriation is intended to meet that kind of an emergency. It is not so intended. I do not know how we could meet it. It may never happen again, but it has happened in large portions of the West covering entire counties. It is more destructive than a hailstorm, more destructive than a cyclone, because it does not leave standing a single thing that can be eaten. It destroys everything and does it in the course of a day or so.

The grasshoppers this item is intended to eradicate are very destructive in some communities in some years when everything is favorable to them, but do not go so far as the other calamity. They may destroy a crop completely. Then there will be no wheat crop, not a bushel of wheat on a thousand acres. The grasshoppers may leave some straw, but that is about all. The corn crop is sometimes destroyed in the same way. Those grasshoppers are hatched in the very locality where they do the damage. I suppose it is impossible to say now, if we had a locality infested with them, where as the Senator from South Dakota said the eggs are very thick, where billions are apt to be hatched out, and where there had been a heavy frost, whether this remedy would have destroyed most of them.

Mr. TYDINGS. One thought I had in mind in asking the Senator from South Dakota if he would not consent to some reduction in the item was that where money has been appropriated for purposes of this kind I do not believe there ever has been, or if so, very rarely an unexpended balance that went back into the Treasury. The thought I had in mind was not to minimize the importance of the appropriation, but it looked to me so large, $1,450,000, that it seemed to me if we cut it down somewhat, perhaps the work would be done more efficiently with less money than it would be done with an appropriation of this magnitude. I also thought that even though only $1,000,000 were needed, if we should appropriate $1,450,000, it would in all probability all be spent, particularly in a campaign year. I want to have the money used for grasshopper purposes and not for other purposes.

I do not doubt for a moment that a good case can be made out to justify some appropriation for the purpose, but I submit to the Senator from South Dakota—and it is not pleasant for me to oppose anything that he wants—that $1,450,000 for the eradication of a pest of this kind in a single year is a very, very large sum of money. We are not in normal times. The Ways and Means Committee in the House has had a very difficult task to bring in a tax bill that would not put such a burden upon the American people that they could not bear it with the depression such as it is. Every dollar that we can save at this end of the Capitol means that much less of a deficit or that much less taxation.

It is very hard for many of our cities to make ends meet. I do not want to pit the country against the cities. They are both entitled to fair treatment. But in our big cities the community funds are being dissipated very rapidly. In many of the cities people are living in houses because of the kindness of landlords. In other cases the community fund is called upon to pay the rent in order that the people may have a bare shelter over their heads. Now, to spend money in cases like this, to increase the deficit and increase the amount of new taxation which we will have to place upon the people, is something that we should go about doing very, very reluctantly. I would not stand in the way of an adequate appropriation, but $1,000,000 is a lot of money. One million dollars is a tremendous sum of money in times like this. Does not the Senator from South Dakota feel that with $1,000,000, with the increased efficiency which should be brought about in its application in times like these, as much can be done, generally speaking, as for $1,450,000?

I do not want to stand in the way of giving the Senator protection from the grasshopper pest out in his community, but how can we vote such terrific sums for purposes of this kind when people are storming the gates of industrial establishments crying for work and demanding food and shelter? We ought to reduce to a minimum all appropriations of this kind. If we do not do it, we are going to be called upon to vote for new taxation upon the poor and the masses in the form of a sales tax which will be necessary because we have not been provident enough in passing upon appropriations for the eradication of these pests and diseases. I appeal to the Senator to try to meet us halfway, those of us who want to go along with him in the matter, and not ask for this very large appropriation at this time.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator asks me to go half way. That is the way we have gone and that is why the proposition is here on this basis. We are going halfway. The department has said it will cost $3,000,000 to exterminate the grasshopper pest. They are of the opinion that there is no use exterminating this pest on one-half of the acreage and letting the remainder of the acreage go untouched.

Mr. TYDINGS. Without reflecting on the men who made up the estimate, most of them have jobs for life at very good salaries. They are very much interested in the single purpose of their work, namely, the killing off and eradication of all the scales and pests and diseases which affect plant life. It occurs to me that those men have asked for this large appropriation without due regard to the general situation. I think they are so anxious to kill off these pests that quite often in their desire to accomplish their main objective they lose all sense of the need for money for other purposes.

After all, this estimate comes to us from men who are primarily concerned in this work. It is not as if all of us understood it and got a detached estimate which would fit into the whole picture of the entire country, but we are getting the estimate from men who are devoting their lives to this one phase of human activity—the eradication of plant disease. I can not believe that $1,500,000 is necessary to do this work.

Mr. NORBECK. A much smaller sum would have done it last year, of course, before the grasshoppers got spread over such a large area. Probably a much smaller amount will be required this year than if they were to increase and spread again over an increasingly large area. The estimates are based on the available experience. A real effort made at extermination here and there is successful in some places and not in other places where the work got started later. In view of the general situation and realizing the condition of the Treasury, it was agreed that the Government should put up only one-half of the entire amount deemed necessary for this work.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator that I realize that, already having given ground in the matter of the amount demanded, he would be reluctant to give more ground; but let me point out to him the fact that this one appropriation alone will cost each man, woman, and child in the country a penny. When we add to that penny the other pennies for the other plant provisions contained in the bill, we soon have 5 cents for each man, woman, and child in the country. While that is small, those pennies which are added one to the other pretty soon mean a dollar for each man, woman, and child in the country. Then the Ways and Means Committee in the House and the Finance Committee in the Senate have got to raise that dollar by taxation. It is only a pittance, this penny from each man, woman, and child in the country, but it is the combination of the pennies that makes government extravagant.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Getting right down to practical conditions, I would like to inquire whether this is a year-round operation, or whether the work is to be done during certain months of the year?

Mr. NORBECK. It is done within a very limited period in the spring of the year.

Mr. FLETCHER. The question is whether or not $3,000,000 can be efficiently and economically spent within that time. In other words, it will take a tremendous number of men and a tremendous amount of work to use up $3,000,000 during the spring months.

Mr. NORBECK. Not when the Senator considers the number of States involved, which have to be taken care of. The Senator must remember that this is not limited to the State of South Dakota.

Mr. FLETCHER. How many States are involved?

Mr. NORBECK. There are 5 or 6 or 7 where the grasshoppers got started last year. It is estimated that only a part of these will be involved this year. I assure the Senator that only a small part of the appropriation goes to my State.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand; but there is $1,450,000 to be contributed by the Federal Government, and the States are to pay just as much, which means a total of almost $3,000,000. What occurs to me is whether $3,000,000 can be efficiently and economically spent during these few months by any department of the Government. I do not care how many people are engaged in the work, that is quite an undertaking.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator agrees with me that unless we cover the entire area with poison, we have not accomplished so much good.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is it the poison that costs so much?

Mr. NORBECK. It is estimated that the poison will cost one-half and the work of spreading it the other half. That is approximately the estimate.

Mr. TYDINGS. The States furnish the labor to spread it, and the Government furnishes the poison.

Mr. FLETCHER. A great many people can be employed for that amount of money and an enormous amount of poison can be bought for that amount of money.

Mr. NORBECK. The word " enormous " does not cover it. This matter has been computed on the acreage basis and the departments know what it will take. No one realizes better than I do that adding 5 cents per capita to the already heavy burdens of the people is a hard thing to do, but I believe that a year ago when it was proposed to give back $216,000,000 of income taxes that had already been credited on the books of the big income-tax payers there was no protest. They had collected it from the consumer all along the whole line, and the Senate voted to give back that $216,000,000, which is almost $2 per capita. Where did we hear any protest about that? When we talk about 5 cents per capita and it applies to the great agricultural Northwest, then we hear the arguments in protest.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I was not responsible for the return of that money.

Mr. NORBECK. How did the Senator vote on that question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe we had no record vote; but if we had had such a vote, I should have voted for it, assuming the taxes to have been erroneously paid. As I understand the matter, I do not doubt that in cases the line might have been very closely drawn, but that bill came before us upon the report of the Treasury Department that these taxes had been paid in error.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator is talking about refunds. I am talking about rebates. Aside from refunds it was voted that the tax reduction should be retroactive, and of that amount $216,000,000 were returned to the taxpayers. I think the Senator is in error as to there not being a record vote. I think a record vote was had.

Mr. TYDINGS. If there was a record vote, I think I would be recorded as voting to reduce taxation. That is what I am trying to do now—to prevent the reimposition of those taxes which we took off at the last session. However, I do not want to get into that field.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator realizes that the taxes had already been collected from the consuming and producing public at the time when the rebate was given. This rebate was just giving so much money back to those who had big profits from their business. It was simply a gift.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator from South Dakota that there are a number of Senators on both sides of the aisle who want him to have this appropriation, but what I am trying——

Mr. NORBECK. Do not make it personal, because it covers a number of States. I am speaking for only one State.

Mr. TYDINGS. The States, we will say, that are afflicted by this pest; but does not the Senator feel that $1,450,000 at a time like this for the eradication of the grasshopper is rather an unusually large appropriation?

Mr. NORBECK. The condition which exists in the States affected is a very unusual one. I will admit that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to vote for some lesser sum; and I was hoping the Senator would agree to take a million dollars and save $450,000 to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. NORBECK. It might not be a saving; it might turn out to be an unwise thing to do. As I have said to the Senator, if this work had been done last year, it could have been done for much less money, because since then the pest has spread over a large area.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator that if only a million dollars are needed, and a million and a half dollars are appropriated, it will all be expended. The Senator knows that as well as I do.

Mr. NORBECK. I do not agree to that at all, although I will admit that the departments generally spend all the appropriations we give them.

Mr. TYDINGS. If they have so much with which to do the work, they base their whole plan upon its complete expenditure.

I am not going to detain the Senate further. The Senator seems reluctant to give any ground at all. May I ask him if he would accept a million and a quarter dollars?

Mr. NORBECK. The Agricultural Department estimates the cost to be $3,000,000. The appropriation in question is less than half that.

The Senator surely realizes the reduced earning power of agriculture for the last 11 or 12 years has made it impossible for the farmer to meet such an unusual situation. While a prosperous condition existed for many years through the industrial section, the farmer's earnings vanished, property values went down, banks failed, credit was a thing of the past.

The people of the Northwest do not like charity. They do not like to have Government help. They are like every other people; they prefer to be independent and help themselves. This they have done for a half century. They would continue to do it if they had not been robbed of their birthright.

The interference with economic law has robbed the farmer of his just dues. He has ceased to be a good customer of the factory, with the result that the factories are now shutting down. Unemployment is found in the cities, and both business and labor are beginning to wonder what the cause is. No one is so blind as he who does not want to see. This trouble has been coming on for a nearly a dozen years; the full force of it is just now striking us. The agricultural problem has come home to the city population; it is now felt in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and other cities.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator, I know, will be fair enough to concede that every dollar of new taxation that we put on the people in the form of a sales tax means that the resources of the Northwest and other parts of the country will be curtailed just that much.

Mr. NORBECK. I agree with that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Because there will be that much less purchasing power; it will be a relative proposition.

Mr. NORBECK. I agree that we can not have national prosperity until we restore the earning power of the average family. I am one of those who believe that the destruction of the earning power of the farmer is what stopped the factory and made trouble in the cities.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator, taking the small State of Maryland, for example, if he will look it over he will find that half its people live in cities and the other half live in the country. We have a farming industry in that State in which 50 per cent of our people are engaged.

Mr. NORBECK. I know that; and I recall when the Senator's former colleague complained about farmers of the Northwest asking the Government for help; but I call attention to the fact that the Legislature of Maryland was the first legislature in the United States to call on Congress to straighten out the agricultural problem. The appeal did not come from South Dakota; it came from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true. We saw what was coming and tried to help the Senator's section, as we are trying to do again to-day by cutting down this appropriation from a million and a half dollars to a lower sum that is more in line with conditions in these times.

Mr. NORBECK. There is just one thing that we can not afford and that is this depression.

Mr. TYDINGS. I certainly hope this appropriation will be decreased to some extent. In times like these to make an appropriation of $1,450,000 for grasshopper eradication, while people are hungry, while in our big cities industrial plants are stormed and lives are lost and many are injured, and the Congress refuses to take any part in lending aid to the States for human beings, I think unwise. It strikes me as unsound to lend aid of this character, to the extent of a million and a half dollars, at a time when everybody is having a great deal of difficulty in making ends meet.

I should like to vote for some appropriation to keep this pest in check, but to appropriate on such a broad scale as provided in the bill seems to me both unsound and unwise.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I sympathize very much with Members of the Congress who are trying to keep down appropriations, and it is very difficult to vote for any appropriation. Having canceled so many of the debts of foreign governments we are called upon to raise $500,000,000 a year to pay the interest on the debts thus canceled. That sum, together with the $500,000,000 which was voted to help the banks and the railroads, and the $250,000,000 which, through the moratorium, was voted to aid the banks of London and New York, makes a total added to the Budget this year of $1,250,000,000. That is a tremendous sum of money in these days—more than a billion dollars—a thousand times this item. But having spent $1,250,000,000 on a lot of people who do not produce anything, it seems to me that we can spend a million and a half dollars to protect some of the producers who produce the wealth of the country. If we do not protect the agricultural interests which produce the wealth, then we will soon have no wealth on which to base appropriations to take care of the other people whom we have taken care of. So I hope that the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was adopted will be defeated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] first to ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. NORBECK. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the Senator from Utah, having given notice of a motion to reconsider, the question is on the motion proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had hoped my genial friend from South Dakota would have consented to the request which I made. Not having done so, it compels, of course, a vote. It was my purpose, if the Senator had consented, to move to amend the item by striking out "$1,450,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000,000"; and, if the motion to reconsider prevails, I shall follow that motion with a motion to amend along the line just indicated. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Cutting	Kendrick	Schall

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I shall be willing to vote for the motion to reconsider in order to insure a complete debate. Such is usually my policy, and particularly so when the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desires a reconsideration, although I shall vote against reducing the amount.

I have listened with interest and admiration to the remarks of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and likewise to the remarks of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. In my judgment—and I am not in a humor this morning to distribute bouquets—the country needs more men in public life like Senators KING and TYDINGS, although I do not agree with them on this particular item. I believe that they have misconceived the vast importance of this particular subject.

Mr. President, only the most optimistic person, only the person who has rainbow tints in his spectacles, feels assured that mankind instead of insects shall inherit the earth. It is indeed a wide-open question as to whether mankind or the insects shall inherit this earth. There are over 4,000,000 different kinds of insects in the world, and they are all the open, aggressive competitors of mankind for the world's food supply. During all the ages, one of the marvels of this world has been the complexity, the ingenuity of insect life. Those who have given study to the subject will reach the conclusion that I do not overstate the matter when I say that it is quite uncertain, biologically, whether mankind or the insect shall ultimately survive.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ASHURST. I do.

Mr. KING. I think perhaps there may be something in what the Senator has said; and yet, with the Senator's broad knowledge, especially of biology and cognate questions, he knows that nature balances things pretty well, and that if we did not destroy the birds and other destructive forces which nature creates, the insects that we are combating now would be destroyed by the forces which nature provides. We are unbalancing, we are producing disequilibrium, when nature works for the purpose of maintaining an equilibrium for the preservation of life and for biological development.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in all my experience I have never encountered in public life an intellect that is more truly a philosophical one than that of the learned Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I say this without any intent to blow upon him the incense of flattery. I have talked with him in private and have debated with him in public, and he is correct in his conclusion that if and when we disturb the balance of nature, she will repay; she will exact her compensation. Nature gives warning, indeed, but she strikes the blow first and gives the warning later. That is the way she imposes her penalties. It is harsh but is her inexorable law. In this case, perchance the penalty is the grasshopper. The destruction somewhere of the birds which fed upon these insects may have led to the enormous number of these insects. When Frederick the Great was asked what produced a certain plague of insects, he replied, "The scarcity of birds."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ASHURST. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator speaks of the grasshopper I should like to tell him, if he will permit me, a little incident that happened to one of my neighbors who was trying to grow an orchard.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. The orchard was being destroyed by grasshoppers; so this neighbor built a chicken-tight fence around his orchard and brought a large number of turkeys and put them in there. If the Senator has had any experience in raising turkeys, he realizes that a turkey can eat as much as a pig; but it was not long after he had those turkeys in the orchard before every turkey would duck his head every time a grasshopper came anywhere in the vicinity. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from Nebraska who has demonstrated to the Senate and the country that whilst he is a profound lawyer he is capable also of brilliant and rippling humor upon occasion. The subject of grasshoppers easily leads to jocose remarks.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is quite correct in his statement that the people are now very heavily taxed. That is unfortunately true. Taxes constitute one of the burdens that civilization must bear. If somebody will discover a plan or remedy whereby we may go through this life without being heavily taxed, I shall cheerfully subscribe to the dissemination of his propaganda. I sometimes marvel at the patience of the taxpayers themselves that they should so uncomplainingly make so many sacrifices and deny to themselves in so many instances the privileges, rights, reposes, and opulences of civilization in order to meet and satisfy the ever-present taxgatherer.

The hearts and the purposes of the American people are sound and patriotic; doubtless the people feel that taxes are part of the common plan of civilization and that we must pay for all this complexity of life that we brought upon our race.

He is a real statesman and a brave man who now tries to lessen the load of taxes.

I hope Senators will forgive me for the obtuse, or the cheap pun, rather, of saying that this speech, if noted at all, may go down in history as my "bug speech." I hope Senators will not think me obsessed when I say I am of opinion that the question of insect life, the question of "bugs," is more important and more vital than we are inclined to consider.

The danger from certain insect invasions is acutely emphasized by reason of the automobile and the airplane. An insect may alight upon an airplane wing in Mexico or Cuba, for instance, and in a few hours it is in the interior of the United States. These insect pests are not, as a rule, indigenous to our country.

Most of them came from foreign countries. Let us see whence they came. The cotton boll weevil is from Mexico, coming, according to theory, in egg form. The corn borer is from Europe. The gypsy moth is from Japan. The Mediterranean fruit fly was landed in Florida from some point in the West Indies; and I might go on at some length reciting what experts have said as to whence these insect pests came.

To give an illustration—and I shall be brief—of the endurance, the vitality, of these insects, let it be remembered that you can take the boll weevil himself and immerse him in water and he will survive 21 days under water.

As to whether or not $1,000,000 or $1,400,000 will be sufficient for this particular purpose I do not know. I do not know that the speech I am now making will be agreed to by my constituents; but I feel so keenly that I am willing, on such an important subject, to transcend the views of my own constituents.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. In such a matter as deciding what are the best methods of combating these insects, who, in the Senator's opinion, is best qualified to tell us what is necessary?

Mr. ASHURST. If I want to know how to farm, I might go to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to learn. Then, strangely enough, if I wish to know the derivation of words, I might go to that same Senator—the farmer-scholar. If I seek legal advice, I shall probably be found sitting at the feet of the learned Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the chairman of our Judiciary Committee; and so on. I go usually to those who are especially equipped to deal with a particular subject when I require information on that particular subject.

Mr. SMITH. Who, in this case, are the experts of our Agricultural Department?

Mr. ASHURST. I consult the entomologists when I want to learn something about insect life.

Mr. SMITH. The point I desire to call to the Senator's attention is this: We are spending millions of dollars on the department that we have set up to watch the development of these pests and to experiment as to the best manner of their control. None of us are qualified to say how much money it will take. None of us are qualified to say just what are the chemicals in combination that may be applied to save these threatened and doomed homes in the West. Why should we come here, after we have set up these people and appropriated so much money, and impeach our own departments and set our opinion against their opinion, when we know nothing about the matter, and when they, as honest American citizens, are charged with the responsibility of doing the best that is possible for the situation?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, to conclude, I wish it distinctly understood that I am in sympathy with movements to reduce expenditures and thereby reduce taxation. I am not qualified to say precisely whether a million or a million four hundred thousand dollars may be necessary for this purpose; but the latter amount has been reported from the Senate Committee on Appropriations. While I listened, and not without instruction and profit, to the able speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] respecting this subject, I feel now that my vote should be cast in such a way as to preclude the possibility of a doubt and thus save food supplies from the ravages of these grasshopper pests.

So far as I know, in my own State we have never been seriously disturbed by grasshoppers; but our agriculturists, and especially our sheep growers and cattle raisers, have been ever since I can remember, and are now, disturbed by a pest. It belongs to the animal, not the vegetable, kingdom. It is called the prairie dog. It has none of the noble qualities of the domestic dog. The prairie-dog family is capable of unimaginable fecundity. It breeds enormously. One prairie dog will consume or destroy more grass in a week than will two bullocks.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. ASHURST. I do.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator intend to ask an additional appropriation for poisoned bran for prairie dogs?

Mr. ASHURST. I had hoped that my remarks were rather above any idea of securing, by reason of this speech, any appropriation for my own State. I am not seeking any. I have not asked any. I am speaking only from the general viewpoint.

The Department of Agriculture has made some headway in combating the prairie-dog pests.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I thought the Senator from Arizona was going to say that in view of the fact that all this poison might not be needed for grasshoppers, he might like to have what was left over for the prairie dogs.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, no, Mr. President; I do not want "left overs" from any bill, person, or institution. I never ask for "left overs." I want the original thing in the original package and not a "left over."

Mr. BINGHAM. No one will dispute that, and I am sure that the Senator from Arizona can be trusted to look after the prairie dogs and the unfortunate citizens of Arizona who have to spend their time battling with them morning, noon, and night. I only wish that he had put in the necessary funds to aid in this noble battle against the prairie dogs.

Mr. President, I made a few remarks the other day with regard to the facts that while we were running behind at the rate of $8,000,000 a day we had casually that afternoon voted $1,450,000 "to feed poison bran to unborn grasshoppers." Since then I have received a very interesting letter from Judge Van Buren Perry, judge of the circuit, fifth judicial circuit, Aberdeen, S. Dak., which is so interesting and the pictures accompanying it so striking that I am going to read a paragraph from the letter. Judge Perry says:

> This plague, which last year devastated an area greater than all New England, is more destructive than flood, more appalling than fire, and more ravaging and heart-rending than pestilence. The loss from flood is usually healed within a year; prairie and forest fire is rarely so widespread and usually puts a merciful, quick end to the suffering of its victims; pestilence seldom affects both man and beast and usually leaves many survivors; but grasshoppers in swarms, in a temporarily impoverished agricultural community, leave both man and beast to starve, and lay eggs for a repetition next year.
> In case you do not know how utterly they destroy all vegetation, I inclose two photographs which I took last fall in central South Dakota, showing the remains of cornfields which were shoulder and head high a few weeks before the invasion. These fields were nearly 100 miles apart and are typical of all that lay between. Every spear of vegetation, including weeds and thistles, was destroyed.
> Before these grasshoppers themselves starved, each female laid tens of thousands of eggs to hatch this spring. Even though a kind Providence should provide climatic conditions adverse to hatching, that hatch would produce enough hoppers to cover your entire State a foot deep. The weather most unfavorable to hatching has never destroyed the whole hatch. The use of poisoned bran is the most effective prevention known, and the cost is prohibitive to practically all farmers.

Mr. President, after looking at these very extraordinary pictures and reading this letter from Judge Perry, I feel like apologizing for the remark I made the other day. I thought I knew something about grasshoppers. We certainly are not free from them in my section of the country, but we have never had anything like this, and I feel sure that if the citizens of my State were able to see these pictures of the country that has been devastated by those insects, they would not object to an additional burden of taxation to try to prevent such a devastation during the coming year.

I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Utah to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, because the Senator has stated that in case there is a reconsideration, he will move that the amount be made $1,000,000. If reconsideration of the vote meant striking out the item entirely, I should vote against it but in view of the Senator's intention to move the amount to be made $1,000,000, and in view of the fact that we are uncertain as to the amount which may be actually needed, and my willingness, in case a further amount is needed, to put it in a deficiency bill later on, I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Utah. But I shall be very glad indeed to aid in giving some adequate relief to people who suffered this truly terrible devastation during the past year.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. NYE. As one coming from one of the States which has been injured in no uncertain way by the grasshopper, and a territory that is further threatened this year, I can not help expressing my appreciation of the splendid attitude which the Senator from Connecticut has just voiced. But I am forced to ask him why, if he considers that this fight that is to be made on the grasshopper is worth $1,000,000, it is not worth $1,450,000. If it is considered that this greater amount is the amount required more adequately to cope with the situation, why does the Senator insist upon a reduction in the amount?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota the other day succeeded in having stricken from the bill a provision that was put in at the time the Budget estimate was received, if my memory serves me correctly—and the Senator from Oregon will correct me if I am not correct—the provision that none of the money should be used for providing poisoned bran to counties which were able to purchase it themselves, but only to counties which had no funds with which to purchase it. My recollection is that that provision was in the recommendation of the Budget.

The Senator from North Dakota making the plea that this might lead counties to say that they were hard up, and that perhaps they were bankrupt for the time being, and ought to be stricken out, led the Senate to strike the provision out.

I am glad to say to the Senator from North Dakota that if he will have reconsidered the vote by which that was stricken out, so that the appropriation shall apply only to counties which really can not afford to buy their own poisoned bran, I shall be glad to vote for the full amount, with the understanding that only the part is used which is actually needed.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, if the proposal made by the Senator from Connecticut were to be accepted, we would have in the Northwest section of the country a situation which would find some counties which, though able to afford a measure of relief themselves, nevertheless would refrain from any participation in a prevention program, while neighboring counties, which might not be able to qualify and could show that they were not able to finance such a battle themselves, would go ahead with their fight against the grasshopper, and yet as the result of it all nothing would be accomplished, by reason of the fact that among them was a county which was not making any fight at all. For that reason it was felt that the provision in this appropriation bill should be such that all counties in a given area would be putting forth the same effort to accomplish the end of this pest or to hold it at a minimum, at least. Certainly I could not for a moment agree to a reconsideration of the particular feature, because I think its purpose was so important as to have merited the consideration which the Senate gave it only a few days ago.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to ask the Senator whether he can name any county in the Northwest, in any of those States, which is really able to fight a grasshopper pest, or any other kind of a pest, right now?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I doubt the ability of counties to carry on at this particular time. But more than that, I doubt the ability of the Secretary of Agriculture to sit down and determine what counties are able and what counties are not able to carry on that sort of a fight themselves. In other words, the Secretary of Agriculture would virtually be in a position of asking each county to file a pauper's affidavit before any help would be available to it.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is it not a fact that in all of those counties in all the States of the Northwest there are long lists of delinquent taxes on file, even tax rebellions going on in several of those States against tax sales at this time?

Mr. NYE. That is true, Mr. President, and I think that at no time in the history of that section of the country have delinquent taxes been as great as they are now.

Mr. BROOKHART. When the question, in the reducing of taxes, is the question of reducing taxes on the country at large, which is able to pay, or reducing them in the localities which are not able to pay.

Mr. NYE. That is largely true.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Government undertakes to exterminate this pest, does it not seem practicable or advisable for it to try to determine what counties might or might not be able to pay? Suppose in instances there should be a mistake, and a county were not able, and therefore did not use the same precaution or the same method of extermination which the Government used, there would be enough of the insects breeding within that locality to nullify all that had been done.

Mr. NYE. Precisely so; and a great injustice would thereby be done in those counties where serious effort had been made to accomplish extermination.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss this question, because I am in full sympathy with those who suffer and are threatened with a disaster unspeakable which comes from the ravages of this insect. But I want just to call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that when not an insect, not a natural cause, but a purely speculative cause threatened nonproducers, not men who add a dollar to the wealth of this country but those who simply manipulate the dollars of this country, when they were threatened with some loss in the value of their securities we did not hesitate to make arrangements for the appropriation of $2,000,000,000 and went further still in another bill and provided that certain laws should be so modified that certain securities should become eligible for discount, in order to increase the facilities by which business could be carried on. But here we are carping over an appropriation of a million and a half dollars to try to save the homes of those who have nothing but their crops to depend on for a livelihood; and when this pest comes, it is not a drop in the value of certain stocks and bonds and securities, it is the wiping out of the hope of even a modest living.

We stand here and question the wisdom of saving a vast territory of our country from threatened destruction of the hopes, of the homes, and the means of support of the inhabitants who live meagerly enough, God knows, when there is no grasshopper, who have little enough of the comforts of life and none of the luxuries; yet because they are not organized to make themselves felt at election time we stand here in the cowardly attitude of leaving this vast army who feed and clothe and shoe us to the mercy of both the natural and the artificial disasters which threaten.

Mr. President, I am going to vote against a reconsideration. Perhaps I did wrong in voting for the bill appropriating $2,000,000,000. It must be remembered that in the consideration of that bill I offered an amendment to appropriate $200,000,000 to help those who feed us to be taken from the roads and the streets and put where they might earn a living. They have no place where they can borrow. They have no security to guarantee a loan, except the current crop which they propose to produce. Here on the floor of the Senate my amendment was beaten down to $50,000,000, while the Senate voted to give $2,000,000,000 to those who do not produce one dollar of real wealth in this country. The conferees on that measure so worded it as to make possible the adoption of my original amendment, and yet now, with the crops being planted, the money which we appropriated has not yet reached them. We have appropriated $2,000,000,000 to guarantee that the coupon cutters may make a crop, but we can only spare $50,000,000 to the grasscutters of the country.

No, Mr. President; I am going to vote to try to save the farmer from the unspeakable menace of this dread insect in the West. I am going to vote for every dollar deemed necessary by those whom we charged with the responsibility of finding out how much is necessary and what in their judgment can be done to relieve these people from the dreaded insects and the unspeakable conditions under which they are living. I am not here to question how much it will take because I do not know, but I shall joyfully and gladly vote for an adequate appropriation to bring some ray of hope and some security to those who have thus been beleaguered by this pest.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] seems to confuse the grasscutters and the grasshoppers with the bulls and the bears, if one may judge by his current comment. I had a letter the other day from an old friend of mine in Charles Mix County, S. Dak., stating that the livestock and even the poultry is dying from starvation as a result of the grasshopper pest. I do not know how substantial the proposed provision is, but if it promises substantial results I think the doubt ought to be resolved in favor of action and protection and prevention. Of course, any one infected county would be a plague spot from which the pest might enter neighboring counties. For that reason I am inclined to sustain the contention made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, my good friend from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who is very much interested in agriculture and is probably as good a friend as the farmer has in the Senate, has just pointed out that we ought to take the advice of the Department of Agriculture. Let me suggest to him that it was only about six months ago that the Department of Agriculture was advocating the plowing under of every third row of cotton.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken. That was done by the wonderful Farm Board which we created. Thank God, the Department of Agriculture has sense enough not to recommend a thing of that kind. Do not make that charge against the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. TYDINGS. So far as I know, the Department of Agriculture has said, through the lips of its Secretary, that the acreage planted ought to be curtailed in the interest of agriculture. In many States recently the legislature has been called upon to pass upon a proposal to limit the planting of cotton because there was so much cotton that there was no market for it. The Department of Agriculture for some time past has advocated less acreage in all crops. Secretary of Agriculture Hyde has made a number of public addresses incorporating that idea, and yet here we are with an appropriation whose purpose is to produce more crops per acre. Where is the logic in any proposal such as those two divergent views would seem to present?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NYE. I wish the Senator from Maryland could more clearly understand what area is infested by the grasshopper and what wheat we are trying to save from the grasshopper. It is the hard spring wheat. There is not one bushel of surplus of hard spring wheat produced in the country.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would interrupt the Senator long enough to observe that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] himself pointed out just a moment ago that these grasshoppers have attacked orchards; that in the very short while they put turkeys in the orchards behind fences to eat the grasshoppers, and that the grasshoppers came into the orchard so rapidly that the turkeys were kept busy dodging the flying grasshoppers. It is not only hard spring wheat that is involved, because we know over in Maryland, for example, that the grasshoppers attack all kinds of agricultural products.

Mr. NYE. I merely wanted to have the attention of the Senator called to the fact that the center of attack is in the hard spring wheat belt.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that is correct. I did not mean to reflect upon the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] in my statement, because I say sincerely that I believe not a man in this body is any more sincerely and genuinely interested in helping the agriculturists of the country than he is. I was simply pointing out that the announced policy of the Department of Agriculture has been to advise the farmers time and time again that there is too much wheat and too much cotton and too much corn produced and that the way to better prices is by curtailment of the crop.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. There is all the difference in the world between curtailment and utter destruction, not only of wheat but everything else on the premises. The two things are not parallel at all. I might be perfectly willing to curtail my cotton crop, but I do not want this pest to come in there and curtail it by eating up all the corn, oats, rye, barley, orchards, and everything else. I would like to have construction rather than destruction. The difference between the ravages of the grasshopper and orderly and sensible reduction is the difference between utter destruction and practical reduction.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I see the situation, what has happened in the industrial cities has happened on the farms. For a long while we appropriated millions and millions and millions of dollars dedicated to the single purpose of making two stalks grow where one had formerly grown. The idea was production. We industrialized agriculture to that extent. We sent to the farms all kinds of machinery and we have produced an abundance and a superabundance of everything that mankind consumes in the way of food.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Please let me finish my statement, and then I will yield to the Senator.

We have gone on doing that. What has been the result? We finally were faced with this problem, and from the Treasury of the United States $500,000,000 was appropriated in an effort to drive upward or to stabilize the prices. What has that effort resulted in accomplishing? I am told that if the Farm Board were to liquidate its holdings to-day, of the $500,000,000 appropriated to its use about $300,000,000 probably would find its way back into the Treasury and that $200,000,000 is gone beyond recall.

Furthermore, what is the effect of it? If it had worked out as intended, every farmer would have planted more next year than he planted this year. The result would have been further to increase production and thereby drive the man into bankruptcy and force his property to be sold for unpaid taxes. We are stabilizing the price, if at all, for agricultural products at less than the cost of production. What difference does it make if a man is forced to spend 10 cents to raise a bushel of produce which he sells for 9 cents? If we stabilize it at 9 cents, it does him no good whatever.

I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator is criticizing the Department of Agriculture for trying to make agriculture profitable and the Farm Board for trying to handle the surplus crop production, so I take it the Senator's method of restoring prosperity to the farmer would be to develop the grasshopper, the boll weevil, and the corn borer.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know that that is an accurate statement, but I may say that it is more sound than many of the theories for helping agriculture which I have heard advanced by some of our Iowa citizens.

Just what is the situation? We know there is a deficit in the Federal Treasury of about $2,000,000,000. We know there is more food in the country than there is demand for food or ability to buy and consume. We know that $500,000,000 appropriated to assist in the marketing of these food products has been wasted or lost to the extent of at least one-half of it in the effort so to do. We know that a new tax bill is going to be introduced levying a sales tax and increasing income taxes and inheritance taxes and all kinds of taxes. Yet we come here, in the face of this depression, and propose to appropriate $1,500,000 to kill off grasshoppers, when, in my judgment, half of that sum would work out substantially the same results, assuming that the plan was impregnated with reasonable administrative efficiency.

At any rate, if the plan works—and let us hope it does—and the grasshoppers are eradicated, it means more and more produce thrown on the market. It seems to me the average farmer in most of these so-called epidemics is well able to handle the matter just about as capably as the Federal Government can. If he is interested in bringing his crop into being he would buy the poison and put it out on the infested areas himself. Certainly, if he sits idly by and sees the grasshoppers multiply, he should not then come to the Federal Government and ask for appropriations on such a scale as this.

We know there has never been an appropriation of this kind which has been completely expended. We all know the system. Let us assume that all of the $1,450,000 is appropriated and only $1,200,000 is expended by next September, when the campaign would draw to a close for seasonal reasons. Politicians find out there is $250,000 of the appropriation which has not been spent, and they immediately suggest Bill Jones and Tom Smith to fill local jobs until the last dollar of it is taken from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. In regard to the methods by which the grasshoppers can be destroyed, the bulletin itself gives four. One of those is the destruction of their eggs by fall plowing or disking or harrowing. That is recommended where practicable. Of course, that is the very best method to be employed. If the farmers decline to do that, if they decline to take such steps, why should the Federal Government be called upon to make these enormous appropriations year after year, and especially when no man can tell six months ahead of time whether we are going to have a grasshopper plague or not? Nobody can tell when that is going to happen.

Mr. NORBECK. I invite the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the fact that the Department of Agriculture does not claim that fall plowing brings about complete extermination, but that the poison would have to be put out on the ground anyway.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is given as one of the four methods they recommend for dealing with the grasshopper. Of course, it requires cooperation of the community and we do not know whether we will get that or not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us follow the ramification of the expenditure through to its logical conclusion. We all know the interest rate on money borrowed by private concerns is directly related to the interest rate upon Government borrowing. If the Government pays 3 per cent to borrow its money, a railroad with a first-class bond issue would probably have to pay 5 per cent for its borrowing. If the Government rate is advanced to 4 per cent, the railroad would have to pay 6 per cent. If the Government rate goes up to 5 per cent, the railroad would probably have to pay 7 per cent. By these appropriations, small in themselves, but large in amount when added together, we force the Government to borrow more and more money, and thereby increase the interest rate for Government borrowings, which, reflected upon business borrowings, makes a higher interest return inevitable. All we are doing by these expenditures, beyond a needed extent, is directly to curtail in final result the borrowing power of the business interests of this country.

Mr. President, as I have said over and over again, I do not want to stand in the way of a reasonable attempt on the part of the Federal Government to eradicate this pest, but for an enterprise of this kind to appropriate $1,450,000 in times like these, with people hungry, with eight and a half million men unemployed, with 20,000,000 people dependent upon the unemployed, is little short of silly. I hope that the motion to reconsider will be adopted and that we may have an opportunity to offer some amendment to reduce this sum to such a figure as that it may be comprehended.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator seems to be for tax reduction. I want to ask if he is in favor of the new $1,000,000,000 shipbuilding program for the Navy?

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not seen the $1,000,000,000 shipbuilding program for the Navy, but I am in favor of voting appropriations to make our Navy second to none in the world until the time when disarmament on a greater scale is realized.

Mr. BROOKHART. Does the Senator think such a program will increase taxes?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly it will.

Mr. BROOKHART. And yet, after it shall have been built, should war come, such a Navy will not be fit even to fight grasshoppers.

Mr. TYDINGS. I know that a hundred battleships will end war victoriously twice as fast as 50 battleships will end it, and, for that matter, ten times as fast, and I am not going to sit here and see the United States with no Navy while all around us there is a ring of steel. I am not like the ostrich that sticks his head in the sand and sees nothing that goes on around him and thinks he is safe because of that silly attitude.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before we vote I want to read a very short statement from a Government bulletin in regard to grasshoppers. I read as follows:

On of the main points brought out in this study is the important rôle that temperature plays in the development of this insect. The time of hatching in the spring and the subsequent seasonal development are based on this factor. From year to year the abundance of this grasshopper can be more or less reliably foretold if a careful record of weather conditions during egg laying and hatching periods has been kept. Early spring hatches, caused by unusually high temperatures before May 1, when followed, as is often the case, by periods of cold, inclement weather, are unfavorable to this pest.

I digress here long enough to say that we have had that exact condition. We have had a very warm winter, the most unusually warm winter, I suppose, that perhaps the country has ever experienced; and if there is any egg hatching from warmth in the wintertime I have no doubt the Senator from South Dakota was correct the other day when he said that the eggs have already begun to be hatched. That was, of course, because of the warm weather. Recently there has been unparalleled cold weather all through that section of the country. We are just appropriating this money on a guess. Congress will be in session in May; it will be in session in June; and if there is a reason for combating grasshoppers at that time the matter can be brought before Congress. Unless we know something about the situation, there is no use appropriating this money in advance just on a guess that there may be grasshoppers this year.

The period of the first instar is the critical time, as the grasshopper in its subsequent instars is more hardy. Delayed hatching, due to late springs, often causes late damage by grasshoppers in sections where least expected. This was the case in eastern Montana during the summer of 1927. Here it was believed that there would be no damage from grasshoppers that summer, as few or none were to be seen during June. Little or no attention was therefore paid to the situation. The season, however, was late, and the eggs did not hatch until a month or so after the usual time. The farmers were not aware of the fact that a rather serious outbreak was in progress until considerable damage had been done. Their idea was that, since no grasshoppers had hatched by June 1, there would be no damage. It cost one farmer 60 acres of good certified seed alfalfa because he was not aware of the situation and did not maintain his usual vigilance. A knowledge of what to expect and where to look is more than half the battle in grasshopper control.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator inform us from what he is reading?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am reading from a bulletin of the Department of Agriculture, as I said in the beginning.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that bulletin prepared by one of the department's officials in Washington?

Mr. McKELLAR. The bulletin bears the caption "Technical Bulletin No. 190, July, 1930, United States Department of Agriculture."

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator believe it to be accurate?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would not read us anything he himself did not believe to be true, would he?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am reading it for the purpose of showing that when we turn this money over to the department we turn it over on a guess, and a very doubtful guess at that. The bulletin indicates that even the department officials who are going to spend the money are guessing about it.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not complaining about that at all; but I wanted to get the source of the Senator's information, and obtain his judgment as to whether he is giving us something he himself believes, and why he is trying to use it as evidence if he does not believe it. If he does believe it, then I wish he would answer himself in the various speeches he has made against maintaining bureaus here that are no good.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am opposed to maintaining bureaus that are no good.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator is using the arguments he gets from these bureaus to convince us of the facts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; quite the contrary; the Senator misunderstands why I am reading this pamphlet. My judgment is that everything that can be discovered about the grasshopper in the Senator's section of the country, or in any other section of the country, has already substantially been discovered.

Mr. NORRIS. How?

Mr. McKELLAR. The department has set forth exactly how this pest may be exterminated.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the farmers can get this bulletin, and from it learn how practically to manage and control the pest or the plague when it comes, what is the use of our spending money to send out there agents who are unfamiliar with that section of the country probably, unless they are appointed from the locality—and frequently when they are appointed from the locality they are not experts? Why should the Federal Government, after telling the farmers by these bulletins exactly how to control this plague, be called upon to spend additional money to send agents there to force them to accept the kind of control which the department has already suggested? We are going to do in this case probably just exactly what we have done in Florida in regard to the Mediterranean fruit fly. We sent Government agents down there who destroyed orange groves, some of them by poison, some by digging them up, and some by other means, and now the representatives from Florida in the Senate—and very properly so—say that these groves were destroyed improperly and the Government ought to pay for the groves thus destroyed. If the Government sends its agents to Nebraska, for instance, or to South Dakota, or to any other State, and puts poison on crops and destroys crops as well as grasshoppers, I am not so sure but that the Government, in good conscience, ought to make it good and pay for it, and I have no doubt the Senator from South Dakota would think so, too, and offer an amendment to the next appropriation bill for that purpose.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. I merely want to say that if the Senator will read the conditions of the appropriation he will find the Government is protected against that sort of thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that any law which Congress may pass can be repealed by the next Congress. Of course it is provided the Government shall not be responsible for damage to crops; but if the Senator from South Dakota were to come here next spring and tell us that during the preceding summer the agents of the Government, in order to get rid of grasshoppers, had destroyed large crops by improperly poisoning the ground on which the crops were growing, I have no doubt it would be a very appealing statement that he would make, and no doubt the Senate and probably the House of Congress would heed the appeal. We always do it; we have done it in the past and we will do it again. We will make it good to these farmers. It is not right for the Government to go there and put poison on their fields and destroy their crops without paying for the damage. That is precisely what has been done in Florida.

We spent $6,000,000 in an attempt to find the Mediterranean fruit fly that no human being has ever seen in Florida. The agents of the Government went down into Florida and dug up orange groves, and those whose orange groves they dug up have sent claims here against the Government. There was an amendment offered by one of the Senators from Florida, representing in a legislative way his constituents, to compensate the orchardists who are now making claims against the Government for the destruction of their groves in an attempt to eradicate the Mediterranean fruit fly. I can see that there is some ground for such claims. Suppose I am the owner of an orange grove in Florida and Government agents, without my request, come down there and dig up my orange grove in the pursuit of a fly which no human being has ever seen. I am not so sure but that I would be entitled to reparation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator alludes to the Mediterranean fruit-fly campaign in Florida?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not agree with him—although a good many people do—that there never were any such flies there. The department established the fact that that fly was there, and also claimed and asserted at the time—and have repeated since—that the most dangerous pest that ever infected the fruit of the country is the Mediterranean fruit fly. It is a terrible menace to the fruit industry generally, not only to citrus fruits but to other fruits and vegetables, as they claim. The State plant board and the State authorities and the people generally cooperated with the department in Washington in the effort to exterminate that fly as a great pest, a great menace to the fruit industry of the whole country, extending as far as California and other remote sections. So they instituted a quarantine against it and they took charge of the eradication work.

As a result of that work of eradication, I do not think any orange groves were actually dug up, as the Senator expresses it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, sir; some of them were dug up.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know that some trees were dug up—guavas and that sort of thing—but undoubtedly fruit in groves that had no infestation was destroyed. Fruit growing miles away from the infestation was absolutely destroyed, and then the Government experts instituted a quarantine so as to prohibit the marketing of the fruit. They extended that quarantine to what they called hosts—vegetables and wild stuff in the woods—and they conducted a campaign with reference to that. They never found the fly in any vegetables, although they did find flies, as they claimed and as they apparently demonstrated fully, because I saw flies in cages down there. I never saw any out in the open.

Mr. McKELLAR. The ones the Senator saw were dead flies, though.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; they were live flies. The Government agents were experimenting with them to see what they would do to grapefruit and oranges and other fruit and vegetables. They claimed that the peppers and tomatoes and beans and peas and that sort of thing were all hosts of this fly, but they never found any flies in any of these vegetables at any time.

I think that was a mistake; but the experts claimed that the vegetables were hosts, and had to be disposed of, and they prohibited the marketing of these vegetables. Florida is a great winter-vegetable-producing section; and the people who produced these vegetables were prohibited from marketing them, and the Government experts ordered the vegetables destroyed. I think they made mistakes in this work of eradication. I do not say that they did it maliciously, of course; but they made some mistakes, and people suffered tremendous losses—losses of their whole vegetable crops.

Under the provision of our Constitution that private property can not be taken without compensation, somebody ought to pay for those losses. They will not amount to a very great deal, perhaps; but the people who suffered the losses were terribly distressed and impoverished by that action, and they lost their crops in orange groves that were miles away from any infested area; but the crops were seized and the oranges were buried. Long trenches were dug and the oranges were dumped in these trenches and lime was put on the oranges and they were covered over and absolutely destroyed.

Mistakes were made, and I think there are some just claims for damages against the Government by reason of those mistakes. Where a man had a crop of vegetables, for instance, growing, and they actually reached the marketing stage, I do not claim that he would be entitled to recover from the Government the profits that he might have made on that crop. That, perhaps, would be speculative and remote; but he certainly ought to have the cost of his fertilizer, the cost of his labor, and the actual out-of-pocket money that he spent in producing that crop. I think there is no escape from that; and that is all these people have claimed or pretended to claim, so far as I understand.

The effort made the other day was to obtain a survey by the Government respecting these losses growing out of the work of eradication—not incidental losses, not speculative losses, but actual losses growing out of the work of eradication. The object was to have the department itself make that survey, and to determine whether or not there are any just claims, and what their nature is, and also what are the elements of damage that might be considered by the department. The whole purpose of the amendment offered the other day was to obtain this survey—not to make an appropriation for the damage, not to prescribe what the damage might be, but simply to have them make a survey and report to us what, if anything, these people were entitled to compensation for.

That was the whole effort. The amendment was defeated. A bill is being reported to-day from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry covering that matter to some extent. I think it is pretty badly emasculated, so far as I can understand. The report is not in yet; but a survey probably will be provided in which the Department of Agriculture itself will determine what the losses were, as far as it can, and report them.

That is the situation with reference to the Mediterranean fruit fly in Florida. I give the department credit for having done a great work in eradicating this fly. I have always stood with the department and tried to support them in everything they did, and let them guide and direct and supervise and control the whole operation; and they did eradicate the Mediterranean fruit fly. The campaign there lasted for some 18 months. I think the fly was discovered in April of 1929, and in November of 1930 they raised the quarantine and declared the fly gone, and I think it has gone.

I have heard of no outbreaks at all since then. I think the department did a wonderful work in totally eradicating that fly; but they had a lot of inexperienced people handling it, and they made mistakes, and caused some people unnecessary and total loss of their crops.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, I yield; though I should like to say a word or two.

Mr. NORRIS. If agreeable to the Senator, he can make the same suggestion in regard to what I say that he wants to make in regard to the Senator from Florida, and kill two birds with one stone. I am one bird, and the Senator from Florida is the other bird.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not differing with the Senator from Florida.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to call attention to the fact that in all experimentation the things narrated by the Senator from Florida are liable to happen. When we are experimenting to try to find a method of killing a pest, to find a method of improving cultivation or raising a crop or raising fruit or anything of that kind, we never expect that every experiment tried will be successful. It never was true. It never will be true. When the Senator speaks of the destruction of crops and fruit and trees, it does not follow that those who destroyed them were doing wrong. It does not follow that it was not necessary in making their experiments. When they discovered what the truth was, probably if they had it to do over again they could have done differently and made many improvements, of course.

The Senator from Tennessee knows that in the Muscle Shoals bill that we put through here so often there is an elaborate plan for experimentation with the idea of cheapening the production of fertilizer for everybody; and there is a provision in the bill for leasing tracts of land so that the experiment can be carried on upon a large scale. The bill provides that the officials of the Government can lease tracts of land, or can furnish experimental fertilizer to farmers in the vicinity or elsewhere to experiment on their farms on a large scale; and provision is made that in case the experiment results in loss to the farmer who submits his land or his crop to this experiment, he shall be paid for the loss; and why not?

If the Government agents have taken oranges or other fruit off the trees, as the Senator says, and buried them in their efforts to find a way to exterminate this fly, of course the owners ought to be recompensed. Of course the Government ought to pay the damages. The payment comes out of taxes, it is true. In other words, all the people pay for the failures that always result in experimentation and, of course, much of this money will be lost. In any experiment, no matter what it may be, money will be lost; and the reason why the Government can afford to make these experiments rather than private parties who are engaged in an industry is because the result of the experiment, if it is successful, benefits everybody. Therefore, everybody ought to contribute something to the experiment. Again, the person engaged in the business or occupation with which the experiment is being made may not be financially able to conduct the experiment, because he realizes that it may be a failure to start with, and may never be successful.

We have that to face in every experiment that we undertake; but when we look over the field of development and improvement that has come about by virtue of experiments, especially through provisions in the agricultural bill for the last 25 years, we see wonderful benefits that have come not to the farmers alone but to everybody else—to everybody that consumes the product of the farmers. That is the reason why it is necessary for the Government to expend money in making these experiments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am not inclined to disagree at all with the reasoning of the Senator from Florida or the Senator from Nebraska. So far as I am concerned, I think that where the Government destroys a citizen's property he ought to be recompensed for it. I have no quarrel at all on that score. What I complain of is the action of Congress in making the appropriations out of which these troubles grow.

The Senator from Florida—whom we all love and esteem and for whom we have the greatest respect—will not himself say that he ever really saw a Mediterranean fruit fly. The record shows that, so far as it is possible to know, no one in this country ever saw a Mediterranean fruit fly. Then I say, if there never was a Mediterranean fruit fly here, or if no one ever saw one here, Congress made a great mistake in spending $7,000,000 of the people's money in trying to exterminate a pest that did not exist.

So I say that when it comes to grasshoppers, especially at a time when we have 8,000,000 people unemployed and when hundreds of thousands, probably, are without proper food and clothing in this country, we ought not to be expending $1,450,000 to eradicate a pest when we do not know whether there is going to be one or not. Congress will be in session if one comes, and if it does come it takes three weeks for the grasshoppers to generate; and if we find that they are there, we will have ample time to combat them when they come.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one minute. I say that under those circumstances we ought not to be spending this large amount of money on a prospective grasshopper invasion, when we have no right to expect one at this time.

I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator says it takes three weeks for grasshoppers to hatch.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. I just read the statement from this bulletin.

Mr. NORBECK. I will ask the Senator how long it takes to pass an appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have known emergency bills to pass in two hours in this body. I have known them to pass in less than half an hour in this body. When Senators come and show that there is an emergency in their own States I have known these appropriations to be made almost immediately. There is not a particle of trouble about it. Here we are appropriating for grasshoppers the enormous sum of $1,450,000, and we ought not to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dale	Kendrick	Schall
Bankhead	Davis	Keyes	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	King	Shipstead
Barkley	Dill	La Follette	Smith
Bingham	Fess	Logan	Smoot
Blaine	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Glass	McNary	Townsend
Broussard	Glenn	Metcalf	Tydings
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Morrison	Vandenberg
Bulow	Gore	Neely	Wagner
Byrnes	Hale	Norbeck	Walcott
Capper	Harrison	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Carey	Hayden	Nye	Watson
Connally	Hebert	Oddie	Wheeler
Coolidge	Howell	Patterson
Copeland	Johnson	Reed

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names; there is a quorum present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a number of Senators have returned to the Chamber since I made a very brief statement a few moments ago, namely, that if the motion to reconsider prevails, as I hope it may, I shall move to amend the amendment which has been offered by the committee to strike out $1,450,000, for grasshoppers, and to insert in lieu thereof $1,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee providing for grasshopper control, beginning on page 85, in line 14, was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and in his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN], and vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STEIWER (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON] are detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. COUZENS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CUTTING (after having voted in the negative). Mr. President, has the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. CUTTING. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts on this question, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is detained from the Senate by illness in his family.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—20

Austin	Bulkley	Harrison	Moses
Bankhead	Byrnes	King	Reed
Barbour	Coolidge	Logan	Robinson, Ark.
Bingham	Dill	McKellar	Tydings
Borah	Glenn	Metcalf	Vandenberg

NAYS—45

Barkley	Fess	McGill	Smoot
Blaine	Fletcher	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Glass	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Broussard	Goldsborough	Norbeck	Townsend
Bulow	Gore	Norris	Wagner
Capper	Hale	Nye	Walcott
Carey	Hayden	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
Connally	Howell	Patterson	Watson
Copeland	Johnson	Schall	Wheeler
Dale	Kendrick	Sheppard
Davis	Keyes	Shipstead
Dickinson	La Follette	Smith

NOT VOTING—31

Ashurst	Frazier	Jones	Steiwer
Bailey	George	Kean	Stephens
Black	Harris	Lewis	Swanson
Bratton	Hastings	Long	Trammell
Caraway	Hatfield	Morrison	Walsh, Mass.
Costigan	Hawes	Pittman	Waterman
Couzens	Hebert	Robinson, Ind.	White
Cutting	Hull	Shortridge

So the Senate refused to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are so many evidences of the desire upon the part of Senators for economy, judging by the speeches which are made in which we emphasize economy, and so little evidence in favor of our desire to have economy, that I am tempted to submit one more motion.

I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions that they reduce the aggregate appropriation $10,000,000 and report the bill back to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as a part of the argument presented in the debate for the abolishment of bureaus I ask that there be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an article written by Josephus Daniels on March 6, published in the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer entitled "Congress Should Abolish Boards and Commissions." I ask that it be inserted at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer of March 6, 1932]

CONGRESS SHOULD ABOLISH BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS—THESE INDEPENDENT GROUPS, IN PRACTICE RESPONSIBLE TO NOBODY, HAVE LONG BEEN THE MOST EXPENSIVE GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES AND THE MOST RECKLESS SPENDERS

By Josephus Daniels

It looks like the Democratic House is determined to abolish all the boards and commissions which crowd on each other's heels in Washington. There was a time when all public agencies were carried on under one of the regular departments of Government, presided over by a member of the Cabinet. This insured that all public business of an executive nature would come before the constitutional clearing house—the Cabinet. Then there sprung up independent bureaus and commissions and boards galore, having no connection whatever with any real executive responsible to anybody unless a committee of Congress should stumble on to looking into how it was run. And when it did so it usually found extravagant salaries and wide-open expense accounts and much more waste of money than under any regular department.

WIPE 'EM ALL OUT

I am not exactly familiar with the House program, but if I had a voice I would say: "Wipe out every independent board and bureau and commission heretofore authorized." The duties of those that are valuable could and should be conferred upon some existing department where a member of the Cabinet could let its operations be considered in the Cabinet meeting clearing house. For example, the Veterans' Bureau should absorb the Pension Bureau and its great duties come under the Secretary of the Interior. It should have been there from the beginning. The Farm Board should function under the Department of Agriculture, and so on. There isn't a board or commission doing anything worth while that could not be done as well or better under one of the regular departments.

AND CHEAPER, TOO

This transfer would reduce expenses, too. A survey of all the independent agencies in Washington in the past 20 years would disclose that they have been the most expensive governmental agencies and the most reckless spenders. Take the Shipping Board, for instance. If it had been under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, as Mr. Wilson and Mr. McAdoo desired, but which proposition the Republicans defeated after a costly filibuster, all the construction talent and ability of the Navy could have been drawn upon without cost. Many millions of dollars would have been saved the taxpayers by such arrangement. As it was, from the beginning to now, it has been a very expensive agency.

THERE ARE FIVE NAVIES

Under the present absurd arrangement Uncle Sam spends his money to enjoy the luxuries of five navies. One is the Navy under the Secretary of the Navy. The Treasury has a big floating, and sometimes fighting fleet in the Coast Guard. The Department of Commerce has a big fleet to look after lighthouses and surveys and the like. The War Department has its own big ships to transport soldiers. The Labor Department has its navy to enforce immigration laws. Other departments probably have ships for special purposes. Each has its separate organization, maintenance, and repair forces, and they are as independent as if they belonged to separate nations. Unity would save lots of money.

ON THE RIGHT TRACK

Speaker GARNER and his associates are on the right track in getting rid of boards and commissions and securing economy by uniting departments. If well done it will save millions and promote efficiency. The chief thing that stands in the way is that up to date Congress has done nothing to reduce its own expenses or compensation. Reforms must begin with themselves.

LONG, WOODEN, AND NARROW

Of course, like all Presidents, Mr. Wilson upon occasion did appoint boards and commissions, particularly during the war. But in times of peace he uttered a phrase which Speaker GARNER and the other Congressmen might well use in the reform they are now engaged in bringing about. A member of the Cabinet suggested that a board be appointed for a certain purpose. Mr. Wilson said, "No. My experience is that all boards are long, wooden, and narrow."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment, which will be reported.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 26, line 13, the Senator from Texas proposes to strike out "$422,950" and insert "$432,950," so as to read:

Diseases of animals: For all necessary expenses for scientific investigations of diseases of animals, including the construction of necessary buildings at Beltsville, Md., the maintenance and improvement of the bureau experiment station at Bethesda, Md., and the necessary alterations of buildings thereon, and the necessary expenses for investigations of tuberculin, serums, antitoxins, and analogous products, $432,950: Provided, That of said sum $100,000 may be used for researches concerning the cause, modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention of the disease of contagious abortion of animals.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senate on its wisdom in adhering to the appropriations for the destruction of pests which endanger agriculture and livestock. The Department of Agriculture has been making investigations with reference to a poisonous plant which is very prevalent in a number of States, called bitterweed. On account of the drought over a very large area in the last few years, the spread of this poisonous plant has been very decided. The department testifies that drought favors it. Sheep die when they eat bitterweed. In my State thousands upon thousands of sheep have been killed within the past two years. I quote briefly from the testimony of a representative of the Department of Agriculture before the House Appropriations Committee. Doctor Mohler, chief of the bureau, there testified:

The bitterweed situation is most acute over an area of 4,000,000 acres, more than one-third of which, as a result of drought and overgrazing is almost completely taken with the bitterweed. The losses resulting from the plant probably aggregate several hundred thousand dollars annually and both the area involved and the total financial loss will increase unless some method for its control is found.

The bureau has already made: (1) Preliminary studies of the effects of the plant on domestic animals, (2) a general survey of the infested area, and (3) has started a chemical study of the plant.

I shall not quote more of the testimony. The bureau asked the Department of Agriculture for an allocation for this work, but on account of the pressure it was not included in the appropriation bill as it passed the House. The department wants the money. My own State has established, at public expense, a laboratory and maintains a staff for the study of such problems. This small appropriation of $10,000 is merely provided to carry on the cooperative work with the States.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I am willing to submit the item to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be reported for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 65, line 5, strike out "$100,000,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$125,000,000," so as to read:

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY SYSTEM

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916 (39 Stat., pp. 355–359), and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of said act, as amended, including not to exceed $733,100 for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia, $125,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended—

And so forth.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I offer this amendment increasing the appropriation for roads in the amount of $125,000,000 in the interest of tax reduction. The tax-reduction argument that goes on in the Senate does not ever explain how taxes are to be reduced. I want to reduce the taxes of the States. The States are now paying three-fourths of governmental expenses in the United States. The Federal expenses are only about one-fourth. Upon the road question we started in the beginning with a proposal from the Federal Government that it would pay 50-50 in the building of hard-surfaced roads. We started out upon that basis. But we had not gone very far until the big taxpayers of the United States who pay the Federal taxes objected to the program.

How many of those taxpayers are there? There are about 2,500,000 of them in the United States who pay income taxes. I do not claim that my amendment will reduce their taxes. It will increase their taxes by $25,000,000. But there are 120,000,000 other folks in the United States, and it will reduce their taxes by that same amount of $25,000,000. I am interested in reducing the taxes of the 120,000,000 rather than the 2,500,000. In my own State, out of the 2,500,000 people in the whole State, there are only 27,000 whose taxes will be increased by this amendment. The taxes of the others will be decreased.

As I said, the Government started on this road proposition to pay fifty-fifty of the cost of hard-road construction. After we had proceeded a little while the big taxpayers, this small number I have mentioned, the 2,500,000 in the country, the 27,000 in my own State, organized road-booster associations. Those booster associations boosted for gasoline taxes and county bonds and State bonds and things of that kind until they enormously increased the taxes and the expenses on the people generally in all the States. The result was an enormous increase in those expenses for the States, but no increase in Federal expenses. They never came to Congress and asked an increased Federal appropriation so the Federal Government would keep up its 50 per cent of the road construction.

I want to put in the RECORD a reference to two tables that show this to be the fact. They were presented day before yesterday by Mr. MacDonald, of the Bureau of Public Roads, to the Interstate Commerce Committee. On page 11 of his statement is a showing that since 1921 and up to 1929 the States expended for highways $6,084,000,000. That was for primary hard roads only. That does not include nearly $6,000,000,000 for secondary roads. Those primary roads were all post roads; they were all military roads; they were all interstate roads; and even some of the secondary roads were used for those purposes. The Federal Government contributed nothing to those secondary roads and contributed only $728,000,000 out of the $6,084,000,000 to the primary roads. In other words, from 1921 to 1929 the Federal Government paid only 13.9 per cent of the hard-road construction cost in the United States. The Federal Government, which started out to pay 50 per cent and keep down the State taxes accordingly, fell away from its duty and paid only 13.9 per cent.

On page 12 of this statement is another table showing the State highway funds available for expenditure in 1930. These were the latest figures presented. I find that the total expenditure is $1,136,000,000, which the States spent on hard roads only, and almost that much more on secondary roads. How much will the Federal Government contribute to this $1,136,000,000? It will be only $92,000,000, or 8.1 per cent. That is the way the Federal Government is keeping up its 50 per cent share of the hard-road construction cost. The road-booster associations have fooled the country and fooled the Congress about this matter.

Senators talk about the reduction of taxes, when in fact they are increasing the taxes on their people at home, and increasing them enormously, because three-fourths of all the taxes of the country are State and local taxes and only one-fourth of them national taxes. The gross income of the country was $54,000,000,000 in 1931. Practically all of the net income went to the 2,500,000 big taxpayers in the United States who pay the Federal income taxes. The people at large in the United States paid no income tax to the Federal Government, because they had no income in 1930.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator's amendment is adopted it will mean that the States will have to tax themselves at least $25,000,000 additional. I imagine the Senator knows that a bill has passed the House already, and has been reported favorably by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate, providing for the appropriation of about $137,000,000, which will not require the States to put up a like amount. It seems to me the Senator could accomplish what he wants by voting for that bill rather than by offering an amendment to the pending bill which will require the States to put up a like sum.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, if my amendment is adopted I shall certainly then move an amendment that will waive that provision requiring the States to put up $25,000,000 to match it. The Federal Government paid only 8.1 per cent of the road construction cost in 1930. Therefore that requirement ought to be waived, and that will be done if we adopt the policy which I am here announcing.

With reference to the bill which the Senator from Tennessee mentioned, I have not examined it in detail as yet, but as I understand it provides a loan to the States. While they do not have to put up the money now, yet in a few years it will be deducted from the Federal road allowance. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if that is not correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill provides that $120,000,000 shall go to the States and that they shall not be required to match it.

Mr. BROOKHART. I have not examined that bill, but I understand that ultimately the amount would be deducted from the Federal aid to the States, making it a sort of loan. Is not that correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. BROOKHART. Then I am against the bill.

Here is an expenditure of $1,136,000,000 on hard roads. The Federal Government, under the policy which it itself inaugurated, owes half of that to the States. It is only appropriating $100,000,000 in the pending bill, and then under another bill there is proposed a loan of $135,000,000 more. The Federal Government ought to pay $550,000,000 and more, on road-construction work in order to keep its pledge, and not only to keep its pledge but to pay what it owes on the merits of the proposition.

Every one of these roads is an interstate road carrying an enormous volume of interstate business, a volume even heavier perhaps than the intrastate business; every one of these roads is a post road; every one of these roads is a military road; and so their construction and operation involve Federal functions; and yet the Congress has allowed a lot of road boosters to go out and boost the taxes on their neighbors at home, to boost the taxes on the men who elected them to the House and to the Senate, and then they come to the floor of Congress and talk about reducing taxes, when that reduction is for the two and a half million big-income earners of the country and not upon the people who elected them.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point the two tables which I mentioned, because I desire serious consideration of this proposition by the Senate. I think it has been overlooked; I think we ought to give it real consideration before the present session shall end.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the tables will be printed in the RECORD.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Expenditures for State highways, 1921–1929

	Amount	Per cent
a. General property taxes, direct appropriations, and miscellaneous	$808, 416, 433	15.5
b. Federal aid	728, 531, 941	13.9
c. Motor taxes	3, 677, 503, 633	70.5
Total taxes	5, 214, 452, 007	100
d. Bonds	870, 344, 537
Total available for expenditure	6, 084, 796, 544

State-highway funds available for expenditure, 1930

	Amount	Percentage of current income	Percentage of total funds available for expenditure
1. State tax and appropriation from State treasury	$43, 317, 991	4.7	3.8
2. Special motor taxes: a. Motor-vehicle fees, $289,801,738—41.3 per cent; b. Gas tax, $411,109,446—58.7 per cent	700, 911, 184	76.7	61.7
3. Miscellaneous income	17, 083, 821	1.9	1.5
4. Federal aid	92, 462, 836	10.1	8.1

Total funds available for expenditure	1, 136, 673, 437		100.0

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have always been one of those who advocated proper contributions by the Federal Government in aid of the highway system in cooperation with the States; and I regret that I feel impelled to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. President, the current law appropriates $125,000,000 for Federal aid in the construction of highways. When the Director of the Budget considered the item this year he made a deduction of $16,000,000 on account of an $80,000,000 advance made to the States in 1930. That advance was made upon a 5-year program of reimbursement. Hence the $16,000,000 necessarily deducted from the $125,000,000 in the current law left $109,000,000, and the House committee, after considering the item, further reduced it $9,000,000 below the Budget estimate, making available $100,000,000. That was approved by the Senate committee and is now in the bill. That is the situation as it affects the Federal contribution to the highway system.

If the Senator from Iowa desires to go further in this matter, it will be proper for him when the bill calling for an appropriation of $135,000,000 is reached on the calendar to propose an amendment to that bill. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate recently considered a bill which was passed by the House more than a week ago providing for this large sum. That bill is now on the Senate calendar. It is a legislative proposal in the nature of an authorization. It should stand on its own merits. The amount proposed is reimbursable to the Government, as in the case of the advance of $80,000,000 made in 1930. It is quite dissimilar, Mr. President, to the appropriation carried in this bill, which is a contribution outright to the States. Therefore it is impossible to confuse the two different measures.

The Senator will have his opportunity to present squarely the matter which he now seeks to present by this amendment. So, for that reason, Mr. President, and in view of the fact that the amendment proposes to appropriate an amount in excess of the estimate of the Budget and does not come with the recommendation of a standing or select committee, I invoke the rule and make the point of order against it.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, perhaps the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon is well made, and it may be more appropriate to present an amendment such as this to the bill to which he has referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Oregon. If there be no further amendments, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary be permitted to make all necessary corrections, and I desire to offer one further amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary is authorized to make the necessary corrections.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Island of Guam" and to insert in lieu thereof "Hawaii and Porto Rico."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8397, being the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8397) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, Department of the Interior," on page 4, line 3, after the word "of," to strike out "one" and insert "two," and in the same line, after the words "passenger carrying," to strike out "vehicle" and insert "vehicles," so as to read:

For contingent expenses of the office of the Secretary and the bureaus and offices of the department; furniture, carpets, ice, lumber, hardware, dry goods, advertising, telegraphing, telephone service, including personal services of temporary or emergency telephone operators; street-car fares for use of messengers not exceeding $150; expressage, diagrams, awnings, filing devices, typewriters, adding and addressing machines and other labor-saving devices, including the repair, exchange, and maintenance thereof; constructing model and other cases and furniture; postage stamps to prepay postage on foreign mail and for special-delivery and air mail stamps for use in the United States; traveling expenses, including necessary expenses of inspectors; fuel and light; examination of estimates for appropriations in the field for any bureau, office, or service of the department; not exceeding $500 shall be available for the payment of damages caused to private property by department motor vehicles; purchase and exchange of motor trucks, motor cycles, and bicycles, maintenance, repair, and operation of two motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motor trucks, motor cycles, and bicycles to be used only for official purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 13, after the name "Office of Education," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,800," and in line 14, after the name "Bureau of Reclamation," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,800," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the purchase or exchange of professional and scientific books, law and medical books, and books to complete broken sets, periodicals, directories, and other books of reference relating to the business of the department, $500, and in addition there is hereby made available from any appropriations made for any bureau or office of the department not to exceed the following respective sums: Indian Service, $500; Office of Education, $1,800; Bureau of Reclamation, $1,800; Geological Survey, $3,000; National Park Service, $1,000; General Land Office, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Expenses of Indian commissioners," on page 6, line 3, before the word "of," to strike out "$14,100" and insert "$11,800," and in the same line, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$9,000" and insert "$6,700," so as to read:

For expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $11,800, of which amount not to exceed $6,700 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "General Land Office, general expenses," on page 7, line 11, after the name "Secretary of the Interior," to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$600,000," so as to read:

Surveying of public lands: For surveys and resurveys of public lands, examination of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, making fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States, under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $600,000, including not to exceed $7,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 8, after the word "hereunder," to strike out "$450,000" and insert "$465,000," so as to read:

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity: For protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, adjusting claims for swamp lands and indemnity for swamp lands; and traveling expenses of agents and others employed hereunder, $465,000, including not exceeding $35,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motor boats for the use of agents and others employed in the field service and including $60,000 for prevention and fighting of forest and other fires on the public lands, to be available for this and no other purpose, and to be expended under the direction of the commissioner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Indian Affairs, general expenses," on page 10, line 20, after the word "supplies," to strike out "$650,000" and insert "$700,000," so as to read:

For expenses necessary to the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection, pay of necessary employees, and all other expenses connected therewith, including advertising, storage, and transportation of Indian goods and supplies, $700,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in payment for any services except bill therefor is rendered within one year from the time the service is performed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Indian Lands," on page 15, line 19, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$112,435.33" and insert "$167,937.35," and in line 23, after the figures "$13,130.56," to insert a semicolon and "Nambe, supplemental, $1.40; San Ildefonso, supplemental, $73.27; Laguna, $33,566.47, which may be expended for the purchase of land, irrigation, drainage, and other improvements, and the purchase of equipment for the benefit of the Laguna Pueblo Indians; San Felipe, supplemental, $21,860.88, which, together with the unexpended balance of the original award for this pueblo, may be expended for the purchase of land, irrigation, drainage, and other improvements, and the purchase of equipment for the benefit of the San Felipe Pueblo Indians," so as to read:

For carrying out the provisions of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 636), to quiet title in Pueblo Indian lands, New Mexico, and in settlement for damages for lands and water rights lost to the Indians of the pueblos as recommended in the respective reports of the Pueblo Lands Board thereon, the sum of $167,937.35, as follows:

Santa Clara, supplemental, $27,154.87; Picuris, supplemental, $15,625.69; Pojoaque, $51,679.79; Pojoaque, supplemental, $4,844.42; Cochiti, supplemental, $13,130.56; Nambe, supplemental, $1.40; San Ildefonso, supplemental, $73.27; Laguna, $33,566.47, which may be expended for the purchase of land, irrigation, drainage, and other improvements, and the purchase of equipment for the benefit of the Laguna Pueblo Indians; San Felipe, supplemental, $21,860.88, which, together with the unexpended balance of the original award for this pueblo, may be expended for the purchase of land, irrigation, drainage, and other improvements, and the purchase of equipment for the benefit of the San Felipe Pueblo Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Industrial assistance and advancement," on page 20, line 5, after the word "purposes," to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$95,000," so as to read:

For transfer to the Geological Survey for expenditures to be made in inspecting mines and examining mineral deposits on Indian lands and in supervising mining operations on restricted, tribal, and allotted Indian lands leased under the provisions of the acts of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. 795), May 27, 1908 (35 Stat. 312), March 3, 1909 (U. S. C., title 25, sec. 396), and other acts authorizing the leasing of such lands for mining purposes, $95,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the occasion for that increase in the appropriation?

Mr. SMOOT. This item is to provide—

For transfer to the Geological Survey for expenditures to be made in inspecting mines and examining mineral deposits on Indian lands—

And so forth.

I can read a justification of it quicker than I can explain the item in detail.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I read as follows:

The Budget estimate was in the same amount as the 1932 appropriation. A reduction of $20,000 for 1933 will affect adversely the royalty income of the Indians by an amount estimated by the Geological Survey at not less than $50,000. An increase in waste of oil and gas resources on Indian lands amounting to several hundred thousand dollars will also result.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, that is an interesting statement, but it is merely a declaration of fact; it does not seem to me to be conclusive of the argument at all. I do not know whether the increase of $25,000 carried in this item is indispensable to the proper administration of the service, but it is noted that the Senate committee raised the appropriation, "For transfer to the Geological Survey for expenditures to be made in inspecting mines and examining mineral deposits on Indian lands and in supervising mining operations on restricted, tribal, and allotted Indian land leased under the provisions of the acts of February 28, 1891, * * * and other acts authorizing the leasing of such lands for mining purposes," from $75,000 to $95,000.

The sum of $75,000 was carried in the bill when it came to the Senate; the Senate committee has increased the appropriation to $95,000; and the statement is made that the failure to include the $95,000 necessarily will result in the loss of large sums to the Indians.

I think the justification ought to be in more detail and that there ought to be some facts stated that will enable the Senate to reach a conclusion as to whether or not this $95,000 item is necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is the testimony that was adduced before the committee regarding this item:

Mr. DODD. The next item is on page 19, line 18.

This is an item that deals with the supervision of mining operations on leased Indian lands.

Senator THOMAS. In what States?

Mr. DODD. That is carried on in——

Senator THOMAS. Just from memory.

Mr. DODD. In Oklahoma, Montana, Wyoming, Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico, and Utah.

Senator THOMAS. Just what does the survey accomplish under this appropriation?

Mr. DODD. In Oklahoma and Wyoming that would cover oil and gas principally.

Senator THOMAS. Arizona?

Mr. DODD. Arizona would be coal principally.

Senator THOMAS. Colorado?

Mr. DODD. Colorado would be coal.

Senator THOMAS. New Mexico?

Mr. DODD. In New Mexico there would be coal and oil and gas.

Senator THOMAS. Do you have any copper on Indian lands in any of these States?

Mr. DODD. There is copper in Arizona, though I do not believe that is on Indian land. This appropriation applies to other minerals that may be involved.

Lead and zinc on the Quapaw in Oklahoma; oil and gas in Oklahoma, among the Five Civilized Tribes, the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservations, and the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency.

Senator SMOOT. You think, then, that $95,000 is absolutely necessary?

Mr. DODD. The $95,000 is the lowest possible minimum on which we can operate that service. If that amount is not allowed it will result in very heavy losses to Indians, based on the statement from the Geological Survey. They tell us that the losses would be no less than $50,000 in royalty income, and a loss of several hundred thousand will result in the actual wastage of oil and gas and other mineral resources.

Then the witness goes on to the next item.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Unquestionably the representative of the department took the position that $95,000 is the necessary amount. However, it may be pointed out that $75,000 was authorized by the bill as it passed the House of Representatives, and it does not seem to me that the mere statement that loss will result if the exact amount of $95,000 is not appropriated is anything more than a conclusion.

Mr. SMOOT. A similar amount, $95,000, was appropriated the year before.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And therefore, never so long as time runs, can they get along with less.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am not going to raise further objection. Of course, the amendment will go to conference, and I presume the conferees will work it out, but there will be found just exactly the same kind of a justification for every estimate that is submitted, and it is impossible to reduce the Budget if we accept as conclusive the statements of employees or officers of the department that the exact amounts asked for are required and are indispensable.

Mr. SMOOT. In my opinion, the sum of $95,000 will save to the Indians more than the $20,000 increase which the Senate committee has recommended in the appropriation over that contained in the House bill. The committee has only given the bureau what was provided last year, and this work is going on all the time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Did the committee look into the details of the work done last year under that heading?

Mr. SMOOT. I can give the Senator in just a moment what they are.

There were expenditures as follows: Billings, Mont., $230; Casper, Wyo., $4,270; Denver, Colo., $2,690; Salt Lake City, Utah, $440; McAlester, Okla., $8,620; Miami, Okla., $12,570; Muskogee, Okla., $50,940; purchase of automobiles, $1,060; Washington contingent, $11,080.

Those were the expenditures for the last year from this appropriation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am going to ask my colleague to pass over the item until to-morrow morning. I should like to look into it and make a further investigation in regard to some of the alleged expenditures in Oklahoma. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is not here at the moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure, so far as the Senator from Oklahoma is concerned, that he agreed to the amendment. I will say to my colleague that he was a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. KING. I think it will not delay the proceedings if my colleague will let the matter go over. I shall investigate it this evening, and if I find that it is satisfactory I shall consent to take it up the first thing to-morrow morning.

Mr. SMOOT. I call my colleague's attention to page 278 of the House hearings, where every detail of the expenditure of the money is given, and the reasons for the increase in the House appropriation are given.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, those of us who are not on the Appropriations Committee find it impossible to know what goes on with reference to all these items. We just have to accept the bill as it comes to the floor of the Senate; and then, if we have the time and can do it, the fight is waged here.

Some of us very strongly hoped that some of these appropriations might be cut down at this time. We have talked about doing it, and I know that the sentiments of the Senator from Utah have been along that line. I have heard him speak on the subject, and I know that he feels that way about the matter; that is to say, I feel that he feels that way about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I assure the Senator that I do.

Mr. HARRISON. But the thing that bothers me is this: Here is the Interior Department appropriation bill. The Senator, I presume, is chairman of the subcommittee having this matter in charge.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I am.

Mr. HARRISON. I notice in the report that the bill as it passed the House of Representatives carried a total appropriation of $50,446,000, and that the Senate committee has put on items here and there and everywhere until it has added to the bill that passed the House $4,424,000, and that the bill as reported to the Senate carries the amazing total of $54,870,754.

It is inconceivable to me that the Senator from Utah should favor all of these increases. He has been trying to retrench, because he will have to handle here shortly a tax bill carrying an annual increase in taxation of $1,100,000,000; and he appreciates the enormous task that is going to rest upon his shoulders then. The Senator certainly was not for all of these increases.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to tell the Senator just what the items are, and then I will explain to him exactly why they went in.

Two million dollars of the increase was for the Boulder Canyon project. The House appropriated $8,000,000 for that purpose; and Doctor Mead came before the committee and stated that at least $4,000,000 over and above what we reported would have to be appropriated before the end of this year, and it would be carried in the deficiency appropriation bill. What I wanted was to carry just what the House had in the bill, $8,000,000; but the estimate was for $10,000,000, and the committee thought they might just as well give the $10,000,000, because then the next appropriation bill would have to carry only $6,000,000 instead of $8,000,000. It will not make a cent of difference in the appropriations in the end, before this session is over.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I want largely to follow the Senator. The Senator believes that we can cut that amount from the House appropriation, does he?

Mr. SMOOT. I believe that that could be done and nobody at all would be hurt, and so does Doctor Mead think so; but I desire also to say that if the amount is cut out here it will have to be included in the deficiency appropriation bill, because contracts have been let upon Boulder Dam to take the full amount of $16,000,000. It is a question of either putting it in the regular bill here or including $2,000,000 more in the deficiency bill; and I thought the House acted wisely in making the amount $8,000,000, because our deficiency bill will be passed before the $8,000,000 can be expended.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, we ought to save every cent we can with a view to avoiding unnecessary taxation in the forthcoming tax bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that if we were going to save a single dollar by failing to increase this item, I never would have consented to its increase.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that the Senator did not consent to it. He fought it; he opposed it; but the others overpowered him, I imagine. The Senator does not want to say that. He is modest; but I imagine that is the picture.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee voted to put in the amount. I think I have stated the situation, and I think the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] will corroborate me.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I had much to do with having the $10,000,000 restored. I offered the amendment which provided for it, and had a contest in regard to it in the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. And a little feeling.

Mr. ODDIE. I requested certain information from the manager of the Six Companies, which has the contract, which is to the effect that if this sum of $8,000,000 is carried in the bill it will mean throwing out of employment half of the men working at Boulder Canyon Dam, virtually 1,500 men, 35 per cent of whom are ex-service men.

Mr. President, we have seen deficiency bills fall by the wayside. We can not guarantee that the House will include the additional sums which are necessary in the deficiency bill. I believe that the proper place for this item is in the regular appropriation bill, where it can be fought out, and where the cards can be put squarely on the table. It is better to face the issue to-day in a square way than to leave it to some hypothetical consideration in a deficiency bill. I think it is most important that this $10,000,000 item be retained in the bill. It will at least insure that part of the money that will be needed will be provided.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of my friend?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes.

Mr. KING. The Senator referred to contracts which had been made. Do those contracts call for the payment to the contractors of $10,000,000 before the adjournment of Congress? Indeed, is there any obligation upon the part of the Government to pay in excess of $8,000,000 between now and the time when Congress will meet in December?

Mr. ODDIE. The work is paid for on a basis worked out between the Interior Department and the contractors. The work done each month is measured up, and the payment is made on a certain schedule. If only $8,000,000 is retained in the bill, it will mean that the contractors will soon find themselves without money and will have to slow down on the work. The representative of the Department of the Interior, Doctor Mead, stated that if this amount of $10,000,000 is put in the bill the department can make its plans with more security and more ease of mind. It will be assured that enough money will be provided to carry on the work for a short time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I repeat that what is done in this respect does not make one cent of difference as to the appropriations that will ultimately be made within this Congress.

The next item is the Vale project, Oregon; continuation of construction, $674,000. That is to complete the Vale project. The two Senators from Oregon came before the subcommittee. If the appropriation is not made, it will delay the completion of that project for a full year. It was so stated by officials of the department, and we put in the amount. I do not know why the House did not do it. There are settlers upon that project now waiting for this work to be done; and if this amount will complete it, the project will be ready for settlers to carry on their farming this very year. Without it, they can not do so. Therefore the Appropriations Committee thought it was better to appropriate the amount and let the project be finished.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. My colleague stated, as I understood him, that there are farmers or settlers there.

Mr. SMOOT. Settlers.

Mr. KING. I understood that this appropriation was for the construction of the dam, and I was curious to know——

Mr. SMOOT. This is for the continuation of construction of the Vale project. There is a dam in connection with it; but I think, and I am quite sure the Senator from Oregon will corroborate me, that the greater part of the dam is finished, and this is to provide the laterals that must be constructed before the settlers can even use the land.

Mr. KING. This is not the Boulder Dam project?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; this is in Oregon. It is one of the reclamation projects that we have on foot, and this is to complete it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, do I understand that if the amount that the Senate committee has recommended should be added to the appropriation, it will complete the Oregon project?

Mr. SMOOT. It will complete that project.

Mr. SMITH. That will end it so far as appropriations are concerned?

Mr. SMOOT. That will end it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me ask my colleague one other question. Is it a fact that there is an irrigation project in Oregon the completion of which will cost $10,000,000 more?

Mr. SMOOT. Congress has not acted upon that at all. There is talk of a project there that will cost a great deal more than that; but that is not in this bill at all.

Mr. KING. What is this $10,000,000 for?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator refer to the $674,000? There is not a cent of appropriation for that purpose. This is for the Vale project, which is virtually completed. Many of the settlers are there now; and with this appropriation that project will be completed, so that the settlers there can make a crop this year.

The other item, Mr. President, is the Yakima project in Washington; continuation of construction, $500,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question in that connection. There are two of these projects. One is in Oregon and the other is in Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. HARRISON. Which one has been started?

Mr. SMOOT. Both of them have been started. In fact, both of them are very nearly completed.

Mr. HARRISON. Which one is the more nearly completed?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Vale project is, perhaps.

Mr. HARRISON. How much was appropriated last year for the Oregon project?

Mr. SMOOT. I think $150,000, as I remember.

Mr. HARRISON. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars last year, and how much the year before?

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps a little more than that, or around that sum, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. Why did it take $150,000 last year and about that amount the year before, while this year it takes six hundred and seventy-odd thousand dollars?

Mr. SMOOT. The amount involved here is $500,000. This is the Yakima project.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator to say that $674,000 is required.

Mr. SMOOT. That is for the Vale project, in Oregon.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I mean. In the case of a project which last year took just $150,000 and the year before that about $150,000, does the Senator think that at this particular time, when things are so depressed and money is so hard to get and it is so hard to pay taxes and we have such a difficult job ahead of us, we should be asked to appropriate $674,000?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr President, we shall have to appropriate this money. This is to be paid back, of course.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think it would be better to let it go over for a year?

Mr. SMOOT. No; if this amount will complete the project, I think it would not only be a good thing for the people of Washington and Oregon, but it would give men employment there at this particular time, and not only that but it would provide water for the settlers who are ready now to make their homes on the project.

Mr. HARRISON. The same argument could be applied to every authorization which has been made by Congress to do a piece of public work. There are innumerable authorizations. If the argument which the Senator has made is good, then we ought to appropriate to carry out every authorization by law.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this money is to come out of the reclamation fund. That fund now contains the money to pay it. Of course, it is true that the Government of the United States will have to raise it, but it is to come out of that fund.

Mr. HARRISON. Have we not been putting off, giving the people on reclamation projects a longer time to pay back the money advanced by the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. This project is not completed. In my own State there is the Strawberry project, which has been completed for a long time. In fact, I suppose the people on that project have made about 15 payments.

Mr. HARRISON. Then we pass a law giving them more time. In other words, after we appropriate the money and the project is completed, then we are going to give them more time to pay the money back.

Mr. SMOOT. This is to come from the reclamation fund. This is not money belonging to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator realizes that in balancing the Budget, if this item goes on one side of the ledger, we have to balance it with some taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, a bank has so much in deposits, and if a dollar is taken out of the deposits the responsibility of the bank is just that much less. So it is in the case of these two projects.

Mr. HARRISON. Was the Senate committee unanimous in regard to this Vale project?

Mr. SMOOT. I think they were.

Mr. HARRISON. They all voted for it?

Mr. SMOOT. They all voted for it.

Mr. HARRISON. And they all voted for the Washington project?

Mr. SMOOT. They did.

Mr. HARRISON. There was no division at all?

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever.

Mr. HARRISON. Even though the House thought they should not make this appropriation at this time, the Senate Committee on Appropriations, without respect to its membership, all voted for it. I suppose they looked into the benign countenance of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and said they could not oppose it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah will do me the justice of saying that I was not present when this bill was reported. I was necessarily absent in Tennessee. I want to say that if I had been present I would have voted against this amendment in the committee, and I will vote against it now. There is no misunderstanding about it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no misunderstanding on the part of the members of the committee. We know the Senator's attitude.

Mr. HARRISON. What amendment is now pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment on page 20, line 4.

Mr. HARRISON. Is that the Oregon proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. SMOOT. This relates to the Indian Bureau. It is another matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was on page 20, line 12, where the committee proposed to strike out "$382,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$407,000."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is an increase of $25,000. I think the reason for the increase should be stated.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state it, Mr. President. This is what the department says:

Five years ago we obtained an initial appropriation of $25,000 for the purpose of obtaining agricultural employees of the extension type to do work on Indian reservations. Successive increases of $25,000 have been granted, and we have proceeded on the assumption that these increases would be requested each successive year until such time as we have an agricultural extension agent on each Indian reservation where conditions warrant such employment or in the case of two or more small reservations, one agent for the combined work. Large expenditures are being made in carrying forward the educational and health programs among the Indians, but the program for development of the Indian in the home has not until the last two or three years received any special attention. We are frequently called upon to provide subsistence supplies for able-bodied Indians who have allotments of land but make no effort to produce even subsistence crops therefrom. Until such time as we educate the Indians to utilize their allotments for the purpose of raising subsistence in quantities sufficient to supply the needs of their families, the charge against the Federal Treasury for aid to Indians is going to be heavy. The reduction in this item postpones the placing of extension agents on other reservations where they are sorely needed at this time and likewise delays the time when Indians of these reservations will begin to utilize their own lands to better advantage. We urgently recommend that this $25,000 be restored.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it appears that five years ago this item began with an appropriation of $25,000 and now it has been augmented to $382,000 in the bill as it passed the House, and was raised by the Senate committee to $407,000.

I am wondering in all sincerity whether it is possible, once an expenditure has ever been incurred, once an organization is ever established, to limit or to reduce it. Of course, in the abstract, one can justify very large expenditures for purposes like that comprehended in this paragraph. We are being beseiged daily now for appropriations for new purposes running into the hundreds of millions of dollars, and almost every one of the causes for appropriations suggested is in itself meritorious.

If the Senate committee and the Senate wish to pursue the policy of expanding and enlarging these appropriations for which there is argument, appropriations which may very properly be expended in time of abundance of revenues, I do not see how we are ever to accomplish the balancing of the Budget.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the $25,000 is to provide extension agents on other reservations. There is no question about the fact that the money which has already been expended for these agents, who have helped the Indians, who have taught them how to cultivate their lands and to look after their interests, has been a wise expenditure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I just made the statement that in my judgment the purposes of the appropriation are valid and commendable, but how much was expended for this same purpose last year?

Mr. SMOOT. Three hundred and eighty-two thousand dollars.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We are actually raising the appropriation for last year on this account from $382,000 to $407,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not know that it would do any good to attempt to stop this process, but at some time it must stop. There is now an enormous deficit in the revenues, and for the years 1931, 1932, and 1933, the deficit is going to exceed $6,000,000,000, less such new revenues as we raise.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with every word the Senator says. The only question now is to decide upon the policy. If the policy shall be not to increase the number of these extension agents, then the $382,000 is ample; but if we are going to do for the Indians now as we have done in the past for other tribes, the result of which activity has been next to marvelous, the $25,000 will be necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We have done plenty to the Indians; there is no doubt about that.

The House item carries the amount that was appropriated last year. The question is, Is it necessary, is it unavoidable that this appropriation be increased? The same arguments, in varying degrees, can support, I have not the slightest doubt, every item of increase in this bill, and numerous other items which will be offered before the bill is finally disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as I am personally concerned, I think that if we are to make any additional appropriations at all, they ought to be made for taking care of our wards, the Indians of this country. The $25,000 asked for is for the very purpose for which money has been expended in the past up to $382,000, and it has been demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt that there could not have been a better expenditure for the Indians than the expenditure of this money for the purposes for which it was appropriated.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We increased the appropriation for this purpose from $25,000, as it was five years ago, to $382,000 last year. Now the Senator from Utah insists that it is essential to the life and happiness of the Indians that the additional $25,000 be granted.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, the purpose of the appropriation is not stated here. Is it intended that this additional amount shall be used in the employment of agents similar to county agents?

Mr. SMOOT. Extension agents. In the past we have appropriated $382,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to state, the language itself ought to be considered in determining what this money is going to be used for. The language making the appropriation is, "For the purpose of developing agriculture and stock raising among the Indians, including necessary personnel, traveling and other expenses, and purchase of supplies and equipment, $407,000," as reported by the committee, "of which not to exceed $15,000 may be used to conduct agricultural experiments and demonstrations on Indian school or agency farms and to maintain a supply of suitable plants or seed for issue to Indians."

The Senator from Utah, throughout his statement, has been representing and maintaining that this large sum of $407,000 is designed for the purpose of maintaining demonstration agents on Indian farms, when, as a matter of fact, by the express language of the bill only $15,000 of the entire $407,000 may be used for experiments and demonstrations.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, it has been my privilege to observe in a direct way the work of these county agents, as we might very well term them. They are serving the same purpose among the Indians that our county agents are serving in our farming districts.

My observation leads me to say that if we were to strike out every other item in the bill we ought to retain this item. Just now the administration is making an unusual effort to secure agents of a high class to teach the Indians to farm, and I am ready here and now to guarantee results if they are permitted to proceed along this line.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President ,there is no proposal to strike out the item. The question is, Shall the amount be increased over that of last year by $25,000?

Mr. KENDRICK. It is my conviction that unless this item is carried according to the estimate it will be necessary to limit the number of men employed without regard to the need for them. Is that true, I ask the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. If the increase is not made, all we can do is to carry on the work as it was carried on up to this year.

Mr. KENDRICK. With a limited number of men?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. This is an extension of the identical work which has been done with other tribes of Indians. The work in the past has demonstrated beyond a question of a doubt the value of the work, not only to our Government but to the Indians themselves, and the purpose of the amendment is to extend the work to other Indians who have not these agents among them to-day.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, it is certain that in the past capable men have not been employed to direct the farming of the Indians, and that in itself, more than any other thing, has been responsible for the failure of the Indians to cultivate their lands. Under the present arrangement an unusually capable lot of young men out of colleges have been employed, and the plan is to go forward with that work.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the object of the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say just a word, and I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Arkansas. I call his attention to the fact that there is a necessity for increasing this appropriation. In the first place, we can not tell from this item how much of it is going to be used for buying stock and how much of it for personnel.

A subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs visited practically every one of these Indian reservations. We found them simply loaded down with a lot of useless employees, with a lot of so-called "farmers" who were absolutely unnecessary. In fact, I have here and intend to offer an amendment, when we come to the Flathead Indian Reservation item, dealing with that one reservation. I have had a letter from the president of the Flathead Tribal Council in which he protests that these farmers are not needed; that they are not doing any good as farmers; and that the Indians feel that they ought not to be required to pay for a lot of special officers on the reservation who are of no benefit whatever to them.

As I said, we went to every one of those reservations and found a lot of men employed as farmers where the Indians testified time and time again that not one of them had ever visited an Indian home. Down in Oklahoma in one instance we called upon the Indians and asked how many times such a farmer had ever visted them. There was a great room full of Indians to whom the question was propounded and not one said that a farmer had ever visited an Indian home. The same thing was true in many instances as to the field nurses upon the reservation. They had not visited the Indian homes at all or done any of the things for which we appropriate money. I submit as a matter of fact there is more waste of money in the Indian Bureau than in almost any other bureau in the city of Washington.

While I am on the subject, let me call further attention to what is occurring on the Klamath Reservation out in Oregon, because I happen to have the figures here with reference to it. Here is the pay roll on that Indian reservation. For the month of July it was $9,865; for the month of August, $10,335; for the month of September, $13,000 in round numbers; and for October, $14,000 in round numbers.

Mr. McKELLAR. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. WHEELER. I am reading from the hearings of the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs. In 10 months on that Indian reservation in Oregon they spent for salaries alone $137,673. That money was coming out of the Indian funds. The Klamath Indians have come to Washington time after time and protested against the extravagance of the Indian Bureau. They testified that practically all the money they get from timber, or a large proportion of it, is being used to pay for useless employees.

We went to one Indian reservation, let me say to the Senator from Utah, where the superintendent told me they had 13 scalers. I said, "How many scalers do you really need upon the reservation?" He said only three. They had houses for them and they were employed, 13 in number. When I asked the assistant commissioner why that was, he said it was because of the fact that they expected the timber business to pick up, and said, "We are trying to keep our organization together."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does not the Senator think that the fact that the cost of the service has increased from $25,000 five years ago to $407,000 at the present time is, in itself, an indication that it might be possible to stop the increase, for a time at least?

Mr. WHEELER. I think there is no doubt about it at all. I think, as a matter of fact, the Indian Bureau personnel ought to be slashed on every reservation in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator was speaking of the Indian reservation in Oregon. They have there the finest timber in all the West. There is no better timber than that which they have. The very people the Senator speaks about there are employed for the purpose of working in that timber. He may think that one man should do all that work.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think anything of the kind. I know what the situation is because I have visited the reservation, and the Senator from Utah never has.

Mr. SMOOT. No, I never have; but I know the amount of work that is involved, and I know that one man could not do it.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not contend that one man need to do it, but let me call the attention of the Senate to the number of Forest Service men employed on these reservations. I am reading from a list which was presented to me. There is a forest examiner, another forest examiner, three forest rangers, a junior forest ranger, an assistant forester, a forest assistant, a forest car, and another forest car. Then there are six scalers, a senior forest ranger, a forest supervisor, four more scalers, another senior forest ranger, and another senior forest ranger. I submit that there are more employees in the Forest Service there than any lumber company in the Northwest has for similar operations. The expense of all those employees is coming out of the pockets of the Indians who own the timber and who have come down here to Washington time after time complaining because of the fact that they are loaded down with a lot of expensive employees who are utterly useless.

What is true upon the Klamath Reservation is true upon the Apache Indian Reservation down in the Southwest, I think in New Mexico or Arizona. It is likewise true on what is known as the White Mountain Reservation. There we find exactly the same condition. If Senators will examine the items relating to the Klamath Reservation and go through the testimony, they will be astounded.

I called attention to the fact that they had temporary scalers, two more temporary scalers, line riders, and so forth, and I named them all and asked if they were all on the pay roll. The chief clerk said they were. He gave me the names of six men in the employ of the Indian Service for the purpose of liquor suppression and control of the liquor traffic on the reservation. Their pay comes out of the pockets of the Indians. Some of the reservations where the Government has to pay all the expenses are not supplied with men of this kind, but where the cost comes out of the Indian funds they are loaded down in that way.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator leaves the subject of the Klamath Indians I want to invite his attention to a remarkable situation there. They are one of the wealthiest tribes of Indians in the country. I believe the Osages come first and then the Klamath Indians next. The reason why they are wealthy is because of their timber in that wonderful country.

On that Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon the Government has 23 employees. I asked about those who were in charge of the reservation. They all have titles and they all get good salaries. Virtually all of them get travel pay for going from one part of the reservation to another. In addition to that most of them get their food. When the question was asked of the agent of the Government, he said: "This comes out of the Indian funds; it does not come out of the Government," as though that settled the whole matter. In my judgment, these 23 men are simply living on the fat of the Indians' profits.

If the Senator will bear with me for a moment, I want to illustrate my point by reading briefly from the hearings:

Senator JONES. Are some of the civil-service employees furnished with their board?
Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, sir.
Senator JONES. And lodging?
Mr. CRAWFORD. When in travel status.
Senator MCKELLAR. How many are there?
Mr. CRAWFORD. I would say most all of the scalers.
Senator MCKELLAR. How many scalers are there?
Mr. SCATTERGOOD. We have just cut down the force there. We have laid off about 10 in the last 10 days.
Senator MCKELLAR. Is that the fact; is he telling us the facts about the scalers going around that same reservation from place to place, that they are paid their board bills?
Mr. SCATTERGOOD. I do not think so. It is news to me if they are.

Apparently he did not know, but here is the statement of an Indian who is interested in this income from the timberlands, in which he states specifically that these men are getting their board as well as their lodging.

I am not going into the proof at this time any further than to say that every one of these 23 employees, it developed, had an automobile and was driving around the reservation and elsewhere that he might want to go, furnished for the most part by the Government at the expense of the Indians. All the expense was paid out of the Indians' funds. It is unfair and unjust to the Indians. I understand the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] has an amendment relating to this matter, and when it is presented it certainly ought to be adopted. These men ought to be told that they are trustees of the Indian funds and that they must deal with them as such.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator very much. I asked some further questions of the chief clerk. The chief clerk, as a matter of fact, was unable to tell me very much what is going on in the office. I said:

You have 29 men, according to this statement you have furnished me, in beetle-control work. Is that correct?

He said it was. Twenty-nine men in beetle-control work! Just think of it!

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. On one reservation?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; and their pay all coming out of the Indian funds. I called attention to the fact of the large number of scalers they had. I do not know how many Senators know what scalers are, but the scaling of timber is something that any man can do provided he has had any experience in a lumber camp at all.

In the lumber camps in my own State there may be found innumerable men, some of whom can hardly read or write, but who have grown up in the lumber business and know that business. However, in the Indian Service, mind you, Mr. President, the Indians are not given work as scalers. An Indian who grows up in the lumber business knows how to scale lumber just as well as an expert from some school knows how to do it, and oftentimes much better; and yet, as I say, not one of the Indians was given this kind of employment. All such employees had to be under the civil service; they all had to be, as we were told, men who had graduated from some school. The superintendent would tell you that no Indian could do this kind of work.

I tried a case for the Government of the United States against the Great Northern Railroad Co. on one occasion, and practically all we used in the way of experts were experienced lumbermen who started in as scalers and who practically had no education at all.

According to the statement, it seems that 25 men were employed in beetle-control work. One day, when Indians were doing that kind of work, some little fellow who was brought out there from one of the eastern colleges "fired" all the Indians who were working on the reservation because of the fact that he said he could not get along with them and they could not do the work; and yet all the Indians had to do was to scrape the bark off the trees.

This is just a sample of what will be found on practically all the Indian reservations. I have appealed to the superintendent, I have appealed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs time and time again, and said to them that, in view of the circumstances, the Congress ought to cut the appropriations for the carrying on of the Indian agencies in half. In my judgment, we could cut them even more than that; and particularly we could cut out of the appropriation practically all the items providing for the employment of farmers upon the reservations because of the fact that they are practically useless so far as the Indians are concerned. I challenge the Senator from Utah to point out on any reservation in the United States of America a case where a single one of the instructing farmers employed on such reservation is actually doing anything for the benefit of the Indians in the way of showing them how to farm.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that challenge is easily made; but while I have not at the moment the reference to the particular reservations, I challenge the statement the Senator makes.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well. I want to say that in conjunction with the subcommittee I visited practically every one of these reservations. We called upon the farmers and ascertained the conditions; and further I wish to say that the bureau itself can not show where the farmers have been teaching the Indians how to farm. The Indians are conducting their farming operations in the same primitive way as in the past. We have been appropriating money for farmers to instruct the Indians in the science of agriculture for a long period of time, but still the Indians are carrying on their farming operations in practically the same primitive way that they employed when we started to introduce this work.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KENDRICK. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether his statement applies with equal force to the new men who have been employed by the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs to instruct the Indians in agriculture?

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that thus far on any Indian reservation that the committee visited—and we visited practically all of them—we did not find a single farmer who was actually doing anything in the way of showing the individual Indian how to carry on farming operations.

Mr. KENDRICK. The only reservation on which I have had an opportunity directly to observe the effect of the change in administration is the Shoshone and Arapahoe Reservation in my own State. It was my privilege to come in contact with the work of the man who has recently, during the year, been stationed at that reservation to instruct the Indians on that reservation in agriculture. I met him there. He was from the State of Utah, he had just come from college there, and there is no question in the world as to the headway he was making with those Indians. Of course, there are other reservations in other States where different conditions may prevail; but if the same type of man was placed on all the Indian reservations, real results would be obtained, just as the county agents obtain results for the farmers in agricultural communities.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am indeed glad to hear the Senator's statement that the new farmer who has been employed on the reservation to which he refers has been doing something for the Indians. The committee visited reservations in Wisconsin, we visited them in North Dakota, we visited them in South Dakota, we visited them in Montana, we visited them all through the Southwest, and invariably the Indians told us, and the farmers themselves admitted under oath, that those employed to instruct them in agriculture were not doing so, but, as a matter of fact, were acting as subagents and performing work of that kind. They have not been instructing the Indians how to carry on their farming operations.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I believe the Senator will recall that he has heard me say that the farming operations on Indian reservations in the past and the farmers who were directing those operations were utterly hopeless, and that the instructors were as incompetent a group of men as I have ever seen in the Government service. But, from talking with the officials of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, I have learned and believe that they are planning and intending, as fast as possible, to supplant the present force with competent men who can and will teach the Indians, and it is on that account that I favor the increase in this particular item.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that I know he is interested in the Indians just exactly as much as I am, and frankly I had supposed at one time that the farmers, in view of the money that we are appropriating for their employment, were actually teaching the Indians how to farm.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will take the time, when the Senator has concluded his remarks, to tell the Senate the changes which have been made under the reorganization which has taken place since, perhaps, the Senator was on the Indian reservations.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator can hardly tell me how conditions have changed since I was on some of the reservations, because it was only last spring that, in connection with the subcommittee, I visited the Indian reservations in the southwest and practically all other Indian reservations, and we found exactly the same conditions as I have described.

Let me say to the Senator from Utah that I know the Indian Bureau gets out a lot of fine documents; it employs publicity agents to write magazine articles to tell the people of the country about what they are doing for the Indians; but when one goes out to the Indian reservations and sees the way those Indians are living, in poverty and beggary, and then sees how the employees are riding around in high-class automobiles, and from their efforts the Indians are getting no benefit, it just makes one's blood curdle to think that we are appropriating thousands and thousands of dollars, in fact, millions of dollars, to maintain a bureau from which the Indians are getting no benefit.

I am not at all sure, Mr. President, but that if we had abolished the Indian Bureau altogether the Indians throughout the United States would have been much better off to-day than they are now by the maintenance of the Indian Bureau and the expenditure of all the money we have appropriated for it.

Mr. SMOOT. Such a statement as that seems to me almost ridiculous.

Mr. WHEELER. It may seem ridiculous to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I say it seems ridiculous in view of the facts. If the Indian were left alone to deal with the white man, with no one between him and the white man, what would he have left?

Mr. WHEELER. What has he left to-day on any of the reservations? His timber has been taken away from him; his oil has been taken away from him; practically every asset that he had has been taken away from him; and they have been taken away under the sanction of the Indian Bureau. All the Indian has to-day, in most instances, is a heavy indebtedness against the land that he possesses. What have the Indians on the Flathead Reservation got to-day? What has the Indian upon any reservation got to-day except a lot of encumbered land?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, in order that I may give him a concrete example of how the agents are treating the Indians?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I quote from page 193 of the hearings before the Senate committee, as follows:

Senator SMOOT. Just a minute, Senator. He says their regular work. Do you know whether there is any employee of the Government, such as a scaler, we will say, now, that goes out in the daytime and tends to his work, and then comes back home at night, where he is receiving extra compensation for board?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; not that day.

Senator SMOOT. Then, what do you mean? Now, when does he receive it, and where does he go when he does receive it?

Mr. CRAWFORD. For example, I will point that out here. Mr. Silvers is the check scaler. He draws $2,120 a year, and goes around checking on the different logging camps.

He does not go off of the reservation. He is paid $2,120 a year for his work in checking up on logs that have been scaled, to find out what the condition is; he is furnished with an automobile, gas, and oil, and when he goes from one lumber camp to another, his board is paid.

Here is a concrete example of a scaler who was employed to scale timber growing on an Indian reservation. He draws $2,120 a year salary; he draws an automobile and all the expenses of running that automobile, and then, in addition, he draws his food. I do not believe the general public would fleece the Indians as this agent, who was sent there for the protection of the Indians, is doing.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Tennessee says the employee referred to "draws his automobile." How could he get around from one section to the other without an automobile?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know; I suppose nobody could do so.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, he could not. The Government furnishes him an automobile because of the fact that it is necessary.

Mr. McKELLAR. The extract I read refers to an employee going over the reservation. It had nothing to do with his going around a State. The testimony was that merely one reservation was involved.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say "State"; I said reservation; and Indian reservations are larger than counties. One can not walk through a county and back home in a day. The employee never draws any compensation for food or for board and lodging unless he is away from home. If he is able to come back home, he does not draw it, exactly as is stated in the hearings.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator knows, if he knows anything about the lumber business at all, that it is not necessary to employ as scalers men who are expert foresters, who are graduates of schools and colleges. That work ought to be given to the Indians upon the reservations where they are competent Indians to do the work. Upon the Klamath Reservation the Indians have grown up in the timber business, and yet upon that reservation there is hardly one of them who is employed in that work, so far as I know at the present time, but scalers from the outside are being paid $2,100 a year when there are Indians who are thoroughly competent to do the work. Yet they are going hungry and can not get any work to do upon the reservation.

The Senator can stand upon the floor of the Senate and defend the Indian Bureau all he wants to; he can read the figures and the fantastic stories which they send out and in which they tell about what they are doing for the Indians on the reservations; but if the Senator will go out and actually see for himself the conditions in which the Indians are living and then compare those conditions with the way the white employees are living and the salaries they are drawing upon those reservations, he will be in a position where he can come down on the floor of the Senate and tell us some facts and not take the glowing stories that are told by the Indian Bureau for the benefit of the Senate or are told by their publicity agents, whose articles are written for the magazines in order to boost their stock with some of the people living in the East, who think that they know more about how to run Indian reservations than do the people of the West.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would just as lief take the word of a representative of the bureau, as the Senator calls him, or of a man who is directing the affairs of a reservation, as I would the word of Mr. Crawford or that of Mr. Collier.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no doubt that the Senator would prefer to take the word of any of the employees on the reservations and who are interested financially in holding on to their jobs and building up a great bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. WHEELER. But let me say to the Senator that the superintendent of the White Mountain Reservation told me that they had, as I recall, 13 scalers there, and when I asked him, "What are you doing with 13 scalers at the present time?" he said he did not need them. When I said to him, "Why do you not tell the superintendent of the reservation or the assistant commissioner?" he did not want to tell him because of the fact that in some instances the Indians are afraid to point out what the actual needs are, because that is in a different department. This is in the forestry department, and the forestry department of the Indian Service is an expensive luxury for these Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, suppose a man did tell the facts. Does the Senator think that if he told the facts and an investigation were made of the matter and the committee verified these facts they would not support him in the statement?

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I say I would.

Mr. WHEELER. I say to the Senator from Utah that the department did not support this man in the matter, because when I called it to their attention they said they "wanted to keep their organization together." They want to continue to pay from $1,800 to $2,100 each, taking the money out of the pockets of the Indians, to keep nine white men employed at the expense of these Indians, who are going half starved and half naked. Is that what the Senator would support?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President.

Mr. WHEELER. Is that what the Senator calls justice to the Indians?

Mr. SMOOT. That is not what I stated. The Senator from Montana speaks as if there were just a few sections of land in this reservation. As a matter of fact, some of the best timber in the United States is in the reservation. It covers an area miles and miles and miles long and miles and miles and miles wide.

Mr. WHEELER. How much timber have they?

Mr. SMOOT. It is covered with timber that is unequaled in the United States; and I am quite sure that those who are interested in the welfare of the Indian and his future would not do a thing on that reservation that would in any way jeopardize the interests of the Indian.

The Senator from Montana may think otherwise. We had testimony by Mr. Crawford otherwise, but Mr. Crawford is here every year. He tells the same story every year, and when we call it to the attention of the department the department says it is not true.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not care what the department says. The Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs was with this committee. He sat there and heard the testimony; and I said to him then, as I am saying it on the floor of the Senate, that there is not the slightest excuse for that bureau keeping the long list of employees that it has on that reservation. If the Senator himself would go out there with his subcommittee and listen to the testimony given by these people as to the number of employees upon the Klamath Reservation, I do not believe the Senator would entertain the views that he does.

The Senator says Mr. Crawford comes down here every year; and that is true. He has come down here protesting time and time again. What chance has anybody who comes before the subcommittee, of which the Senator is chairman, when it has its hearings? The Senator listens solely to the bureau and to the members of the bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not.

Mr. WHEELER. The poor Indian who comes down here, who seldom has enough money to come down here, and can not come down here unless the department O. K's it, gets short shrift when he goes before the Senator's subcommittee, and the department is listened to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. You are letting these people rob the Indians, and it is about time that it was stopped.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Montana makes a charge that is not the fact. So far as the subcommittee of which I am chairman is concerned, Mr. Crawford could have one day or two days if he wanted to. He never was asked to desist in any statement he wanted to make. He can come at any time he desires. He is listened to by the committee. He is given more time than even the heads of the departments.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but his testimony is ignored.

Mr. SMOOT. His testimony is not ignored at all. The committee weighs the testimony and does the best it can, just as the House committee did.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. When Mr. Crawford came last year with a certificate from the Klamath Indians—and they are among the most progressive and intelligent of the Indians—to represent them and to speak for them, some of the Indian Bureau officials in Washington did all they could to undermine him. They communicated with representatives of the bureau who were on the reservation and induced them to create a rump organization for the purpose of discrediting Mr. Crawford and securing his recall. They failed in their improper and reprehensible purpose. May I add that I am in agreement with the views expressed by my friend from Montana. I agree with him that the Indian Bureau and the Government have failed in their duty to the Indians, who are worse off to-day than they were when Mr. Scattergood and Mr. Rhoads came to power in the Indian Bureau.

The Indians complained against their predecessors, but hoped that with the new régime, in view of the promises which were made by Secretary Wilbur, important and needed reforms would be made. But they have been sorely disappointed, and to-day there is more starvation and more poverty among the Indians than ever before. Some Indians have told me that they would welcome a return of Mr. Burke and Mr. Meritt.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Senator said that the Klamath Indians have miles and miles and miles of timber. They have about 5,000,000,000 feet of uncut timber. That is what they have.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the largest standing timber of the kind anywhere in the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. Of that particular kind of timber, yes; but I will venture the assertion that there is not any lumbering company in the United States that owns the same amount of timber that has anywhere near the same number of employees, foresters, forest supervisors, and undersupervisors that they have on the Klamath Reservation.

I know perfectly well, Mr. President, that there is not in the State of Montana, the State of Utah, the State of Oregon, the State of Washington, or any other place, a tract of timber controlled and operated by a private concern where they have the high-priced supervisors and subsupervisors that they have upon the Klamath Reservation.

I admit that they need some supervisors there, but I say that they do not begin to need the number of men they have upon that reservation to run it; and you can not find an expert outside of the Forestry Department, perhaps, or the Indian forestry department, or some bureau of the Government, who will say that all those men are necessary. You can not find an unbiased lumberman in the United States to-day who will go out there and examine their operations and say that they need that number of employees upon that Indian reservation.

What the bureau is doing to-day is just outrageous. They say, "But we must do it, because we must keep our organization together." Is that what the lumber companies are doing? Senators talk about teaching the Indians how to run their business efficiently. Is that teaching them how to run their business efficiently? It is building up a great organization and a great bureau that is simply taking the money away from these Indians.

On the Flathead Reservation the matter is a comparatively small one; but the Indians on the Flathead Reservation simply say that these farmers out there are of no use to them. Is it necessary to have six men engaged in suppressing the liquor traffic on the Klamath Reservation, to be paid out of the Indian fund?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator several times has referred to the apparently excessive number of enforcement officers on that particular reservation. Did the committee, or the Senator for the committee, go into the question of the actual services performed by these various employees, or undertake to do so?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; we went into it, and as far as the committee could see there has been very little lessening of the liquor traffic among those Indians. I have forgotten now the exact number of Indians upon the Klamath Reservation, and I do not know how it compares with the Flathead Reservation or some of the other Indian reservations; but on some of the other reservations, with approximately the same number of Indians, where the expense is paid by the Government, they have no enforcement officers at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has the Senator figures available to disclose the area of the Klamath Reservation?

Mr. WHEELER. I have not it right here in this report, but I can turn to it in a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, my recollection is that it is about the size of a small county—about 20 miles.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I had it here; but there are over a million acres in the Klamath Reservation.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; over a million acres.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not remember the exact figures, but there are over a million acres there.

Mr. President, referring to this matter of prohibition enforcement, in the House hearings, on page 637, Mr. Murphy made this statement:

> At this point I would like to ask Mr. Crawford if he would advocate doing away with the officers of the law on the Klamath Reservation in view of the answer just made to my question by Mr. Dodd.
> Mr. CRAWFORD. No, sir. I don't believe we should do away with law and order. I think we should maintain law and order. I believe we should protect our reservation and carry out the law on the reservation, but I don't think we should have to carry out the law in the incorporated towns within the reservation.

And they are not doing that.

Mr. WHEELER. They are not doing it?

Mr. SMOOT. No; not in the towns within the reservation. That is what he said.

Mr. WHEELER. No; he says he does not think they should be forced to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator says they are not doing it.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I read his statement, which is:

> But I don't think we should have to carry out the law in the incorporated towns within the reservation, where these officers hang out and spend most of their time. I don't believe we should spend money to go off the reservation to carry out the prohibition law.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say that that is the case?

Mr. WHEELER. I do say that that is the case.

Mr. SMOOT. That the officers go off the reservation for that purpose?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. The Senator smiles; but I say to the Senator that the testimony taken there showed that these officers did go off the reservation to enforce the law in these neighboring towns.

Mr. SMOOT. That was where somebody belonging on the reservation was off in a neighboring town.

Mr. WHEELER. That was where the Indians went off the reservation, and the officers spent their time, as the Indians said they did, off the reservation.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; to take care of the Indian who was off there, violating the law.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but let me call the attention of the Senator to the situation in South Dakota, where the superintendent on one of the South Dakota reservations said that there was a bootlegger under every sagebrush, and there was not any attempt to enforce the law. When we tried to get the department to send an officer down there, they did not send him; but when the money was coming out of the Indians' pockets they had six of them lying around.

Because these Indians happen to be almost the richest tribe in the United States to-day, particularly in the Northwest, the bureau officials are just loading them up with a tremendously big pay roll. One hundred and thirty-seven thousand dollars in 10 months is coming out of the pockets of the Indians to support the pay roll of white bureaucrats who are receiving all the way from four or five thousand dollars annually down to two thousand, while many of the Indians out there are in a beggarly condition.

The Senator from Utah can defend that if he desires to do so, but I say it is an injustice to those Indians. The expenses on the Klamath Reservation ought to be cut to the very bone.

The Senator talks about teaching the Indians something. The Indians of the Klamath Reservation are among the highest type of Indians in the United States, and the best educated. I venture the assertion that if they were given their way, and ran that reservation for themselves, they would run it better and more economically than it is being run by the department at the present time.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I should like to ascertain from the chairman of the subcommittee what amount of the total appropriation we are now considering is provided for assistance of the Seminole Indians of Florida. We have been dealing with the educational and agricultural feature, and so forth; and we have about 600 Seminole Indians in my State.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not answer the question, because the matter has not been presented to the committee, and I have no evidence on the subject at hand. More than likely I could find out, if the Senator desires.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Does not the committee, in passing on these items, require the departments to submit detailed statements covering the amounts of money they are asking for?

Mr. SMOOT. The detailed statement in this case, I think, would go to the House with the estimate; but I have not seen it. It may be that it is my fault that I do not have it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am just trying to ascertain what is being done for the Seminole Indians of Florida. I have brought up that subject on the floor of the Senate on other occasions. I have discussed it somewhat with members of the Indian Affairs Committee. The chairman of that committee, I believe, visited in my State last year. We have been getting a little pitiful sum of $10,000 or $15,000 a year to take care of those poor unfortunate Indians in my State, and I want some provision made for them. I want some generosity and fairness and justice extended to them, the same as is extended to Indians in the rest of the country. I am trying to look the matter up. If no provision has been made and it becomes necessary for me to offer an amendment to provide that a certain part of this appropriation be spent in behalf of the Seminole Indians, I want to have the amendment agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice in the report that the Indians are included under the consolidated Utes; I do not know why. I find the item "Florida, Seminole." The total is $15,393.87. In other words, the support of the administration is $10,351.82; agent's building, $398.94; conservation of health, $3,795.54; Indian school support, $847.15. I think those amounts total $15,393.87.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think that is very inadequate for 600 Indians. Two-thirds of that, possibly 90 per cent, is used for salaries to the agent and other employees and for office rent. Very little of it goes to the actual benefit of the Indians, other than that they have the supervision, so called, of an Indian agent. I really think we ought to make some provision of a more substantial nature in this bill to care for the Seminole Indians of Florida. During these times of depression and the practical closing of the market for their products, otter hides, alligator hides, and other articles they sell upon the market, I am told that they are having a terrible struggle to get the actual necessities of life, that there is really considerable suffering among the Indians located in that part of the country.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was a member of the committee which visited Florida. We found that the five or six hundred Indians in Florida are not considered to be under the jurisdiction of the department. The secretary, when he came before our committee, made the statement that his department was not hunting any more Indians, that they had more under their jurisdiction than they preferred to keep, and that the Indians not now under the jurisdiction of the department they do not want to bring back under the department.

That applies to the Florida Indians. They are not considered to be under the jurisdiction of the department, and the department does not want them under its jurisdiction. The fact is that they have a reservation in Florida of approximately 160 acres of land. On that reservation there is a residence in which is a temporary agent. Across the road is a very small school building, and near the school building several small houses of frame construction, very cheaply built. The Government does maintain the school, and when we were there we saw probably 8 or 10 Indian children in the school. The Indian families which patronize the school live in these small houses. The department does not consider that the Seminoles of Florida are really under the jurisdiction of the department, and not only that but they refuse to consider that they will be under the department.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, Congress has control of that matter, and I know of no reason in the world why they should not be under the jurisdiction of the department if they are not. It is a great piece of injustice not to have them under the jurisdiction of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. Has there not been objection on their part to coming under the jurisdiction of the Government?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not think there has been any objection. Of course, they are like the Indians most everywhere else; they do not particularly court the idea of education or improved farming methods, or anything of that sort.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There are three groups among the Indians of Florida. There is one group among them which, if it learns that a Federal official is coming to Florida to see the Indians, begins to move. They will not treat with the Federal officials, and if anyone should raise a flag where this particular group of Indians is, they immediately leave that section. They will not live near the flag, nor will they confer with anyone who represents the Government. Hatred for the Government has been born and bred into them, and they can not get it out.

On the other hand, there is another group which is willing to come under the jurisdiction of and to confer with their Government, and those two groups are deadly enemies. There is still a third group, which I do not care to discuss at the present time.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have four amendments to offer to the pending measure, which I ask to have printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be printed and lie upon the table.

WAR POLICIES COMMISSION

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, yesterday I submitted a resolution (S. Res. 180) in behalf of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and myself, the purport of which is simply to refer the report of the War Policies Commission to the Treasury Department for its recommendations.

The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] objected to the consideration of the resolution. Both have withdrawn their objections. It is important that the report should be back here before the tax bill is reported, and I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the War Policies Commission, in which is recommended the application in time of war of a 95 per cent tax on all incomes of corporations and of individuals in excess of the prior 3-year average income, be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury for a prompt expression of his detailed recommendations and opinions.

RAILROAD MERGER

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was authorized by unanimous vote of the Committee on the Judiciary to report a resolution relating to certain mergers of railroads, which I did a day or two ago, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 173), as follows:

Whereas it has been asserted within the last few days by the chairman of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in his official capacity, that through the formation of holding companies and otherwise numerous combinations of parallel and competing railroads engaged in interstate commerce have recently been made, without authority of law, and particularly without first obtaining the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as provided in section 5 of the interstate commerce act; and

Whereas the same authority has stated that there have apparently been deliberate attempts, by means of such combinations, to evade, anticipate, and forestall action by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to restrict and impede said commission in the free and effective exercise of its lawful powers; and

Whereas it is a matter of common knowledge that in furtherance of the acts aforesaid large quantities of stocks and bonds in such holding companies and other corporations have been marketed and sold to private investors throughout the United States at prices far in excess of any present or prospective value, thus occasioning enormous losses to the purchasers thereof; and

Whereas a number of said combinations of railroads have been expressly declared by the commission to be in violation of law; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission an application of four railroad corporations in the eastern section of the United States which, if approved, would explicitly condone these violations of law and render the commission powerless to exercise its independent judgment as to the public interest in the consolidation of railroads in such territory: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General of the United States be requested to inform the Senate as soon as practicable (1) whether such transactions constitute contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or attempts to monopolize or restrain such commerce, in violation of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890, as amended, commonly called the antitrust act; (2) in what respect, if any, such transactions differ from the operations condemned by the Supreme Court of the United States in the so-called Northern Securities case (193 U. S. 197); and (3) what steps, if any, have been taken or are contemplated by the Department of Justice for the enforcement in these instances of the antitrust laws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting a nomination for the Federal Farm Loan Board, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(For nomination this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate adjourn, the adjournment being until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 9, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate March 8 (legislative day of March 2), 1932

MEMBER OF THE FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD

Vulosko Vaiden, of Farmville, Va., to be a member of the Federal Farm Loan Board for the unexpired term of eight years, expiring August 6, 1932, in place of George R. Cooksey, resigned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 8, 1932

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, O most high. Out of our grateful hearts let us fulfill our tasks. O King eternal, whose right is to reign and whose throne from everlasting to everlasting, make our hearts Thy empire, a kingdom cleansed and purified. Do Thou enlarge the bounds of the invisible world to us. Grant that everywhere and at all times we may believe that all things work together for good to them that love the Lord. So enter our lives that we may rejoice in infirmity, in temptation, and in trial, and help us toward that final joy in which the memory of all trouble, all tears, and all heartaches have vanished forever. Almighty God, help us to lift up a standard for the people; enable us to rally the elements of society that have been badly discouraged in their battle with adversity and tell them that the conflict is not lost. May the note of victory be sounded forth in the name and in the strength of our Jehovah Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment concurrent resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. Con. Res. 14. Concurrent resolution accepting the statue of Gen. John Sevier, presented by the State of Tennessee, to be placed in Statuary Hall; and

H. Con. Res. 27. Concurrent resolution relative to the printing of "Revenue Revision, 1932."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2985) entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Connecticut River State Bridge Commission, a statutory commission of the State of Connecticut created and existing under the provisions of Special Act No. 496 of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, 1931 session, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Connecticut River."

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. SMOOT and Mr. HARRISON members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Treasury Department.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted a privileged report on the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 708), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the report on the bill H. R. 10236, the revenue bill, will go to the Printing Office for printing and will not be available to the press or to any Members of the House to-day. The report will be available to-morrow morning for each Member of the House and for the press.

The report is a long one. We are seeking to describe in detail every provision of the bill, and I am sure that if the press, the country, and the Members of the House will read the report they will have full knowledge of the bill.

It is my intention, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, to move to take up this bill in the House for consideration next Thursday.

TAXATION

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing two resolutions passed by the Legislature of the State of New York. These petitions are addressed to the Congress of the United States and deal with taxation matters.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from New York if he also has the resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of New York petitioning Congress to repeal the eighteenth amendment?

Mr. SNELL. That resolution has not come to me; and if it does, I shall ask to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. DYER. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
IN SENATE,
Albany, February 29, 1932.

By Mr. MASTICK:

Resolved (if the Assembly concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York hereby memorializes and petitions the Congress of the United States to enact legislation amending section 5219 of the United States revised statutes in such manner that, as so amended, it will (a) relieve the several States of the necessity of imposing a tax upon savings and loan associations of the purely mutual type, being a tax which under present conditions the State must impose if it is not to endanger the validity of the tax on national banks, and (b) to grant the State freedom to tax national banks as businesses to the same extent and in the same manner as it taxes other businesses, to tax the property of national banks to the same extent and in the same manner as it taxes other property, and to tax the shareholders in national banks on their property or income to the same extent and in the same manner as it taxes shareholders in other corporations on their property or their income.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the United States Senate, and to each Member of Congress elected from the State of New York.

By order of the senate.

A. MINER WELLMAN, Clerk.

In assembly, February 29, 1932. Concurred in without amendment, by order of the assembly, Fred W. Hammond, clerk.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
IN SENATE,
Albany, February 29, 1932.

(By Mr. Mastick)

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York hereby memorializes and petitions the Congress of the United States to enact legislation providing for substantial increase in the rates of the Federal estate tax and for the continuance in force, with respect to any increases in the Federal estate tax, of the present law which permits credits against the Federal tax for State death duties paid to the extent of 80 per cent of the Federal tax.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the United States Senate and to each Member of Congress elected from the State of New York.

By order of the senate.

A. MINER WELLMAN, Clerk.

In assembly, February 29, 1932, concurred in without amendment. By order of the assembly. Fred W. Hammond, clerk.

COMPULSORY USE OF PARACHUTES BY AIR TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of parachutes on airplanes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, no one can ride in an Army or Navy airplane unless he wears a parachute, but no one uses a parachute on commercial airplanes. The many deaths and casualties of passengers and pilots of the planes of commercial transportation companies must indeed give us pause and compel us to ask the question, Why is it not compulsory for airplane common carriers to provide parachutes?

Apparently the transport operators have made a definite agreement among themselves not to go into the expense of providing parachutes, and they are vigorously opposed to my bill, introduced this day, forcing them to provide parachutes for every passenger and every pilot.

From 1919 until the end of 1931 over 700 persons saved their lives by parachute jumps from Army planes. On January 15, 1923, general order known as Circular No. 6 was issued, forbidding any Army pilot to take up a passenger or go up in a plane not equipped with parachutes. The Navy followed almost immediately.

Since that time the military services of England, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Poland, Italy, France, Germany, Latvia, Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavia, Greece, Japan, Rumania, Siam, and the Soviet Union, as well as several other countries, including many of South America, have adopted them. Wise civilian flyers, trained in the military traditions of aviation, nearly always wear them. Their use on the part of pilots flying the air mail in this country (without passengers) is mandatory, and the lives of several of them have been saved.

The wise passenger should think of fire hazard, motor failure, structural weakness, propeller breakage, fog, high wind, collision, lack of fuel, and control failure, and demand parachutes before he rides in any plane. Ships at sea are compelled to provide life preservers and other devices for the saving of human life. The commercial operator of airplanes will argue that parachutes will scare away passengers. In answer I might say that parachutes can be put in planes much more unobtrusively than life preservers or lifeboats on a steamship, yet one never heard of ocean-going traffic being scared off because of these contrivances. Just as on ocean-going ships there are fire drills and life-preserver drills, so there could be parachute drills on commercial planes.

I have traveled on Army planes and have always worn a parachute. Every time I get into a commercial plane I have to conquer my fears. I would, indeed, feel more comfortable with a parachute strapped onto me.

Of course, great expense would be incurred. Planes would either have to be larger or fewer passengers carried, but where life is at stake there should be no question of expenditure. The transport lines will have to face this issue some day; they may as well face it now. Undoubtedly, the great football coach, Rockne, and his companions could have been saved if parachutes had been provided. As Will Rogers remarked, "The Army can't be wrong all the time."

My bill for parachutes, H. R. 8823, is as follows:

A bill for compulsory use of parachutes by airplane common carriers, and penalties for violations thereof

Be it enacted, etc., That no person shall operate as a common carrier of persons or property by aircraft in interstate commerce without providing for each pilot and each passenger carried by such aircraft on all flights a parachute properly adjusted and ready for instant use (except in lighter-than-air craft, where the duties of the individual are such that this is impracticable).

SEC. 2. The term "person," as used in this act, shall include partnerships, associations, or corporations, as well as an individual.

SEC. 3. The term "interstate commerce" means commerce between any places in a State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof, or between points within the same State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or through any place outside thereof.

SEC. 4. Any person who violates any provision of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 days, or both.

LIMITATION OF INJUNCTIONS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 166.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5315, a bill to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes.

That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed four hours, to be controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and to be equally divided between those favoring the bill and those opposing it, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and any amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Michigan desire some time?

Mr. MICHENER. We would like the usual 30 minutes on this side.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Michigan 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, a few years ago one would never have seriously believed that a bill curtailing the powers of Federal courts in granting injunctions in labor disputes would come before the House of Representatives assured of passage after having been passed almost unanimously by the other body.

Such is progress in a democracy. Many proposals but a few years ago considered radical and paternalistic are accepted to-day by all political parties as worthy and beneficial to the progress of our Government.

I congratulate the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] in his advocacy of H. R. 5315, and I congratulate the distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota for his earnest work for years in behalf of this measure. Yes; I said Minnesota, not Nebraska, because the anti-injunction bill was first introduced in the Senate and again year after year by Senator SHIPSTEAD, who deserves credit alongside the gentleman from New York. For five years the bill has been before the Senate and the House. Lengthy hearings have been held year after year.

I shall not occupy the few minutes I have yielded to myself in complete analysis of this important piece of legislation. The rule under consideration provides for four hours' general debate which, while it sounds like a long time, may not be ample to fully explain this somewhat intricate measure.

Briefly, the bill deals with two major subjects:

First. The granting by the Federal courts of injunctions in labor disputes. It of course has no application to or control over State courts. Eleven States have already adopted somewhat similar anti-injunction bills.

Second. The bill also declares the "yellow-dog" contract void and against public policy.

It is generally admitted that the granting of injunctions by our Federal judges in labor disputes has developed into a scandalous abuse of judicial process.

The 1928 national conventions of both political parties denounced the abuse and promised remedial legislation.

The Democratic platform said:

We believe that injunctions in labor disputes have in some instances been abused and have given rise to a serious question for legislation.

The Republican platform said, in part:

We recognize that legislative and other investigations have shown the existence of grave abuse in the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes.

The untrammeled right of workers to organize and act jointly in matters affecting their wages and welfare has been recognized by all courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States, as necessary to meet the concentration of employing power.

If a worker is prohibited from exercising some control over the conditions of his employment, he is in a state of peonage.

Chief Justice Taft in the case of American Foundries v. Tri-City Council (257 U. S. 184, 209) said:

> Labor unions * * * were organized out of the necessities of the situation. A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer. * * * The right to combine for such a lawful purpose has in many years not been denied by any court.

Chief Justice Hughes said in the case of Texas & New Orleans Railroad Co. against Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, decided May 26, 1930:

> The legality of collective action on the part of employees in order to safeguard their proper interests is not to be disputed.

The "strike" has been recognized by our highest court as a lawful agency in the economic disputes between employee and employer.

This bill proposes to limit the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in labor disputes. That Congress has such power over the Federal district courts and the Federal circuit courts of appeal follows from the power of Congress to create or abolish those courts.

This was held in the case of Myers v. United States (272 U. S. 52, 130) and other cases.

Contrary to the belief of some people, this bill does not attempt to take away from the Federal courts all power to restrain unlawful acts or acts of fraud or violence in labor disputes.

The bill, section 2, declares it to be the public policy of the United States that the employee shall have a free opportunity in lawfully dealing with his employer, that he shall have "full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of his own choosing," and "shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers." * * *

Among the many abuses of the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes has been forbidding the unions to pay any strike benefits to the strikers; forbidding any person, whether a member of the union or not, to give any aid or assistance to the strikers. Often the injunctions have gone so far as to forbid attorneys to advise the strikers as to their rights even in proceedings to dispossess the strikers from their homes. Again some injunctions have prohibited the strikers from giving any publicity to the existence of the strike or the reasons for it or their justification of it. Such prohibitions are, of course, outrageous violations of the right of "free speech."

Yet there has been no legislative law for these extraordinary decrees of our courts. This judge-made law has developed in the past 40 years. The judges have themselves made the law and have themselves enforced the penalties for the violation of the laws made by them.

Such an uncivilized and tyrannical procedure can not possibly be longer endured. It is because of this development of law made on the bench that our Federal courts have lost a great deal of respect.

In fact, I hope this measure is but one step that Congress will take to regulate the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

I never have been able to understand the real necessity for the inferior Federal courts. I have always been opposed to their existence as unnecessary. I believe they have no place in our democratic form of government, of course, except the Supreme Court of the United States. I believe that every issue that comes into the inferior Federal courts could be tried in the State courts.

I have often said that the Federal courts obtain jurisdiction by fraud, not fraud on the part of the court but on the part of the litigants. Take practically every matter that comes into the Federal courts, whether because of alleged diverse citizenship or on other grounds, every one could as well be tried in the State courts, and in most instances the acquisition of jurisdiction is ground in fraud, fabricated and manufactured to avoid the State courts and get into the Federal court for ulterior purposes.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BECK. The gentleman does not mean to say that where there is an issue in controversy as to the construction of the Constitution of the United States or any statute of the United States, that invoking the jurisdiction of the Federal courts on that ground is a fraud?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I said cases in the Federal and district courts and the circuit courts of appeals. I said I would maintain the Supreme Court of the United States, which handles those questions, and many of which questions can go direct to that court.

Mr. BECK. Is not my friend ignoring the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States, except in a few isolated instances, has no original jurisdiction, and, therefore, if there be no inferior courts the Constitution of the United States would often have no construction or possibility of application in the Federal court?

Mr. O'CONNOR. There is no obligation on the Congress to organize the inferior Federal courts; and when it did organize them, it furnished them with such jurisdiction as it saw fit. I maintain those matters could properly be relegated to the Supreme Court.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Appeals lie from the supreme courts of the States in all cases involving Federal questions?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do so understand, if I recall correctly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has control of the entire hour. He has yielded 30 minutes to his colleague from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], who is, like the gentleman, in favor of the bill. I am wondering whether in fairness of debate, under the rules governing all parliamentary bodies, the gentleman is going to yield some of this hour to those of us who are against the bill?

Mr. MICHENER. That is on the rule, and not on the merits of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; it is on the rule, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] is arguing the merits of the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield to a dialogue.

Mr. BLANTON. Would not the gentleman yield me some time? I am against the bill and the rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No.

Mr. BLANTON. That settles that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I refuse to yield; and in answer to what was not a question, let me state that at the insistent request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] I drafted a rule which I brought in here, which is different from most rules in that it specifically gives two hours of the time to those opposed to the bill. Most rules give the committee all of the time, but this rule gives two hours to the opposition. So great is the gluttony of the gentleman from Texas for punishment that apparently the two hours are not sufficient for him. I do not know anybody else who is opposed to the bill. I imagine that he will have the whole two hours to himself.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No. The bill also—section 6, which, like the other section of the bill, applies alike to organizations of employees as well as employers—remedies a grossly unfair practice that has grown up of holding officers and members of unions liable for damages for the acts of other members without proof of participation or direction or ratification of such acts. The bill merely requires actual proof of such participation, direction, or ratification before the officers or other members can be held liable. If this be a change in the "law of agency," as some claim, it is at most a change in the rule of evidence in civil cases only, a power well recognized as lodging in Congress. See Bailey v. Alabama (219 U. S. 238).

One of the big features of the bill is that no restraining order can be granted, except in exceptional cases, without notice to the defendant and a hearing in open court of the testimony of sworn witnesses on both sides.

Section 7 also provides that before issuing an injunction against defendants' alleged unlawful acts the court must find—

That the public officers charged with the duty to protect claimant's property have failed or are unable to furnish adequate protection.

Surely the court should not exercise police power if the constituted authorities are willing and able to perform that function.

There are, however, exceptional cases in which the Federal courts may issue a temporary restraining order without notice, if necessary to prevent irreparable injury to property. The court must first, however, take testimony under oath rather than by affidavit, and such an order is effective for only five days.

Section 8 of the bill might be called the "clean-hands" provision of the measure. That section provides that a complainant shall not be entitled to an injunction if he has not complied with any contract or obligation on his part or has not made every reasonable effort to settle the dispute by the available methods of arbitration or mediation. Surely, this fundamental principle of equity that "he who seeks justice must do justice" should apply in labor disputes as well as in other judicial controversies.

The bill also provides for a speedy appeal to either party and a preference in the appellate courts.

Another outstanding and progressive feature of the bill is the granting of a speedy and public trial by jury to a person charged with contempt of court, not committed in the court's presence or proximity. For centuries the English courts have granted jury trials for criminal contempt, while in our courts the practice has grown up during the last century to have such important trials before a judge alone, when, in fact, they are criminal offenses carrying confinement in prison for a term within the discretion of the judge who was offended. In the Clayton Act Congress granted the right to trial by jury in contempt cases and the Supreme Court in Michaelson v. United States (266 U. S. 42) unanimously sustained the constitutionality of that provision.

There is also a provision in the bill that the person charged with contempt may demand his trial before a different judge from the one of whom he is charged to be in contempt. No one can reasonably complain that the complainant, the one offended, should not sit in judgment on the offender!

The necessity for this legislation, however, arises from the fact that the provisions of the Clayton Act have not been construed broadly enough by our courts to cover the general situation as to labor disputes as this bill does.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to what I believe to be one of the greatest and most far-reaching provisions of the bill—the death knell of the "yellow-dog" contract.

Many injunctions issued in labor disputes have been founded on an alleged violation by the employee of the provisions of such a "yellow-dog" contract.

The "yellow-dog" contract usually requires the worker to agree not to join a union, or if he is already a member, to leave the same; that his employer may fire him without notice, but that he can not leave without notice to the employer. Such contracts also usually provide that all conditions of labor, hours, and so forth, are entirely within the determination of the employer. Under such a contract the worker practically enters into "involuntary servitude."

It seems strange to many people that there should be any need of legislation to make such un-American contracts unenforceable, but many Federal courts have enforced them. On the other hand, one would think that any person, let alone a judge, would agree with the many eminent jurists who have maintained for years that such contracts were illegal and void, because—

First. They are obviously contrary to public policy, because under their terms the employee enters into practical peonage.

Second. There is no consideration to the employee entering into the contract, and no mutuality of consideration between the employer and employee, and Third. The employee practically signs the contract under coercion. To say he has a free choice overlooks the fact that he must work to live and support his family. By necessity, he is at the mercy of the work-offering agency in his community.

Mr. Speaker, this bill contains a new Declaration of Independence. It declares to the world that the "yellow-dog" contract is "contrary to the public policy of the United States, shall not be enforceable, and shall not afford any basis for granting of legal or equitable relief by any court of the United States."

It is a happy day, indeed, when with the passage of this far-reaching and progressive measure, that resounding declaration of liberty, can go out to our people. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I am going to support this bill as amended by the committee, with an amendment which I hope to offer, which has been submitted to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], the proponent of the bill, and which I believe will be accepted by those who are deeply concerned in the enactment of this legislation. But, understand me, I am not going to vote for this bill for the reasons given by my friend from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. He would abolish the Federal court. He hates the Federal courts. He has proclaimed his position on this floor time and time again. I believe in the Federal courts, I believe in the necessity for the Federal courts, and in voting for this legislation I believe I am voting to strengthen the Federal courts in the minds of the American people. The courts of the United States are our bulwark, and they are never going to be destroyed by the gentleman from New York. If the courts of the United States are ever destroyed, they are going to be destroyed because they destroy themselves.

Unfortunately we have had a few injunctions issued which should not have been issued, and in some of these instances the injunctions have been so ridiculous that there has been a feeling of repulsion against the Federal courts in general. These specific cases have been broadcast throughout the length and breadth of the land until in many sections there is a general feeling against all Federal courts. This legislation is not needed to protect against the many but to protect against the few.

This type of legislation has been before Congress for 14 years. To my personal knowledge this bill is the lineal descendant of the Shipstead bill, which was introduced in the Seventieth Congress. I could not agree with the terms of that bill. I opposed it in the committee as did a majority of the committee. However, the present bill is entirely different. It contains some provisions with which I am not in sympathy, yet it has seldom been my pleasure to vote for a piece of legislation which suited me in every particular. This legislation will give to organized labor the protection to which it feels it is entitled. In my judgment, it will do no injury to the employer. It deals entirely with disputes between employer and employee in labor matters only. Be it remembered that this bill does not attempt to legislate concerning Government employees. I do not believe that the enactment of this bill into law will take away from the Federal Government any rights which it has under existing law, to seek and obtain injunctive relief where the same is necessary for the functioning of the Government.

In the section of the country from which I come we have very little use for Federal injunctions in labor disputes. This bill in no way legislates in reference to State courts. The powers of those courts are left undisturbed, and so far as this legislation is concerned a State court is at liberty to issue any type of an injunction which is permitted in the State where the court has jurisdiction.

I dislike very much to find it necessary to curb the ancient and honorable power of our equity courts. Yet we must realize that it is sometimes essential to provide against the human frailties of possible well-meaning judges, and let us not forget that we are dealing entirely with the jurisdiction in equity, and are not imposing any limitation on the law side of the court.

I disapprove very much of placing a declaration of policy in our statute laws. Federal statutes should not be cluttered up with stump speeches or reasons why the law was enacted. These are matters for debate on the floor of the House, and for the report of the committees. However, we have already established the precedent and have made a declaration of policy in the Sherman Antitrust Act, in the Clayton Act, in the Farm Board act, and in some other acts. Therefore there is a precedent for this feature of the bill, and the proponents of the measure were very insistent upon the inclusion of this declaration of policy, and the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary yielded in this regard.

Often when legislation of this type is being considered, less attention is given to the legislation than to the prejudice for or against organized labor. There are certain interests in the country whose representatives in Washington at least feel called upon to oppose any legislation sponsored by organized labor; and on the other hand, certain representatives of organized labor seem to find it necessary to oppose with all their might and main all legislation suggested by industry and the employer class. It seems too bad that this is the case, and it is wholesome to observe that the day is fast approaching when the rights of both capital and labor are being recognized, and that agreement instead of war is the order of the day. This legislation is not, in my judgment, inimical to the best interests of all our people or any group of our people, and on the other hand will guarantee to the employer and the employee the right to attain the legitimate purposes of their respective organizations without interfering with the rights of others. A careful reading of this bill is necessary to understand its full import.

I am sure that I have never been considered as radical and I surely believe in the perpetuity of our courts, and I do not believe that in supporting this bill I am forsaking my previous position in regard to these matters.

Let me say to my very conservative friends that the mere fact that organized labor is supporting this measure is not sufficient cause for you to oppose it. It is not the radical labor leader nor the radical hater of organized labor that is going to control on the floor of the House in the end. It is the broad-minded, thinking man, who recognizes the virtues and faults in either labor or capital. Personally, I believe in organized labor. Capital is organized, and labor should have the right to organize and should be protected in lawful organization. I am opposed to strikes and do not believe that this is a bill to authorize strikes. Using the word "strike" in its common acceptation, men should have the right to work or cease working, yet they should have no right to interfere with others. Whether or not organized labor is undesirable depends, of course, upon its leadership. I hold no brief for the American Federation of Labor, but I do hold a brief for them in one particular at least, and that is so far as their activities with reference to communists are concerned. The American Federation of Labor has done more than any other group or class of our people in maintaining peace and order during this depression. It has fought communism at every turn of the road, when, as a matter of fact, organized labor would have been the ideal vehicle to carry communism to our people, and without this restraining influence no one knows what our political and social situation might be to-day. I congratulate the American Federation of Labor. [Applause.]

I believe that there will be very little opposition to this bill, and with the amendment to which I have referred placed in the bill I am satisfied that the purposes of the authors of the bill will be realized and that the employer and the public will be protected.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any piece of legislation that has been proposed during my 15 years' experience in the House of Representatives that will give me more personal pleasure to support than the bill now presented by the Committee on the Judiciary.

As an old-fashioned country lawyer, I think I have inherited as much as any man reverence and respect for our judicial system, for all of its splendid precedents, and all of its high purposes; but I have had occasion in that experience that I have referred to, as well as in my observation of the public press, to recall many instances in the judicial history of our country within the last 25 years when it has become apparent that some of the Federal judges, clothed with a little brief authority, seem to have forgotten absolutely the fundamental essence and sacrament of our judicial system in some of the injunctions they have imposed against organized labor.

As I conceive it, if there is anything fundamental in our political institutions, it is love of liberty, liberty of conscience, liberty of speech, liberty of religion, and, above all, liberty of action.

It will be recalled, certainly within recent years, that in a number of instances not all but a few of the members of the Federal judiciary have issued injunctions which absolutely outraged every decent conception of the principles to which I have just referred.

As I understand, as has been well expressed here, this bill does not undertake to invade the jurisdiction of any of our State courts. It does not undertake to withdraw from the Federal judiciary any of its functions of equity, but it merely imposes conditions upon them and restraints upon them with reference to the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes.

I think the bill is a well-considered bill. I think it detracts nothing from the dignity and high purpose of our Federal judiciary, but, on the contrary, I think it gives to the men who toil, the men in overalls, the men who out of their own conception of their rights organize themselves for the purpose of protecting their own interests and of improving their working conditions, undertaking to stabilize their wages upon a decent basis, rights which those judicial tyrants can not invade. [Applause.]

I am glad that my party, certainly within the last quarter of a century, has taken the lead in undertaking to protect the interests of labor. [Applause.] I am glad it was a distinguished son of Alabama, Judge Henry D. Clayton, who was the author of the present law which we are seeking to strengthen by enactment of this legislation. I am glad it was under a Democratic administration that the Department of Labor was organized with a seat in the President's Cabinet. I am glad it was under Democratic auspices that we first recognized the humanity and justice of a limitation upon the hours of labor for those who toil upon the railroads of this country. Our party established the Children's Bureau in the Department of Labor for the purpose of legitimately undertaking to protect the interests of the childhood of America. Although the question that is now presented is not a partisan question, I am glad to know that the party to which I owe my fealty has taken its proper leadership in these great humanitarian questions. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER]. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is a radical departure. There is no denying that fact, but, in my judgment, and in the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary, it is a necessary departure because of conditions which have grown up in this country in the last few years, particularly with reference to the "yellow-dog" contract and other injunctive proceedings as carried on by certain of the Federal judges, which make it necessary for the Congress to declare for the United States a policy affecting American labor.

I am very proud of the judiciary of the United States. I think it is one of the finest bodies of men, upon the whole, that any country has ever had; but in the last few years, during the period of time I have been a Member of this House, there has been a great increase in the number of judges of the United States district courts. When I came here there were 93 judges of the district courts of the United States. To-day there are 144.

Now, gentlemen, of necessity and of sound common sense, it can not be said otherwise than that the President in appointing this large number of judges has here and there made a serious mistake. It is not due in all respects to the Executive, whether it was President Wilson, President Taft, President Coolidge, or President Hoover. Some of the judges that have been appointed are absolutely without question unfit judicially and otherwise to pass upon matters affecting human rights, as they have demonstrated by the issuance of very arbitrary and unjust injunctions. This has come about, as I have said, through the appointment of a great many judges. This applies to only a few of these judges and this is not a criticism of the whole judiciary. This proposed legislation is only made necessary in order to establish for this Government and for this country a policy and a notice to these judges and others who may come to deal with matters of this kind that human rights are the first consideration of the judicial power, and that all things conceded, the rights of men engaged in labor of any calling shall not be interfered with unless it is evident and shown by substantial proof that these men are going to do things which will destroy private property and cause serious trouble.

We do not propose to protect any organization of men in the violation of law. We do not propose to protect them for the purpose of intimidating or using violence in any form; but we do say that injunctions shall not be issued unless it is established to the satisfaction of the courts in the first instance, at the time of the issuance of temporary restraining orders, that they are going to violate the law or cause serious trouble.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. DYER. Then we say in this proposed legislation that after this temporary restraining order is issued it shall be in force only for five days and then there must be a hearing had upon its merits. I doubt whether or not that should remain as it is. I have an amendment to offer to that and to several other sections of the bill which are for the purpose of making the legislation what, in my judgment, those who sponsored it want it to be. I shall present those amendments at the proper time. The one with reference to the five days is to the effect that if circumstances are such that the court can not hear the matter within the five days it may be continued. If the court is engaged in the trial of some other important matters or there is some reason why the matter can not be taken up within the five days, then upon good and sufficient proof to the court it may be continued for a few days more. In other words, Mr. Speaker, we want to enact this legislation, because it is for the best interests of the people, but we do not want it to be understood that it is an attack upon our judiciary. Those who make that charge are in heart and soul opposed to the judiciary all along the line. I am not opposed to the judiciary, but I do believe that for the cure of the evils that have grown up and the injustices that have been done by a few inefficient and incompetent judges in this and other matters we ought to make the change we are proposing.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for the consideration of legislation that has for many years been pending before the Congress and which I am glad to see has come to a favorable consummation.

The bill undertakes to define the equity powers of the Federal courts with reference to injunctions in labor disputes.

It is a well-known fact that for a great many years there have been certain Federal judges who have had a tendency to reach out and broaden their powers on the equity side of the court. Their powers of law have been pretty well defined, but the equity jurisdiction has been largely a matter of conscience. We inherited the equity jurisdiction from the English courts, and the Congress has not attempted by statutes, neither has the Constitution undertaken, of course, to define these equity powers. So it has been left largely as a matter of conscience with the judge, which is a very unreliable and unjust standard by which to proceed.

We think our Government changed the theory of government in that we did not recognize the divine right of kings or the divine right of any man to be the ruler of other men. When this power is left to the conscience of one man, without defining his jurisdiction, it becomes a dangerous power.

This bill will not destroy confidence in the Federal courts. It will merely limit some of the unjust and tyrannical powers assumed by certain judges and bring them in line with the general thought and judgment of the courts, and in this way will build up greater confidence in the court instead of destroying confidence in the court.

This bill undertakes to define a public policy with reference to the attitude of labor unions or a man having membership in a labor union. A labor union or a membership in a labor union is not of itself criminal, per se, and we believe, as most people believe, that most labor unions are organizations for mutual benefit and progress and that a laboring man ought to have as full and complete right to join a labor union as a man whose capital is invested has to join an association or corporation with his fellows to consider their mutual interests.

We think unions are essential to the progress of labor and there should be mutuality and recognition by industry of the right of men to join labor unions and bargain collectively.

So there has been a general condemnation of what is known as the "yellow-dog" contract, which denies a laborer the privilege of belonging to a union, or if he already belongs to a union before he can have employment, that he shall withdraw from such affiliation.

I believe these contracts are invalid on three grounds. In the first place, I think there is no consideration extending to the laboring man, who may be a member of a union, to deny him the right of such membership. Second, I think the "yellow-dog" contract is void because of the coercion that is placed upon the man in order that he may have employment to support himself and his family that he shall deny himself the privilege of joining his fellow members for mutual benefit and progress. Third, I think this contract ought to be condemned on the ground of public policy because it is not for the welfare of the people or the welfare of the community in which it is enforced.

Not all Federal judges have undertaken to enforce these contracts or usurp equity power in the issuing of injunctions denying such privileges. Only a few have arrogated unto themselves these autocratic powers. They are the ones to be limited and controlled by this proposed law.

This legislation is the outgrowth of historical study and experience in the matter of handling labor disputes, and I think the time has come when industry must recognize the right of labor to have unions and to deal with the members of the union collectively and bargain with them collectively so that there may be mutuality and equality on both sides of any controversy that may arise between capital and labor.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. In the gentleman's study of this subject has he ascertained whether in the British courts a similar use has been made of injunctions in labor affairs?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I have only slightly studied that question. It is my opinion, however, that jurisdiction of the equity powers of the English courts has been well defined by decision and precedent for 100 years in labor matters. The English judges have not assumed to go to the extent of using the power on the equity side of the court as they have in this country, and I think the time has come when there ought to be a proper definition of this jurisdiction in equity dealing with injunctions.

Mr. LEWIS. Would it be true then to say that the labor injunction originated in the United States, and without any statute authorizing it, as a matter of beginning?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think that is true. Injunctions have gone far beyond the extent to which they are used in England, and I think the time has come, in order that there may be some common procedure within the bounds of reason and justice, for the Congress, which is the only body that has power to define the jurisdiction of the inferior Federal courts, meaning by that expression the Federal courts below the Supreme Court, ought to lay down a definite policy, and this bill undertakes to do that in the very first sections, as a matter of public policy, dealing with such questions arising in labor disputes.

It is surprising how far these restraining orders and injunctions have been extended. You would hardly believe that there would be injunctions issued that would deny the members of labor unions who are strikers, having the benefit of dues or of reserves made up of their funds which have been collected by contributions, and denying the officers of a union extending such benefit to their members in distress because such members are out on strike. There have been Federal judges who have denied the public the extending of assistance to families of workmen who are in distress because the head of the family had joined his coworkers in a strike. They have forbidden workers the constitutional right even to confer with each other on common questions and problems arising out of their employment. They were not allowed to appeal in possession suits where they lived in a company dwelling house, and have been dispossessed in a justice of the peace court and prevented from having a proper appeal to a higher court to decide such questions of possession. By injunctions the regular procedure in suits of law have thus been set aside. They were not allowed to assemble and discuss mutual questions with respect to employment and conditions of labor. There have been injunctions that have been issued denying them the right to meet in their churches and sing hymns and join together in worship, because these places were in close proximity to the property or to the industry where a strike had occurred. One Federal judge enjoined the singing by strikers of the good old hymn "Onward Christian Soldiers."

They have gone far beyond the American idea of justice and equality, in denying the workingman the same privileges that are given to people on the outside who do not belong to a union and who are not employed. If the Constitution means anything in the matter of freedom of speech, it should be applied just as fully to men who belong to a union, and just as fully when they are out on a strike as on any other occasion.

I say that such injunctions have reached the point where they are indefensible, and the Congress ought to undertake to define this jurisdiction in order that the constitutional rights and privileges of men who labor and belong to unions may not be in any way infringed.

Most of these cases can be tried in the criminal side of the court and there is no desire and no provision in this bill in any way to hinder the administration of the criminal law. If men are guilty of crime they should have the full right and privilege of a trial by jury. They should have the full right of consideration of the crime by a grand jury, and the right to be proceeded against by indictment.

A man who is charged with crime should have the full protection and privileges thrown around him by the Constitution. No man, though he be a Federal judge, has anything attached to him in sanctity that he should be the prosecuting officer, jury, and the judge all in one.

Abraham Lincoln is quoted as saying that "no man is good enough to rule another, and that applies to ancient kings as well as to modern kings." The full right of trial by jury in criminal cases should not be taken away because some judge is attempting to be judge, prosecuting attorney, and jury in issuing an injunction against some act that does not occur in his presence. I want all the rights of the court protected in contempt cases, where the act is in the presence of the court and is actually in contempt of the court, but I do not believe that the judge should apply criminal laws on the equity side on the theory that contempt has been committed of an order issued that he should not have issued in the first place.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Some Federal judges have issued injunctions against people outside furnishing supplies to these people in distress.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, for 10 years I have cast a rather conservative vote in this House, but I welcome this rule and this legislation, liberal though it may be, because I believe that it represents a tardy step in securing justice for organized labor, because it outlaws the unconscionable "yellow-dog" contract which has destroyed the power of collective bargaining by taking advantage of the necessities of poverty and that has formed the basis of injunctive proceedings that have become intolerable and un-American, in many cases reducing the workers to a state of economic slavery.

Organized labor deserves better than all this. At the close of the year 1931 one of the reviews of the year issued from Wall Street went so far as to say that—

> The outstanding fact of 1931 was the statesmanship of American labor.

With a wage deflation never before witnessed in the history of this country, labor kept its pledge given at the White House conference. It has maintained industrial peace during this period of violent readjustment. At the recent conference between railway workers and railway officials happily concluded at Chicago we saw a new chapter written in the economic history of the country, when 20 railway unions, with a membership of 1,500,000 men, making sacrifices and concessions for the common good, peacefully surrendered $200,000,000 in wages.

I am much in sympathy with the social and economic philosophies and ideals of organized labor in the United States. That interest has been quickened and strengthened by comparatively recent experiences.

There was a time, not so many months ago, when the rising tide of communism had occasioned serious disturbances in many foreign countries, and seemed, perhaps, to threaten the beliefs and loyalties that hold together our western civilization. You Members of Congress, in your wisdom, appointed a committee to investigate the activities of radicals in this country. And what did we find? We found that for years, unknown to us here, radicals had been active in the United States seeking to undermine our institutions, and that it was organized labor that had been, and then was, patriotically and uncompromisingly bearing the great burden of the communist attack in this country; that they constituted the great bulwark of defense against the potential dangers of communism in America.

We found that the Red International of Labor Unions of Moscow had here in the United States as its American section the Trade Union Unity League, presided over by William Z. Foster, representing practically all the great basic industries, with revolutionary labor unions scattered throughout the country, led by aliens, fighting and discrediting the legitimate unions in every possible way, advocating direct action and the overthrow of our American Government by force and violence. This is the same Trade Union Unity League and the same William Z. Foster referred to in the morning's news as being concerned in that bloody riot yesterday at the Ford plant in Dearborn.

In the report which I filed as a result of that investigation I made this statement, which I believe is pertinent to the present problem and deserves your thoughtful consideration:

> No one who has made a study of the communist movement in this country can fail to realize the great debt that America owes to organized labor for the universality with which it has rejected and fought against the insidious propaganda of the communist. Certainly they deserve our every consideration and support. In our fight against communism we can have no more effective ally than the 3,000,000 patriotic citizens comprising the American Federation of Labor and the 300,000 comprising the United Mine Workers of America. Labor has a constitutional right to organize, to bargain collectively, to protect its own interests. To deny that right is to weaken our defense against radical thought in this country. Better that American labor be organized in legitimate unions, led by American citizens, supporting our American institutions, than that embittered workers be forced into revolutionary unions, led by officers of the Third International, and seeking the destruction of all things American.

Information gathered during that investigation led me to hate the "yellow-dog" contract, hate it as the one thing that breeds more communistic thought in America than anything else in our national life. Only in moments of despair do the specious theories of the communist make appeal to the American workman. Give him justice and he will be immune to the allurements of reckless radicalism. Give him justice and you can not muster a corporal's guard of communists from the ranks of organized labor in America.

For 14 years economic forces have blocked the passage of this legislation, but I believe that it has behind it to-day the imponderable force of a public opinion that will no longer be denied. Let us adopt this rule and pass this legislation, thereby assuring the great masses of our working people that here in this House privilege has no place, justice is being done, and the old ideals of democracy still survive. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I think there are few thoughtful men to-day who, having been sworn as Members of the Federal Congress, would lift their voices in opposition to the legislation provided for under the pending rule. It is very clear to me that if the provisions of the Clayton Act, as originally written, had not been abused, we should never have been called upon to consider this so-called anti-injunction bill of the present day.

In my State we do not have the troubles from strikes that have been experienced by many other States in the Union. I think anybody from Maine who speaks in behalf of this legislation may not with justification be accused of catering to any faction. So far as I know, at least it is true within my recollection, none of our Federal courts in Maine has ever been called upon to issue a labor injunction. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, sponsorship of this legislation grows out of sympathy for all classes of people affected, and is born of a desire that justice shall be meted out to all, irrespective of social status.

Considering its record during the troublous days in which we now find ourselves, I think we ought to be very proud of organized labor. I have often wondered how any organization whose members were facing the hardships of these recent days, could have conducted itself more patriotically and with a broader spirit of tolerance than have the millions who make up organized labor in the United States.

I think the House bill is a great improvement over the bill which originated in the Senate. I refer particularly to the change written into the first lines of section 11. It did seem to me that the Senate bill, which would guarantee the right of trial by jury in all contempt cases arising out of all kinds of injunction proceedings is too broad, and that when we shall have provided the right of trial by jury in contempt cases for all injunction proceedings arising out of labor disputes we shall have accomplished what we set out to accomplish. Therefore, I commend the committee of the House for having inserted this language which we find in section 11, viz, the words, "arising under this act in which." This language accomplishes a desirable end. It confines the right of jury trial in contempt cases for violations of injunctions to labor disputes.

The next problem that troubles me is that which arises under subsection (e) of section 4, in which men giving publicity to the existence of a strike, and so forth, shall not be subject to an injunction. I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is to offer an amendment by adding the words "threat or intimidation." Surely when strikers use threats to promote their strike they ought to be enjoined.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. I wish the committee might agree upon a definition of the word "intimidation." The courts have differed as to what constitutes intimidation. In American Foundries v. Tri-City Council (257 U. S.) the court said that the name "picket" of itself indicated "a militant purpose and appeared inconsistent with peaceable persuasion." Certainly such an interpretation is unjustifiable, and the use of pickets without threats or intimidation is no ground for the issuance of an injunction. However, anybody on strike who threatens an American citizen or who intimidates him ought to be subject to an injunction.

But what is intimidation? I think we might all agree that any conduct which is intended to arouse fear or apprehension of violence is an intimidation. Such conduct in the course of a strike surely justifies the issuance of an injunction. I would like to know if my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] would not agree that conduct intended to arouse fear or apprehension of violence is a reasonable definition of "intimidation"?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As the gentleman and I understand it, we would have no trouble about it, but I call the gentleman's attention to some decisions. What I fear is that the word "intimidation" may be used or abused or misused by some of the judges, but if it is so defined as to carry out the intent which the gentleman describes, I would see no objection to it.

Mr. BEEDY. That is my idea exactly.

This proposed legislation is a step forward. It will prove to be a strong deterrent to the spread of radical thought, it will tend to "establish justice, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maine has again expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make a suggestion. I was delighted to hear from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] that this is a Democratic doctrine. On my next visit to the textile mills of the South I hope I will be able to find that they are encouraging collective bargaining and that they will welcome organizers of labor unions and live up to the doctrine which they apparently indorse to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5315) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5315) to amend the Judicial Code, with Mr. CONNERY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman from Texas will couple with that request a request that the bill at this juncture be printed in the RECORD, I shall not object, but the bill should go into the RECORD so that the RECORD will show exactly what kind of a measure we have before us. I shall object unless the gentleman asks that the bill be printed at this place. If the bill is read, as the rules require, it will be printed in the RECORD. And by requiring it to be read, I can thus force it to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, but that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this place.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The bill referred to is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no court of the United States, as herein defined, shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, except in strict conformity with the provisions of this act; nor shall any such restraining order of temporary or permanent injunction be issued contrary to the public policy declared in this act.

SEC. 2. In the interpretation of this act and in determining the jurisdiction and authority of the courts of the United States, as such jurisdiction and authority are herein defined and limited, the public policy of the United States is hereby declared as follows:

Whereas under prevailing economic conditions, developed with the aid of governmental authority for owners of property to organize in the corporate and other forms of ownership association, the individual unorganized worker is commonly helpless to exercise actual liberty of contract and to protect his freedom of labor, and thereby to obtain acceptable terms and conditions of employment, wherefore it is necessary that he have full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment, and that he shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection; therefore, the following definitions of, and limitations upon, the jurisdiction and authority of the courts of the United States are hereby enacted.

SEC. 3. Any undertaking or promise, such as is described in this section, or any other undertaking or promise in conflict with the public policy declared in section 2 of this act, is hereby declared to be contrary to the public policy of the United States, shall not be enforceable, and shall not afford any basis for the granting of legal or equitable relief by any court of the United States, including specifically the following:

Every undertaking or promise hereafter made, whether written or oral, express or implied, constituting or contained in any contract or agreement of hiring or employment between any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, and any employee or prospective employee of the same, whereby

(a) Either party to such contract or agreement undertakes or promises not to join, become, or remain a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization; or

(b) Either party to such contract or agreement undertakes or promises that he will withdraw from an employment relation in the event that he joins, becomes, or remains a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization.

SEC. 4. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in cases involving or growing out of any labor dispute to prohibit any person or persons participating or interested in such dispute (as these terms are herein defined) from doing, whether singly or in concert, any of the following acts:

(a) Ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment;

(b) Becoming or remaining a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act;

(c) Paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person participating or interested in such labor dispute any strike or unemployment benefits or insurance or other moneys or things of value;

(d) By all lawful means aiding any person participating or interested in any labor dispute who is being proceeded against in, or is prosecuting, any action or suit in any court of the United States or of any State;

(e) Giving publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, any labor dispute, whether by advertising, speaking, patroling, or by any other method not involving fraud or violence;

(f) Assembling peaceably to act or to organize to act in promotion of their interests in a labor dispute;

(g) Advising or notifying any person of an intention to do any of the acts heretofore specified;

(h) Agreeing with other persons to do or not to do any of the acts heretofore specified; and

(i) Advising, urging, or otherwise causing or inducing without fraud or violence the acts heretofore specified, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act.

SEC. 5. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction upon the ground that any of the persons participating or interested in a labor dispute constitute or are engaged in an unlawful combination or conspiracy because of the doing in concert of the acts enumerated in section 4 of this act.

SEC. 6. No officer or member of any association or organization, and no association or organization participating or interested in a labor dispute, shall be held responsible or liable in any court of the United States for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, or agents, except upon clear proof of actual participation in, or actual authorization of, such acts, or of ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof.

SEC. 7. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, as herein defined, except after hearing the testimony of witnesses in open court (with opportunity for cross-examination) in support of the allegations of a complaint made under oath, and testimony in opposition thereto, if offered, and except after findings of fact by the court, to the effect—

(a) That unlawful acts have been committed and will be continued unless restrained;

(b) That substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow;

(c) That as to each item of relief granted greater injury will be inflicted upon complainant by the denial of relief than will be inflicted upon defendants by the granting of relief;

(d) That complainant has no adequate remedy at law; and

(e) That the public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property are unable or unwilling to furnish adequate protection.

Such hearing shall be held after due and personal notice thereof has been given, in such manner as the court shall direct, to all known persons against whom relief is sought, and also to those public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property: Provided, however, That if a complainant shall also allege that, unless a temporary restraining order shall be issued without notice, a substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will be unavoidable, such a temporary restraining order may be issued upon testimony under oath, sufficient, if sustained, to justify the court in issuing a temporary injunction upon a hearing after notice. Such a temporary restraining order shall be effective for no longer than five days and shall become void at the expiration of said five days. No temporary restraining order or temporary injunction shall be issued except on condition that complainant shall first file an undertaking with adequate security sufficient to recompense those enjoined for any loss, expense, or damage caused by the improvident or erroneous issuance of such order or injunction, including all reasonable costs (together with a reasonable attorney's fee) and expense of defense against the order or against the granting of any injunctive relief sought in the same proceeding and subsequently denied by the court.

The undertaking herein mentioned shall be understood to signify an agreement entered into by the complainant and the surety upon which a decree may be rendered in the same suit or proceeding against said complainant and surety, the said complainant and surety submitting themselves to the jurisdiction of the court for that purpose. But nothing herein contained shall deprive any party having a claim or cause of action under or upon such undertaking from electing to pursue his ordinary remedy by suit at law or in equity.

SEC. 8. No restraining order or injunctive relief shall be granted to any complainant who has failed to comply with any obligation imposed by law which is involved in the labor dispute in question, or who has failed to make every reasonable effort to settle such dispute either by negotiation or with the aid of any available governmental machinery of mediation or voluntary arbitration.

SEC. 9. No restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction shall be granted in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, except on the basis of findings of fact made and filed by the court in the record of the case prior to the issuance of such restraining order or injunction; and every restraining order or injunction granted in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute shall include only a prohibition of such specific act or acts as may be expressly complained of in the bill of complaint or petition filed in such case and as shall be expressly included in said findings of fact made and filed by the court as provided herein.

SEC. 10. Whenever any court of the United States shall issue or deny any temporary injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, the court shall, upon the request of any party to the proceedings, forthwith certify the entire record of the case, including a transcript of the evidence taken, to the circuit court of appeals for its review. Upon the filing of such record in the circuit court of appeals, the appeal shall be heard and the temporary injunctive order affirmed, modified, or set aside with the greatest possible expedition, giving the proceedings precedence over all other matters except older matters of the same character.

SEC. 11. In all cases where a person shall be charged with indirect criminal contempt for violation of a restraining order or injunction issued by a court of the United States (as herein defined), the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the contempt shall have been committed: Provided, That this requirement shall not be construed to apply to contempts committed in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to interfere directly with the administration of justice or to apply to the misbehavior, misconduct, or disobedience of any officer of the court in respect to the writs, orders, or process of the court.

SEC. 12. The defendant in any proceeding for contempt of court is authorized to file with the court a demand for the retirement of the judge sitting in the proceeding, if the contempt arises from an attack upon the character or conduct of such judge and if the attack occurred otherwise than in open court. Upon the filing of any such demand the judge shall thereupon proceed no further, but another judge shall be designated in the same manner as provided in case of the approval of an affidavit of personal bias or prejudice under section 21 of the Judicial Code. The demand shall be filed prior to the hearing in the contempt proceeding.

SEC. 13. When used in this act, and for the purposes of this act—

(a) A case shall be held to involve or to grow out of a labor dispute when the case involves persons who are engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation; or have direct or indirect interests therein; or who are employees of the same employer; or who are members of the same or an affiliated organization of employers or employees; whether such dispute is (1) between one or more employers or associations of employers and one or more employees or associations of employees; (2) between one or more employers or associations of employers and one or more employers or association of employers; or (3) between one or more employees or associations of employees and one or more employees or associations of employees; or when the case involves any conflicting or competing interests in a "labor dispute" (as hereinafter defined) of "persons participating or interested" therein (as hereinafter defined).

(b) A person or association shall be held to be a person participating or interested in a labor dispute if relief is sought against him or it and if he or it is engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation in which such dispute occurs, or has a direct or indirect interest therein, or is a member, officer, or agent of any association composed in whole or in part of employers or employees engaged in such industry, trade, craft, or occupation.

(c) The term "labor dispute" includes any controversy concerning terms or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms and conditions of employment, or concerning employment relations, or any other controversy arising out of the respective interests of employer and employee, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee.

(d) The term "court of the United States" means any court of the United States whose jurisdiction has been or may be conferred or defined or limited by act of Congress, including the courts of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 14. If any provisions of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 15. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], whether he will yield to me one-half of the time which he controls? I am opposed to this measure, and I would like to have the privilege of parceling out the time to those Members who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the interrogation by the gentleman from Texas, my answer is that I will not. I do not think I have the privilege of doing that.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has control of two hours, one-half of which is entitled to be used by those opposing the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. As one who opposes the bill, I would like to have the privilege of controlling some of the time, in accord with the rules of debate in all parliamentary bodies.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The difficulty is that there may be some other Members who would desire time.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield me 30 minutes?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Reserving the right to object, the rule provides that all control shall be in the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority Member. I do not believe that any time could be yielded to any Member to yield to any other Member.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not a matter of unanimous consent. It is a matter of right. The gentleman from New York can not object. But the gentleman from Texas, as I understand, will yield me 30 minutes in my own right.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Unless the chairman of the committee has more requests than he now has for time in opposition to the bill, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will have a very good chance of getting 30 minutes to oppose the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, this measure, in my judgment, is the culmination of a long and not altogether fortunate struggle. There has been repeated effort on the part of Congress, especially one very definite effort, in the past to bring about just what this bill undertakes to do. I refer to the passage of the Clayton Act, as has been stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY]. Had the intent of Congress been developed by the decision of the Federal courts of the United States on the Clayton Act, in all probability this measure would not have been necessary; but instead of that act, in the eyes of the court, being construed as what the Congress intended, it was denatured, emasculated, and tortured into an instrument for further oppression of those whom we sought to relieve.

The principles that this bill undertakes to initiate are not new. In the beginning it lays down what we choose to call the public policy of the United States. There is some criticism of that, but I, for one, believe that it is absolutely proper and fitting that this Congress should declare the public policy, especially in cases of this kind. Public policy is necessary, because it may be used to resolve uncertainties of the law, not to take the place of the law. Public policy, as we know it, is derived from the Constitution and from the expressions of our legislative bodies. There is some insistence, although I do not think it has strong ground for being maintained, that the decisions of courts are a part of the public policy. That may be true in the absence of expression by the Constitution or legislative bodies.

As an example of the need of public policy in this case, I refer you to the famous Duplex case, which held an injunction in order against those who are undertaking a boycott to carry out the purposes of a strike, and on which was based the later Stone Cutter case.

There were 13 judges who considered and passed on that question before it was finally determined. There were 8 of those judges who expressed the opinion that an injunction was not proper. There were 5 of them who expressed the opinion that it was, and they happened to be a majority of the Supreme Court of the United States in a decision of 5 to 4. I mention that to show the doubt in the minds of those individuals who have the discretion of administering the law as to what is proper.

Judges do not claim to be infallible in their judgment, and there never has been more disagreement on the part of those who are called upon to pass on public questions than there has been among the judges who have been called upon to determine when is the proper time to issue an injunction by a Federal court in a labor dispute.

The public policy laid down in the bill, I think, is essential, because there should be some standard by which the courts may know, at a time when they are in such confusion, what it is proper to do. I think the most fitting and, in reality, the only proper tribunal to express such a policy is the Congress, representing, as it does by direct commission, the people of the country. I think the Congress is the proper tribunal to express the policy as laid out in this bill.

The public policy is taken from expressions of the Supreme Court, from expressions of inferior courts, from statements of famous dissenters, and from expressions of legislative bodies of the Nation as to what they understand to be the public policy. I, for one, think it a proper procedure. I think it should be done more frequently than it is done. It has been done in the past so it is not a new procedure, and for my part I am willing to begin the procedure of expressions of public policy in regard to all future measures, especially those dealing with a proposition as important as that which is now before us, preponderantly human rights over property rights.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. In construing statutes, the courts frequently are at considerable loss to understand the intention of Congress at the time the act was passed, and sometimes by various means they seek to ascertain what the intention of Congress was. This declaration of policy will solve that difficulty for the courts in construing this statute, will it not?

Mr. BROWNING. I think undoubtedly it will, and in view of the confusion which has been evidenced in the decisions already rendered I think it is nothing but fairness to the courts that we should express the public policy in order that they may be able to resolve the doubts of the law as it now exists.

Another principle we undertake to enunciate here is not new, and that is the right of trial by jury. The insistence is made against this measure that it is robbing the people of the right to prevent a wrong, which would be better than undertaking to remunerate them for the wrong done. In my humble opinion that is not the principal reason for those people undertaking to hold on to this practice of the Federal courts. The principal reason is that they would rather undertake to convince one man, who is schooled in the thought of their economic beliefs, than to convince 12 men of their rights in a trial by jury.

The right of trial by jury is a constitutional right. It goes back to the first declaration of English rights.

We have a situation now by which a man may be enjoined by a Federal court without notice, and either through ignorance or intention he violates that injunction. He is arraigned before the court, which is not only the legislature but the grand jury, the trial judge and the prosecuting attorney; the man is sent to jail without a trial by jury, which is guaranteed to him under the Constitution; and then another court on appeal, two or three years later, may decide that the injunction was wrongfully issued. However, that man has been punished, not only wrongfully, but punished contrary to the fundamentals of the Constitution. I say it is not right for such a practice to be perpetuated in this free country of ours, and that is one of the things which is being objected to in the passage of this bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. For a brief question.

Mr. BACHMANN. The gentleman does not intend to extend that principle to contempt that is committed in the presence of the court?

Mr. BROWNING. No. The court, under this bill, has the right to punish contempts committed in the presence of the court. The bill extends to the people the right of notice when an injunction is to be issued against them. That is an American doctrine as old as the Constitution itself, and I believe it should be a part of the law.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. SPARKS. Under this bill only criminal contempts are the ones where the defendant is entitled to a jury trial.

Mr. BROWNING. Yes. Only those things which would be a crime if committed under the jurisdiction of criminal law. Then he is entitled to a trial by jury. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK]. [Applause.]

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I never addressed myself to an argument with such a solemn sense of responsibility. In my judgment, this proposal is one of the gravest proposals that has ever been brought before Congress during the period that I have had the honor of serving as a Member of this House.

I doubt very much whether some of my colleagues fully appreciate all the possible implications of this bill and the contribution it will one day make, not only to great discontent between employer and employee, but to a situation of industrial anarchy.

If I consulted my personal interests, I would remain silent and simply content myself with voting no. But I am a member of the bar and have a peculiar relation to the administration of the law. Moreover, I am a citizen of the United States who, I trust, holds in equal regard the interests of both employer and employee. Whatever the consequences, I feel I should speak; for if I did not, for fear of political consequences, I would have in the remainder of my life an uneasy conscience.

I believe this bill, if it becomes a law, will do infinite harm to both classes, employer and employee, and even of more consequence, the innocent public.

It was said by the gentleman from New York in the argument on the rule that the prospective passage of this bill illustrated the beneficent education of democratic institutions, in that after many years of agitation, when Congress after Congress had rejected proposals of a more deserving character than those embodied in this bill, that now, as a result of this education, the House is prepared to strip the Federal courts of the most vital function of those courts in promoting justice in industrial disputes. I recognize the probable passage of this bill by the House, and let me say here that if I were the only man in the House to speak and vote against the bill, and if I knew it would cost me my political life, I would regard it the crowning service of my modest public service that I at least protested against a measure so unjust and impolitic, and in so doing voiced the sober conscience of millions of right-thinking men. [Applause.]

Referring again to what the gentleman from New York said, this probable enactment, far from illustrating the educational possibilities of democracy, illustrates what I have often regarded as the fatalism of democracy, a fatalism that will surely—not in your lifetime or mine—spell the ultimate dissolution of democratic institutions. I can illustrate my meaning by the homely illustration of the young lady who, wearied of the importunate solicitations of a suitor, marries him to get rid of him; and this yielding to long-continued importunity has often been illustrated in the history of the American Congress. A militant and vociferous minority will press long enough for the enactment of legislation, and in disregard of the many times that the Congress of the United States may have rejected their proposition, they will ultimately secure their ends by the sheer importunity of their demands, not to speak of the concerted pressure upon weak and timid legislators.

This is illustrated in this case, because the Senate, that had repeatedly rejected more deserving proposals to regulate injunctions, have passed this bill by a very substantial majority, some Senators voting affirmatively with avowed shame; and I am told the House, with only four hours to discuss the fundamental liberties of American citizens, whether they are of the laboring class or the employer class, will probably pass this bill, and the only thing that will stand between this iniquitous stripping of the courts of equity of their ancient and most beneficent powers will be the possible veto of the President.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECK. No; I would rather not yield until I have developed my argument. Then I will yield with great pleasure.

I shall now briefly indicate seven specific objections of a very grave character to this bill.

First. Section 4: Injunctions are to be largely limited to "fraud or violence." Mass picketing, intimidations, trailing, besetting, importuning, libeling, and false statements are to be beyond the reach of injunctive relief.

Second. Section 4: No injunction shall be issued against the organization and maintenance of strikes even where said strikes are called in violation of contract, to extort graft, to compel the employer to commit a criminal act, to accomplish political purposes, to prevent freedom of press, to prevent the use of products which the public desire to use, to coerce Congress and the Executive.

Third. Section 7: Although injunctions are to be limited largely to acts of fraud and violence, no relief can be granted in such cases unless the complainant can show that he is being injured more by the fraud and violence than the defendant will be injured by stopping such fraud and violence. This is an unpracticable requirement.

Fourth. Section 8: Although the defendants may, without notice, organize industrial war through fraud, violence, and other unlawful acts, the plaintiff shall not receive injunctive relief unless he first endeavors "to settle such dispute either by negotiation or with the aid of any available governmental machinery of mediation or arbitration." The aggressor may act without notice, but the aggrieved may not defend himself by securing injunctive relief without tolerating the violence until he has gone through various steps of peaceful negotiation. While plaintiff is negotiating, the situation may become beyond any possibility of judicial relief.

Fifth. Section 7: No injunction shall issue without proof that public officials charged with the duty to protect property are unable or unwilling to furnish adequate protection. Such an inquiry would be an affront to the authorities of a State.

Sixth. Section 7: The court is deprived of all jurisdiction to issue a temporary restraining order to continue for more than five days in labor dispute cases. This, of course, conflicts with the earlier provision in the same section requiring the examination and cross-examination of witnesses to secure a preliminary injunction, as it is obvious that more than five days would be consumed in most cases of this character by the examination of witnesses. Moreover, it deprives the court of any discretion to extend the restraining order, even though the court were otherwise engaged or counsel were sick. The provisions in the Clayton Act, leaving such matters to the discretion of the court, are as they should be.

Seventh. Section 11: The bill provides for a jury trial of criminal contempts. This is quite distinct from the present provision of the law, sustained in the case of Michaelson v. United States (266 U. S. 42), wherein a jury trial for contempts was prescribed in cases where the acts of contempt were per se criminal. Under provisions of the pending bill, contempts for ignoring supœnas, jury summons, and so forth, would have to be tried by a jury as well as contempts for violation of the Volstead Act, as this section of the bill is not limited to labor cases.

If I try to discuss these in this oral argument my half hour would be very speedily consumed. I would rather address myself to the more fundamental objection that seems to me to underlie this bill, and as to which I may venture to offer an amendment, which will test the sincerity of some of the proponents of this legislation.

The difficulty with this bill, fundamentally, is that it takes no account whatever of the motives and purposes with which a nation-wide strike or boycott can be commenced and prosecuted.

Obviously, an industrial dispute can be made the means of compelling some action wholly disconnected with the causes or conditions of employment, and it can even be caused to bring about some political result and threaten the freedom of decision of the Congress itself. In other words, the industrial boycott or strike, when nation-wide in its extent, can become that which in England is called "direct action," and there is no provision in this bill that if there be an industrial dispute or a threat of an industrial dispute that may, for example, paralyze interstate transportation from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that a court of equity in such case would have the right or power to invoke the ancient and beneficent remedy of injunction.

The so-called educational process, that now seems to be in the process of culmination, began in 1894, 38 years ago, in a strike to which I wish to refer, as it will illustrate what may happen if the courts of the United States no longer have any power to issue injunctions except under conditions that are almost prohibitive.

You will remember in that case the Pullman Co. had a controversy with its immediate employees. With that the railroad brotherhoods or the American Railway Union, as it was then called, had no legitimate concern. Nevertheless, in order to compel the Pullman Co. to make terms—whether they were just or unjust I do not know—with the Pullman employees, the railroads entered upon a strike which was intended to paralyze all traffic into the city of Chicago, with the potential threat of denying even the children of that city the milk requisite for their life, and which was intended to obstruct and prevent and put an embargo upon all the foodstuffs that would leave Chicago in order to provide nourishment and maintenance to some 12,000,000 people outside of the city of Chicago.

Let me remind the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle that one of the crowning achievements of that great and noble President, Grover Cleveland, was to instruct his Attorney General to go into the United States courts and there bring the parties that were trying to starve the people of the United States into compelling the Pullman Co. to accede to the demands of the Pullman workmen; and, as a result of that bill in equity, after a hearing in court a permanent injunction was entered, and for a time disobeyed, although that is another matter.

At all events, if there be one act of Cleveland's administration of which every Democrat who cherishes the maintenance of American freedom should be proud, it is his brave act in initiating this suit. Yet, if this bill had been the law then, while there is the exception that an injunction can issue in cases of fraud or violence, yet the fact is that a restraining order to permit irreparable harm could only be granted for five days, at the end of which a court of equity would have been impotent to preserve the status quo in order to determine the respective rights of the parties. Prior to that time there had never been a suggestion on the part of those who are the proponents of labor organizations for legislation of the kind before us. I believe quite as much as does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. NELSON] in the right of labor organizations; I share his splendid eulogy of the beneficent workings of those associations; I indorse his views that in this most acute crisis that our country possibly has ever known the conduct of the labor organizations has been beyond praise. I share all that he has said about their generosity and their public spirit in agreeing to a reduction of wages as their contribution to an alleviation of the terrible conditions of the hour. But, let it not be forgotten that a labor organization can be malevolent as well as beneficent. It can have proper purposes and it can have improper purposes, and the attempt in 1894 in a matter which did not concern them to starve the community and compel it to bring unreasonable pressure upon the freedom of the Pullman Co. and of such of its employees as were satisfied to work was a denial of freedom.

Let me give a second illustration before I go farther. I suppose some of us remember the year 1916, when the demands upon traffic were unprecedented, when it was vital to the industries of this country that interstate traffic should move, when it was not only vital to us but vital to those nations that subsequently became our allies that war supplies should be moved to the Atlantic seaboard. The four railroad brotherhoods took that time to enforce their demand, and did so on the eve of a presidential election, just as they are doing now; and for the same reason, viz, that there is less freedom of action on the part of Congress on the eve of a presidential election, they went to President Wilson and with watch in their hands demanded that unless within a specified time, which, as I recall, was only a few days, he insured the passage of a clearly unconstitutional law to give 12 hours' pay for an 8-hour day's work they would at once paralyze the interstate traffic of the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to the ruin of millions and possibly to the starvation of millions, because there are many cities, like New York and Chicago, where, if you cut off their supplies for a week or 10 days, the people will be threatened with starvation. It is a humiliating fact to recall that President Wilson bowed to the insolent demand and thereupon appeared before the Congress and urged the passage of that unprecedented law, the Adamson law. Do not tell that because it was direct action for a political purpose, it was not an industrial dispute, because the method of compelling the Congress of the United States to abdicate its function under the Constitution was for every workingman to leave his locomotive and his train and stop the movement of interstate traffic.

The Congress yielded, I think, to its own disgrace, and the Supreme Court so far yielded, that while five of the judges did hold that the law could be sustained, one of the five held that it was only temporarily constitutional, upon the theory of an emergency, in order to enable the railroads and the brotherhoods to agree upon suitable wages. But five judges held that except as an emergency measure it was unconstitutional and void. Yet they validated the law for the time being and in the way that I have indicated. If this bill had been the law then, there would have been no power whatever, in that critical year of 1916, when we were preparing for a war into which we were about to be drawn, for President Wilson to have done as President Cleveland did—direct the Attorney General to enter a court of equity, get a restraining order for a limited and reasonable time until the parties could be brought before it, and then, after full hearing, grant an injunction against the destruction of interstate trade. A sovereign State can not place an embargo upon interstate trade; yet this organization of railroad employees, with their power to tie up traffic from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf, can put on such an embargo. In the last analysis this bill is to shift the power of granting an injunction from the courts that may be trusted to hold the scales even between employer and employee, to those who are not judges but who are only the representatives of a class, and who can starve a community into submission of their demands unless there be power in a court of equity to draw about an innocent public that suffers most by such embargoes the solemn circle of the law and say, "Thus far and no farther."

I recall two illustrations that happened to me in 1920 and 1922 which I wish to call to the attention of the committee. In 1920 I was in London. The communists of London—and I am not classing American labor organizations with communists because I have already assented to the well-deserved eulogium of the gentleman from Maine—had hired Albert Hall, I think it was, for three meetings. They had held two meetings in which they had agitated for the destruction of all organized government. They had marched in with red flags, denouncing every existing institution which you and I hold dear—a government of laws and not of men, the church, the courts, and the legislature. Thereupon the owners of the hall, at the direction of Lloyd George, canceled the lease for the third meeting; and the labor organizations of London, that were not communistic at heart but who were engaged in supplying London with light, heat, and water, sent notice to Lloyd George that unless within 24 hours the hall was given over to the communists to hold their meeting there would be no light, no heat, no water in London.

Lloyd George promptly succumbed to prevent irreparable harm, rather than see London plunged into darkness and its people wanting in the necessity of water.

Two years later the Bolshevists were at the gates of Warsaw, and if they had captured Warsaw they would have entered Germany and a minority of the German people, in their despair, crushed as they are, would have probably joined a movement that absolutely threatened the existence of western civilization itself. What happened? Poland put its women and children in the trenches against that attack of the Russian Soviets and appealed to France and Belgium and England. France promptly sent its generals and supplies. In Belgium it was proposed to aid Poland by contributing artillery and other munitions of war, and then the labor organizations said to the Belgian Government, "Do this and there will be a general strike in Belgium." At once the cabinet succumbed and Hymans, Foreign Minister, with whom I had dined the night before, resigned in protest.

In England the same thing took place. England wanted to join France in defending Poland and western Europe against a greater peril than had existed in Europe since Attila stood at Chalons centuries ago. England wanted to help. At once the railroad brotherhoods and other transportation interests served notice on Lloyd George that the moment one rifle was given to the Poles there would be a general strike in England. Lloyd George yielded to the threat.

You will say those are illustrations in other nations. Let me give one in our country that is in my memory, although I had no special connection with it. I refer to the shopcraft strike of 1922, when I was Solicitor General. I can still remember the great map we had in the Department of Justice which 2,000 deputy marshals reported day by day and hour by hour some new and fresh outrage, which was marked on the map. If you doubt it, go to the Department of Justice and you will see the record there. There were 1,500 cases of violent assault with intent to kill; 65 accounts of kidnaping, accompanied by brutal assaults; 8 cases of tar and feathers; 51 cases of dynamiting and burning railroad bridges for the purpose of wrecking freight and passenger trains; 250 records of bombing of railroad property or homes of nonstriking employees; 50 cases of train wrecking or derailment; hundreds of flagrant practices of sabotage in the crippling of engines and cars. That is the story of what was happening when another President, this time a Republican President, instructed the Attorney General to enter the United States court at Chicago and stop these wholesale assaults and outrages—nay, it was war against the people of this country. An injunction was filed, and never did those responsible for that strike dare to come into court and say that one single allegation of the United States Government in that case was, as a matter of fact, untrue. That strike was dissolved by the beneficent power of the injunction.

I have told you all this because I wanted to call attention to what I regard as a fundamental defect of this law. There are many others, and by reference to one you must not understand that I am excluding those to which I shall refer under the privilege of revising and extending my remarks.

Section 5 reads:

No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a restraining order—

Mark you, a restraining order is only for a few days, to preserve the status quo. If you can not preserve the status quo of a litigation, the courts of equity in many cases are impotent, because the thing about which the controversy rages is irreparably destroyed, and without the power of a restraining order there would not, in many cases, be any equity done. I continue reading—shall have jurisdiction to issue a restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction upon the ground that any of the persons participating or interested in the labor dispute constitute or are engaged in an unlawful combination or conspiracy because of the doing in concert of the acts enumerated in section 4 of this act.

The enumeration of those acts includes the ordinary methods outside of physical violence with which these nation-wide strikes are carried to successful result.

That strips the powers of a court of equity, even though the purpose of the industrial dispute is an ulterior one. It may be to do to another President what was done to President Wilson; to another Congress what was done to the Congress of 1916. It will be within the power of the great railroad brotherhoods of this country, although I am loath to think that they would use the power, but if there be anything in human liberty it is the fear of possible abuses of power—I say it would be within their power to do again in some industrial crisis what was done in 1916; that is, to say to the President and to the Congress, "You will do so and so, or there will be no interestate transportation in this country. We will see people starve unless we get our will." Now, in the last analysis that is what it means. No State court has sufficient sweep of jurisdiction to be helpful. A nation-wide strike on interstate traffic has the purpose of taking a community by the throat and saying to that community, "You must compel, through your legislative or executive representatives, the people with whom we have a dispute to do our bidding, and if you fail to do it, the consequence be on your head," even if it involve suffering, privation, and death to the public and the community who are innocent, who have no part in the controversy, who have not been in any way responsible either for high or low wages or conditions of employment, who have relied upon the solemn guaranty of the Constitution that interstate commerce shall be free.

I say under those circumstances, after having spiked the last cannon that can defend a community from intolerable suffering, you are simply transferring the power of compelling action, not merely in an industrial dispute but of compelling action of any political nature.

When you have done that, what have you done? You have made a long march away from that Philadelphia where the Constitution of the United States was framed and in the direction of Moscow, and do not be oblivious of that fact.

[Applause.] You will have enthroned the possible rule of the proletariat in free America.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. BECK. I feel, gentlemen, that I am making an undue trespass upon your time, but I feel so earnest in this matter. In any adjectives I use or in any aspersions I make upon this proposed law, do not understand for a moment that I am reflecting upon those who are its proponents. I have grown to that mellow age that I can see a thing which I believe is clear and indisputably true; but nevertheless I can well believe that those to whom it is not truth are just as honest as I am and are animated by just as high motives. Moreover, I am convinced that the proponents of this measure have, as I have, a sympathy for laboring men in industrial conditions, especially in a highly organized economic civilization such as ours. I understand that—and if I made any exception I would say that in the other Chamber I believe some of the proponents of this law, having visited Moscow and become somewhat enamored with its political philosophy, have endeavored to write a rule of public policy into this law which I could understand if Moscow had provided it, but I can not understand it in a Government such as ours, of laws and not of men, where the administration of justice is in the hands of judges, independent because of their life tenure, independent because of the fact that they have given their life to the equable and even-handed administration of justice. I can not believe that men of that type can not fairly and equably hold the scales of justice in these unhappy and, I suppose, often inevitable industrial disputes.

As I said before, I am going to suggest, when the time comes for amendment, that section 4, in line 23 on page 3, shall begin as follows—and those who are sincerely in favor of this bill as a measure of justice ought not to complain of it. I would amend it by beginning the sentence as follows:

Except where these acts are engaged in or threatened for an unlawful purpose or with unlawful intent.

Can there be anything unfair about that? If such a combination is to violate the Sherman law, to restrain, obstruct, or defeat interstate traffic, it is an unlawful act; and there ought to be the power in a court of equity to enjoin it, because there is no possible remedy at law, and there is none that even a court of equity can grant without a restraining order that may not cause irremediable harm.

The second amendment which I shall offer is more important. If you will turn to page 1, line 9, I would add the following—but perhaps I had better read the preceding sentence:

That no court of the United States, as herein defined, shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute except in strict conformity with the provisions of this act, nor shall any such restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction be issued contrary to the public policy declared in this act.

I would add:

Provided, however, That neither this section nor any subsequent section of this bill shall apply to any labor dispute which involves the suspension or discontinuance of a public utility whose continuous operation is essential to the property, health, and lives of the people of any State or community. In such cases where the welfare, health, or lives of a public are concerned who are not parties to such labor dispute, or where a labor dispute involves the obstruction of any instrumentality of interstate or foreign commerce, as railroad, steamships, telegraphs, telephones, or other methods of transportation or communication, in such event the power of a United States court to grant injunctive relief in the interests of the public in accordance with the principles of equity jurisprudence shall not be denied or abridged, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

[Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I want to suggest a further amendment, that it should not apply where the Government of the United States is the petitioner.

Mr. BECK. That is an excellent addition; but, of course, if these amendments are added, the Government of the United States through its Attorney General can at any time enter a court of equity and keep open the channels of interstate trade; but no such thing is possible if this bill is passed. You have tied the hands of your Attorney General, you have tied the hands of the President, you have tied the hands of the courts. What possible remedy will those have who are under a solemn obligation to continue the operation of railroads, for example? What possible remedy will the public have if you strip the courts of this beneficent power of injunction?

Why, gentlemen, that is a word which, if a militant and vociferous minority will repeat it long enough, acquires a sinister name.

I would like those of you who are lawyers to take the reports of the United States courts and tell me the cases in which if you had been a chancellor you would have acted any differently than the United States court did.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will cite the gentleman one.

Mr. BECK. The gentleman can do it in his own time. I did not say there was not one. I said I would like the instances named. I think in a few instances there have been abuses, but the abuses are infinitesimal in number in comparison with the beneficent work of the courts of equity.

What is an injunction? An injunction is the method that has been adopted by all civilized nations from the dawn of history as a measure of preventive justice. Instead of saying to people, "Go ahead and do the unlawful acts and we will put you in jail," the chancellor, after full hearing, simply says, "Now, you are threatening to do this, and before you have done it we now command that you desist from further action." And there is no punishment unless the man, in the teeth of that benign decree, violates the command.

An injunction? Why, if you accept the Mosaic story, injunctions were written in the Ten Commandments when Almighty God gave to Moses commandments, some of which said, "Thou shalt not." The Almighty could have punished after the commission of the acts but the Almighty preferred, if we accept the Mosaic story, to write down a few specific things which said, "Thou shalt not do it," and it was an injunction. They were known to Roman law, they have been known to English law from the very beginning of history, or at least from the constitution of courts of equity, because courts of equity were the very outgrowth of the fact that it was through an injunction that the rigors of the common law were sought to be abated; that instead of taking men ruthlessly and sentencing them to prison, to the scaffold, or to the stake for offenses against the social order, the courts of equity, through the power of the chancellor, were enabled to say in a far kinder way, "Now, you are doing this or you are threatening it to be done; we have heard you, and we simply say to you, you must not do it," just as a father or a mother says to his child when the child is thoughtless, "You must not do this."

Equity distinguishes between three different degrees of injunctive relief. The first is the restraining order, whose purpose is to preserve the status quo until the court can hear a motion for the preliminary injunction pendente lite; the second is the preliminary injunction, granted upon notice to preserve the status quo during the uncertain length of litigation; and the third is the final, permanent injunction.

As I have said, these equity powers of the court have existed from time immemorial and have always been found to be essential to the administration of justice. They existed in the Roman law under the name of interdicts and were divided into three kinds—prohibitory, restitutory, and exhibitory. The English chancellors exercised these remedial powers from the first beginnings of English equity jurisprudence. Indeed, even the common-law courts in a measure enjoyed them by the use of the writ of prohibition, but its inadequacy and the superior remedial power of the injunction largely contributed to call courts of equity into existence, and the more frequent use of these writs, whereby the elementary principles governing injunctions were formulated, were—curiously enough and as proof that history repeats itself—due to the very conditions, which now make it necessary for courts of equity to use them so frequently to prevent destruction of property.

It would serve no useful purpose to trace the history of this method of administering justice. Probably in all ages and with all peoples a distinction has always been made between remedies which prevent the commission of wrongs and those which redress them when actually committed, and while no one was a more zealous champion of the common-law courts and the rights of their judges than Lord Coke, yet even he remarked how far preferable the preventive justice of the chancellor was to the compensatory justice of the common-law courts.

The founders of this Government could not have ignored this power of the judiciary, and it is significant that they were jealously insistent upon the absolute independence of the judiciary, in order that the judges could exercise, without the interference of either the legislature or executive, these great remedial powers. In the Declaration of Independence, the encroachment upon the independence of the judiciary was included as one of the great counts in that formidable indictment against the British Crown. The great declaration charged that the—

King has obstructed the administration of justice by refusing his assent to laws for establishing judiciary powers—made judges dependent on his will alone for the tenure of their offices and the amount and payment of their salaries.

The framers of the Constitution, in defining in its noble preamble the great objects to which the Federal Government was solemnly dedicated for all time, included the phrase: "To establish justice," and while many of the phrases, employed in the preamble, were borrowed either from the preceding Articles of Confederation or from the charters of the Colonies, it is significant that the words "to establish justice" had not been thus previously used. Madison tells us that one of the great causes which led to the Constitutional Convention, was the—necessity of providing more effectually for the security of private rights and the steady dispensation of justice. Interferences with these were evils which had, more perhaps than anything else, produced this convention.

To protect the individual from the tyranny of the many was one of the great objects of the Federal Government, and for this purpose Federal courts were established. Their independence was the very keystone of the arch. It was never contemplated that Congress could paralyze the judicial arm of the Government in any essential power.

The framers of the Constitution, in defining the powers of Congress—powers which were obviously duties—said in Article I, section 8, that Congress should have power "to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court," and this power and correlative duty was put on a plane with the power to regulate commerce and coin money.

Article III, section 1, provided that—

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

And by section 2, it was provided—

The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States and treaties, or which shall be made under their authority.

Thus the equity power to issue restraining orders, which had theretofore existed in cases where a court had reason to apprehend imminent and irreparable damage, was directly vested by the Constitution itself in the Federal courts as an inherent power.

While courts administer the law as enacted by the law-making power, and while many rights are thus subject to change or even destruction by the legislature, and while many remedies are likewise the subject of legislative change, it is obvious that there are two remedies which fundamentally concern the authority of the court itself and have no special relation to any form of action or any species of property, and without which the court could not preserve either its dignity or authority. These foundation powers can not be taken from a court when once established, since the "judicial power" is vested in the courts when created not by Congress but by the Constitution itself.

These two fundamental powers of courts are the power to punish for contempt and the power in whatever form of action to preserve the status quo pending an opportunity for the court to consider the matter in controversy by a restraining order. If either were taken from the courts, their power would in many instances be wholly nullified.

In re Debs (158 U. S. 564) the Supreme Court quotes with approval the following judicial utterances of State courts:

The power to even imprison for contempt from the earliest history of jurisprudence has been regarded as a necessary incident and attribute of a court, without which it could no more exist than without a judge. It is a power inherent in all courts of record and coexisted with them by wise provisions of common law. A court without the power effectually to protect itself against the assaults of the lawless or to enforce its orders, judgments, or decrees against the recusant parties before it would be a disgrace to the legislation and a stigma upon the age which invented it.

The summary power to commit and punish, say, contempts tending to obstruct and degrade the administration of justice is inherent in courts of chancery and other superior courts as essential to the execution of their powers and to the maintenance of their authority, and is part of the law of the land within the meaning of the Magna Charta and the twelfth article of our declaration of rights.

These judicial utterances, thus quoted with the approval of the highest court of the land, are even more applicable to a restraining order for the reason that as equity takes cognizance of no cause in which a money judgment would be adequate relief and as, therefore, equity causes ordinarily contemplate some different relief than the mere payment of money, the inability to preserve the status quo by a restraining order would frequently prevent the court from passing to final judgment and granting the final decree, which the prayers of the bill, if sustained by the proofs, would necessitate, and it is more derogatory to the dignity of the court to prevent by anticipation that which the court upon hearing would have ordered than to punish after the hearing the refusal of the recusant party to do that which is ordered. Whatever the comparative importance of the two may be, it can not be gainsaid that the two remedies are complementary, and the power by contempt proceedings to punish the recusant party for refusing to do that which he is ordered to do would be inadequate for the full assertion of equity powers were it not for the complementary right of the court, before the defendant could be in contempt, to direct that the status quo be preserved until the court could hear both sides of the controversy and grant such relief in the premises as the law of the land requires. The proposed bill seeks to destroy this inherent, immemorial, and indispensable power of a court of equity. Were it confined to a mere prohibition of the issuance without reasonable previous notice of a writ of injunction as technically distinguished from a restraining order, no objection could be had to its passage. It would not change the law or the practice of the Federal courts as they now exist; but it goes farther and seeks to prevent a restraining order without previous notice and a hearing except for five days and no longer. Previous notice must of necessity mean such adequate notice to the parties affected by the restraining order as will enable them to appear in court and show the nature of their defense. It would, therefore, of necessity be a notice extending over some days, especially in labor cases, where considerable time would necessarily be required to serve notice upon the large number of persons who are ordinarily the subject of the labor controversies in the courts. Moreover, a hearing would have to be had and, as usual in this class of cases, the merits of the question would of necessity be gone into at such hearing and considerable time thus lost. The bill, therefore, would effectually destroy the power of the court, no matter how imminent and irreparable the danger might be, of granting any restraining order to preserve the status quo. It may be admitted that in many labor controversies no real inconvenience or hardship would thereby result, but in many other labor cases irreparable harm and mischief would follow, for frequently a bill of injunction is not filed to restrain unlawful combinations until there is immediate danger of grievous injury, for which no money or other redress is possible against the unnamed and unknown conspirators, who, moreover, are often financially irresponsible.

To illustrate this, let us take the cause célèbre from which sprang this agitation to destroy the power of the Federal courts to issue such injunctions. I refer to the case In re Debs, supra, which was decided in 1894 and which admirably illustrates the mischievous possibilities of the proposed legislation. Before the Debs case there was no dissatisfaction with the Federal courts in the matter of injunctions, but since the Debs case, and the collapse of the gigantic strike, which was the subject matter of that litigation, there has been a continuous effort by professional labor leaders, in and out of Congress, to prevent a repetition of the action of the Federal courts in the Debs case, notwithstanding that it finally had the sanction of the Supreme Court of the land, and that the suit was instituted at the instance of the President of the United States as the representative of the whole American people.

The facts referred to in the bill were matters of common knowledge. The strikers numbered thousands and had so far succeeded that not only was Chicago isolated from the world but the entire country suffered from the injury to its supply of food. The wires carried to the farthest parts of the world the news of the paralysis of law and order in Chicago, and for a time the majesty of the law seemed hopelessly subverted. In this notorious condition—the facts of which were not then and are not now capable of dispute—the United States filed a bill in equity to restrain the officers of the American Railway Union from persisting in their unlawful conspiracy, and the court granted a preliminary injunction which in no way affected any property rights of the defendants, but simply commanded them to refrain from doing that which under the laws of this country, and of every civilized country, is unlawful and criminal. If they were not committing the acts, the injunction could do them no possible harm, and if they were committing them, the command that they should refrain from destroying other people's property and interfering with other people's liberty and imperiling other people's lives would seem so eminently just that sympathy for the conspirators would seem to have been somewhat misplaced.

In this connection it should be noted that neither the bill nor the injunction in the Debs case in any manner interfered with the right of the members of the railway union or of the Pullman Palace Car Co., either individually or collectively, to strike. As Mr. Justice Brewer said:

> It was not a bill to command a keeping of the peace; much less was its purport to restrain the defendants from abandoning whatever employment they were engaged in. The right of any laborer, or any number of laborers to quit work was not challenged. The scope and purpose of the bill was only to restrain the forcible obstructions of the highways along which interstate commerce travels and mails are carried.

The preliminary injunction, which was virtually a restraining order, was served upon the defendants, who, without seeking either to modify its terms or vacate it altogether or to take an appeal from its provisions, elected to defy the order of the court, and it was for this willful refusal to obey this preliminary injunction, after due service of notice of its contents, that Debs and his associates were summoned by attachment in the nature of contempt proceedings, and, after a hearing, were sentenced to imprisonment for contempt of court, and it was this judgment that the Supreme Court of the United States sustained.

If the bill now under consideration had then been a law, such summary action would have been impossible. Notice would have had to be served upon all who were participating in the lawlessness, and as these numbered many thousands and had completely terrorized the officers of the law, such notice could not have been served under any circumstances upon all of them, and as to most of them the service of such notice would have required considerable time. Any hearing had upon the application for a restraining order could have been prolonged for many days, and thus the court, if the present proposed bill had been a law in 1894, would have been powerless to protect the property of the railroad companies and the right of their employees, who remained in their service, to continue to work for many days, and in the meantime incalculable losses in the destruction of property and loss of business would have been inflicted upon the transportation companies, the most of whom, be it remembered, were not in any sense parties to the original controversy between the Pullman Co. and its employees. These companies, without such summary action to preserve the status quo, would have been powerless to save their properties or to recover damages for their destruction.

Of what avail would a final injunction, after a full hearing on the merits of the case, have been to these defendants, for the property which was destroyed and the loss of business, while great in amount, would not have been easily susceptible of exact proof. Moreover, how could any judgment for such damages be collected against the railway union and those who acted in cooperation with it, who were for the most part unknown and financially irresponsible. The Debs case, therefore, is a striking illustration of the fact that to deny a court of equity the right by summary action to preserve property pending a full hearing and final determination as to whether there is any unlawful interference with such property, is in effect a denial of justice altogether. The court might as well close its doors and surrender its high prerogatives. It is this essential right which the proposed bill seeks to destroy.

The bill is unconstitutional as it is in effect an invasion by Congress of the judicial department of the Government.

It seems unnecessary to state the reasons why Congress may not destroy the "judicial power" of the Federal courts, even if it alone can create all these courts with the exception of the Supreme Court. I concede arguendo that Congress may prescribe the methods of procedure of the inferior Federal courts, and that they have a wide discretion in prescribing such methods of procedure, and that the fact that a given method of procedure may be less effective than the old chancery practice, would not justify any court in impeaching the constitutionality of such legislative modification of its chancery powers; but I submit that where the necessary effect of any legislation is to destroy wholly the inherent and fundamental powers of the court to discharge its exalted function of administering justice, it infringes upon that "judicial power," which under the Constitution is vested in the Federal courts.

Bearing in mind the technical distinction between a temporary injunction pendente lite and a restraining order, we concede that as to the former a requirement as to notice and previous hearing is within the power of the court, but as to the latter, I dispute the power of Congress, because it destroys wholly the ability of the Federal court in given cases to do justice at all, and I have illustrated this by reference to the unquestioned facts in the Debs case, where, without such preliminary injunction, which was virtually a restraining order, the whole purpose of the litigation would have been defeated and a final decree would have been impotent to do justice. In this respect, I think a restraining order is analogous to the order to punish for contempt, and as to both, while conceding that Congress may prescribe the methods whereby either restraining orders or punishments for contempt can be ordered, it can not wholly destroy either right without virtually destroying the power of the court to administer justice, and this is beyond the power of Congress as long as the court exists. It is of the very essence of a restraining order that it should be granted without notice. That is its purpose and function, to preserve the status quo until the court can determine upon notice and hearing whether the ends of justice require an injunction pendente lite.

It has been suggested that as Congress could abolish the inferior Federal courts altogether, its power over them is absolute. I dispute, however, that Congress has any such constitutional right, although I concede that the failure of Congress to provide inferior courts, in which the "judicial power" of the Constitution may be exercised, is a failure to discharge a constitutional duty, as to which there can, in the nature of the case, be no practical remedy. This illustrates a truth familiar to every student of constitutional law that many acts are unconstitutional, which the courts are powerless to prevent, and that they are especially powerless to compel the doing of that which may be a constitutional duty and failure to do which is a violation of the Constitution. Such constitutional questions are said to be of a "political nature," and beyond review by the judicial department of the Government.

Since the case of Martin against Hunter's Lessee it can not be questioned that the word "may," in section 1, article 3, is used as is not unusual, in its mandatory and not in its permissive sense. For Congress to abolish the inferior Federal courts, practically the only possible sources of original jurisdiction, and to refuse to substitute others, would not only be unconstitutional but an act of revolution. For reasons previously given it is clear that the founders of the Republic not only intended to create the Judicial Department of the Government but to make it independent, and as no Government could exist without the exercise of judicial power, and as all judicial power was expressly withheld from both the executive and legislative departments of the Government, it is clear that an imperative duty was imposed upon Congress to create inferior Federal courts, from which duty Congress could not escape without destroying the equilibrium of our Government. But as the method of exercising this power is left to the discretion of the legislature, the judiciary is powerless to enforce obedience to an unquestioned constitutional duty.

That the power to restrain by injunction is inherent in equity courts and is of the very essence of "judicial power" is clear from all the authorities and was expressly affirmed by the Supreme Court in the Debs case. I therefore submit that Congress can not, certainly as to existing courts, so impinge upon their inherent equity powers by any regulation of their procedure as to destroy altogether the power of the court to vindicate its existence and discharge its exalted functions, and that an act which forbids the issuance of a restraining order, often essential to the power of the court to do ultimate justice by final decree, would sap the very foundations of judicial authority, and to that extent destroy the "judicial power" thus vested by the Constitution.

The bill offends the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution in making a possible deprivation of property "without due process of law."

The bill makes an invidious distinction between labor controversies and all other legal controversies in which the remedial powers of an injunction are invoked. While all other citizens can appeal to the courts to preserve by restraining order property in controversy until the merits of a controversy with respect thereto can be heard, employers of labor would be powerless to invoke the same remedy, although, as a matter of fact, they have the greater need of it, for their rights are ordinarily invaded in labor controversies by combinations of men, many of whom are unknown by name and most of whom are financially irresponsible. Can such a distinction exist under a Constitution which, in the very words of its preamble, was adopted to "establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and posterity"?

The blessings of liberty thus referred to are the great privileges of the English-speaking race, and probably the two most important—at least in this day—are, first, the right of the citizen to enjoy his own property free from molestation, and, secondly, the right of every man to sell his labor upon such terms as he thinks expedient. Of the two, the right to labor free from the tyranny of a labor oligarchy is by far the most important.

The proposed bill in its discrimination between labor controversies and other controversies and its obvious purpose to take from a certain class in the community the protective power of a restraining order offends the political institutions in our country in destroying that "equality before the law," which is the basic principle of the American Commonwealth. It may be that no court could declare it unconstitutional on that ground, if it does not violate some express provision of the Constitution, but here, again, I submit that Congress, in considering any proposed bill, must consider not only whether the courts could declare it unconstitutional, but also whether the bill offends the spirit of the Constitution and violates the fundamental principles of American liberty, even though such a bill can not be judicially invalidated upon such grounds.

Many acts or omissions may be unconstitutional which are beyond the judicial power of the courts to adjudge invalid. The failure of Congress to create inferior courts demonstrates the truth of this.

That this bill violates the spirit of the Constitution is, I submit, shown not merely by the preamble but by the fifth and fourteenth amendments. These amendments are the complements of each other, the fifth referring exclusively to Congress and the fourteenth referring to the States.

In judicial proceedings "due process of law" simply means the administration of justice according to those fundamental principles of justice which from time immemorial have been recognized by the English-speaking world. This undoubtedly includes a right to be heard before the court passes to final judgment, but it also unquestionably includes the right of the court, by a restraining order, to preserve the status quo until a hearing upon notice can be had in due course of law, and one is almost as essential to the administration of justice as the other. A bill, therefore, whose obvious and necessary effect is to destroy this right of one class of litigants to have existing rights preserved until a full hearing can be had, violates the spirit, if not the letter, of the fifth amendment, which provides that no person shall "be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

While the proposed bill may not be such a tangible violation of constitutional provisions as a court could declare unconstitutional, the duty upon Congress is not less but in a sense greater to pass no act whose obvious effect violates the spirit of the Constitution and offends the nature of our institutions.

If constitutional, the bill is nevertheless inexpedient and uncalled for by existing conditions.

I have no desire to enter into the academics of the labor problem. If we ventured any general observation, it would be that the relations of employers and employees are such that, with few exceptions, the legislative departments of the Government can never enter into that field without causing worse mischief and confusion than previously existed. The theory of our Government is that there is a vast field of human activity into which the legislature is not generally competent to go and into which it never goes with any benefit to the people.

Such questions are either left to the immediate parties to the controversy to adjust themselves, or, where necessary, are remanded to the courts, which, being in close contact with the people and administering that great body of the law which is the proud heritage of the English-speaking race, are more responsive to the ever-changing needs of society and are more fair and just to all classes of the community than the legislature, acting through rigid and inelastic written laws, can possibly be. The moderation of the courts is admirably illustrated by the limited and restricted use which it has always made of its high prerogative writ of injunction. Notwithstanding Lord Coke's observation that preventive justice is always superior to compensatory justice, courts of equity are always indisposed to exercise their extraordinary powers, except upon urgent cause, and thus have grown up great principles in equity procedure, which seem a complete answer to the captious criticism visited upon the courts.

These principles, stated briefly, are as follows: Injunctions can not act retroactively. They are generally preventive and rarely mandatory. The injury temporarily restrained must be actual, substantial, immediately impending, and irreparable by a money judgment or by other proceedings at common law. The writ will not be used to prevent a crime or to preserve morality but is limited to property rights. It is only granted upon positive sworn allegations and the party seeking relief must not himself be at fault. It is always granted subject to immediate modification or termination. Whether for an indefinite or a designated period, the right of the party enjoined to move immediately for its dissolution, where it has not previously been heard, is always recognized. As the application of these principles rests in the sound discretion of the court, it enables the chancellor to weigh with care and impartiality the circumstances in each particular case, and thus render a judgment, which is a far nearer approximation to justice than any general inelastic act of Congress could possibly be.

What could be more humane and beneficent than this method of dealing with a labor controversy? The court takes from the defendants no property and in no respect affects their just liberty of action. It only commands him to refrain from interfering with his employer's property and from the liberty of other workmen to work for his employer. If he has no intention of doing the acts enjoined, the temporary injunction can do him no possible harm. If he does intend to invade the property rights of his employer or the liberty of other workmen to work for his employer, he is simply commanded not to do that which, under the laws of this and every other civilized country, is pronounced unlawful. If the employer does not invoke this beneficent remedy, he must then either proceed in the criminal courts against the unlawful combination, or sue them for damages at common law for an unlawful conspiracy.

If successful the members of the unlawful conspiracy may be either imprisoned or mulcted in heavy damages. This does not serve to allay ill-feeling or promote better relations between employer and employee, which the good of the community so imperatively requires. When, therefore, a court simply commands a combination, either of employers or employees, to refrain from trespassing upon the rights of others, it deprives the parties enjoined of nothing to which they have any legal right, but deals with the latter in the most conciliatory, humane, and beneficent manner.

I may have argued too long. The importance of the question must be my justification. I recognize the probable futility of my attempt to defeat this iniquitous measure. I am glad the wisdom of the fathers gave the President a veto; and if I were President Hoover I would veto this bill, if it becomes a law, even if it meant my defeat; and it would not so result. The American people love and respect a brave act and a brave man. Their contempt is for time servers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LONERGAN). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], the author of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the legislation before the House to-day has been under consideration by the Congress for the past 14 years. It has been in our committee every session of Congress for the past eight years, and sponsors of this legislation would be ungrateful if we did not state that without the friendly interest and the helpful cooperation of the Speaker of this House [Mr. GARNER] it would not have been possible to be considered here to-day [applause]; that without the friendly cooperation of the majority floor leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and the gentlemen of the Rules Committee, this bill would still be under academic discussion, as it has been for so many years in the past.

I want to say at the outset that, like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK], I have no animus or feeling against the gentlemen who in their wisdom seek to oppose this bill; and if I can not be as restrained and polite as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it is simply due to the difference in our personal characteristics; but I want to say, in all kindliness—and I have the greatest admiration and friendship for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and we happen to be on the same side on another question—that I fear the gentleman has not given his usual careful study and scrutiny to the bill now under consideration as he generally does when he takes the floor and makes a wonderful oration on history or on the occasion of some great man's birthday.

The bill, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in no way repeals the railroad labor act, and three-fourths of the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was directed against interference with transportation in interstate commerce; and the gentleman is a sufficiently good lawyer to know the provisions of the railroad labor act, which was passed in 1926.

Was it to create fear; was it to create prejudice? I will not charge that to the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but it was most unbecoming for a lawyer of his standing to direct his fire entirely on the interruption of transportation of interstate traffic, when there is another law which will take care of that situation.

Gentlemen, this bill does not—and I can not repeat it too many times—this bill does not prevent the court from restraining any unlawful act. This bill does prevent the Federal court from being used as an agency for strike-breaking purposes and as an employment agent for scabs to break a lawful strike. [Applause.] That is what the bill does.

The bill does not take one iota of jurisdiction—because we have not the power—from the State courts and does not change any State law.

Therefore you can well disregard all these expressions of fear of destroying the Government. Gentlemen, there is one reason why this legislation is before Congress, and that one reason is disobedience of the law on the part of whom? On the part of organized labor? No. Disobedience of the law on the part of a few Federal judges. If the courts had been satisfied to construe the law as enacted by Congress, there would not be any need of legislation of this kind. If the courts had administered even justice to both employers and employees, there would be no need of considering a bill of this kind now. If the courts had not emasculated and purposely misconstrued the Clayton Act, we would not to-day be discussing an anti-injunction bill. The trouble is that a few—and I am glad to say a few—Federal judges seeking to curry favor, social or other, trying to play up to men they considered financially powerful, were willing to disregard a sacred trust, mete out one-sided justice, take the employer side of a labor dispute, and act as a strike-breaking agency. That, gentlemen, is the reason, the history, and the necessity of my bill.

There is not an underlying principle written into this bill which Congress did not enact into law back in 1914, when the Clayton Act was passed. Gentlemen, this problem is not new. Congress struggled with it before it wrote the provisions into the Clayton Act in 1914 exactly as we are trying to do to-day.

What happened? A few of these Federal judges, whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania seeks to-day to anoint as special delegates of the Almighty carrying out the Ten Commandments, willfully disobeyed the law; they emasculated it; they took out its meaning as intended by Congress; they made the law absolutely destructive of the very intent of Congress.

There are many Members sitting here in the House at this very moment who have had experience in labor disputes as attorneys or judges. I have spoken with many of my colleagues who have been on the bench of their respective States, and every one of them has told me of the terrible abuses existing in the Federal courts in labor disputes. Every one of them agrees that injunctions have been issued regardless of the merits simply to aid the employers' side of a labor dispute and that the Federal courts have been improperly used as strike-breaking agencies.

Not one of these gentlemen will take the floor against this bill, and every one of them has publicly stated that he would vote for it. Their attitude is based on actual experience and observation, as judges of the courts of their respective States.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] refers to his experience in the shopmen's strike. There is another Member on the floor to-day, the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HOGG]. As a young lawyer in his father's office he lived through the long litigation in a coal miners' strike. The case of Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, reported in Two hundred and forty-fifth United States Reports, page 229, is a prominent page in the labor history of this country. Our colleague's father, a distinguished lawyer of his State, Charles E. Hogg, defended the striking of coal miners in that struggle. They sought the benefits of the law which Congress had enacted in 1914.

The Hitchman case, which is often referred to by exploiters of labor, by the champions of the "yellow-dog" contract system, shows the attitude of the lower Federal courts. It is one of the cases which emphasizes the necessity of inserting in the law the bill which is now before us. And the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HOGG], who lived through that case, witnessed the lower court granting a temporary injunction, then sustained by the circuit court, and later a permanent injunction being reversed of the circuit court of appeals and the case coming to the Supreme Court and the decree of injunction of the lower court again sustained, and in this maze of testimony and judicial expressions resulted a decision which gave comfort to the "yellow-dog" employer.

The gentleman from West Virginia informs me that he is going to vote for this bill, and I invite comparison between his contract with this kind of case and that of our colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It must be indeed gratifying to the gentleman from West Virginia to see that after 15 years the efforts and the labors of his distinguished father are bearing fruit and that the contention raised in the Hitchman case by him is now being written into definite law.

All this bill does is to reassert and reiterate and write in plain language the intent of Congress, taken from the decisions of the courts themselves. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects to a declaration of policy written into a statute. I submit that under our form of government all declarations of policy should be laid down by the elected representatives of the American people and not by a politically appointed Federal judge. [Applause.]

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Not now.

Mr. BECK. I want to say that I made no such statement.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I thank the gentleman; the gentleman's statement speaks for itself.

Now, what does this bill do? It prevents the Federal court from granting an injunction except on a hearing of testimony. That is all there is to that. It prevents the courts from prohibiting the performance of lawful acts. It provides for a trial by jury, as was provided in the act of 1914. It outlaws the "yellow-dog" contract. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made an eloquent appeal for American labor, and brought in the history of Independence Hall. Let me read to you a "yellow-dog" contract.

If that is American liberty, we might as well start to rewrite it right now in the House of Representatives. I have here an authentic form of a "yellow-dog" contract, handed to me by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], a real champion of freedom, a real friend of organized labor, who has been designated by the Speaker to grace the chair during the discussion of this bill. Here is a contract taken right from a shoe factory:

> I will perform all work assigned to me. I will not take part in any strike or hinder the conduct of the factory as an open shop or nonunion shop. My employment may be terminated at any time by you or by me upon written notice (notice to me to be sufficient if mailed to my address given below or delivered in hand to me).
> In case my employment is terminated, I will for one year thereafter in no way annoy, molest, or interfere directly or indirectly with your customers, property, business, or employees.
> As evidence of my good faith and in consideration of such employment by you, I hereby agree to deposit with you the sum of ——— dollars, payable ——— dollars herewith and the balance in weekly payments of ———.

Do you call that American liberty? When any labor dispute arises in that city this employer, this owner of this worker, owning his soul and body, runs into a Federal court to enjoin his employee and order him back to work! I say, gentlemen, as I read American history there is not a word in the debates on the Constitution, directly or indirectly, or that could remotely be construed to justify or ratify any such form of human slavery as has been brought about in many instances by the Federal courts. [Applause.] Yet we have had the spectacle of seeing United States courts enforce by injunction a provision of this kind. Some gentlemen have referred to the provision for a temporary restraining order. There is nothing new in that. It is taken from the rules of the Supreme Court. I am very sorry that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] took it upon himself to lead the opposition to this bill. I say again in all kindness that the last person in the world, the last person in this country, to talk against restraining the courts from issuing improper injunctions would be the Solicitor General under Harry Daugherty, former Attorney General. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] was Solicitor General at the time of the so-called shop injunction. Let me tell you how that was obtained—this is not hearsay, not from what somebody else tells me, but from the "inside story" as told by Harry Daugherty himself. This petition contained thousands of pages, containing thousands of affidavits. Daugherty says in his book:

> After looking around for a judge, Judge Wilkerson was finally selected. He was out of the city, but came back to Chicago. I was willing to submit it to any judge, but was most fortunate in getting Wilkerson. He had long been in the service of the Government as district attorney. Judge Wilkerson listened to my arguments with profound attention. He agreed with me on every point and granted the temporary injunction without a minute's delay.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Is it not true that it was at the earnest solicitation of Daugherty that Judge Wilkerson was appointed, just a few weeks before?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes. There is no doubt about that, though I was not going to mention it. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania says that he has no knowledge of it, I believe him. Daugherty would not have taken as clean a gentleman as Mr. BECK into his confidence when he—Daugherty—was on a mission of such dirty work. Of course, the gentleman from Pennsylvania had no knowledge, and the gentleman, I am sure, has no knowledge to-day that hundreds and hundreds of the affidavits presented to the court were perjured affidavits, were absolutely false in their contents.

Of course, the gentleman from Pennsylvania had no knowledge of that. While Wilkerson was called to Chicago the gentleman from Pennsylvania no doubt was looking up poetry in the Department of Justice, and Mabel Willebrandt was looking up law and Harry Daugherty was out suborning perjury in the preparation of the affidavits on which the injunction was based. That is the history of the Wilkerson injunction. Under this bill what would have happened? Under our bill, instead of bringing these perjured affidavits in on a clean piece of paper, he would have had to bring the witness to court, where they would have testified and would have been subject to cross-examination before the temporary injunction could have been issued. With the witnesses, thugs, gangsters, and crooks they had at the time, no such injunction could possibly have been issued. But even that case is beside the point now, because that case would come in under the railroad labor act, which provides mediation and conciliation, which appoints a board of mediation, and the whole procedure of settlement of disputes is outlined in detail in that act. If any gentleman is interested in getting the source of the verbiage and phraseology of any section of this proposed law, either I or the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], who has the citations, would be able to give them to him. There is nothing novel in this; it is written from the law of actual cases and from hard experience. I say that of all our Federal courts, of all our Federal judges, I do not believe there are now more than 10, perhaps, in the whole country who will find this bill objectionable. Of course, any judge who is owned and will sign an order with his eyes closed on demand is not worthy of the place he occupies, and legislation of this kind is necessary to hold such a man in check.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. There seems to be an impression that under this bill there is a distinction between tangible and intangible property in defining the powers of the court in issuing an injunction. Is there any such distinction?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; that is in the old Shipstead bill.

Mr. COLTON. Is it not carried in this bill at all?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No. Another thing I want to emphasize is that any of the acts so dramatically described by the gentleman from Pennsylvania would constitute a crime. There is no need to go into a court of equity if a crime is committed. There are criminal courts for that. That is nothing new. The function of an equity court is not to restrain crime. It can not possibly do it and does not attempt to do it, except in labor disputes.

Have you ever seen one of these orders? It is issued against fictitious persons. "The ——— Shoe Factory against Joe Doe, John Rowe, and Mary Smith, names fictitious, real names unknown to the complainant, and all other persons unknown to the complainant and unknown to the court, hereby are ordered and enjoined." Then it describes all sorts of acts. Any person who never saw the order or ever heard of it could be held liable. Incredible as it may seem, such cases have happened.

I know of a case where the court enjoined workers and unknown people from giving aid, or food, or help of any kind to fellow workers, and even from giving bonds or pursuing an appeal pending in a State court. Was there any more heinous or dastardly crime ever committed than that crime which attracted the attention of the world a few days ago in the kidnaping of a lovable child?

Does anyone think of going into court? Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] go into equity court to enjoin unknown people from giving food and shelter to the kidnaper? No; because these same lawyers will say that is not the function of an equity court. Only in the case of a labor dispute are they, the corporation lawyers, willing to get an equity court to issue injunctions of this kind. Here is this great arm of the court, invoked to do what? To break a strike; to take one side of an issue; to determine wages and standards of living by the brute force of judicial power—instead of leaving it to a matter of adjustment by free American workers.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Is the gentleman also keeping in mind parties acting in concert with them, although they may be unknown to those who are originally enjoined, hundreds of miles away, who may not even know the terms of the injunction?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Or even of the local dispute.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly. That is the purpose of going to the Federal court.

Mr. Chairman, if these acts of violence are committed or threatened to be committed, there is no need of resorting to the Federal court. The State authorities and courts have full control and jurisdiction of such local matters. People may be arrested immediately; but it is only to do something which otherwise could not be properly done that resort is made to the Federal court.

Now, I just want to read a short paragraph taken from the New York Journal of Commerce of February 26, 1932, which will perhaps display the arrogance, the indifference, the brutality of certain classes of men who believe in the "yellow-dog" contract which I have just read to you.

[Journal of Commerce, New York, February 1]

THE WASHINGTON SITUATION—ENACTMENT OF ANTI-INJUNCTION LAW SOON

Enactment of anti-injunction legislation by both the Senate and House of Representatives at the current session of Congress now seems likely. Opposed by large industries in the past, this legislation has been before Congress for about 14 years. However, in its present form it is so complicated that it might be said to be beyond the comprehension of most of the legislators. This may give rise to an opportunity for amendments that will take the sting out of the legislation and be more acceptable to finance.

That is the attitude of these gentlemen who are opposing the bill toward Congress. Let us do something, just once for a change, that will be acceptable to human beings.

Gentlemen, we are not legislating to-day for finance. I do not believe that we have arrived at the time that we must submit legislation for the approval of finance.

I resent the insinuation and the gratuitous insult that legislation coming before this House is beyond the comprehension of elected legislators to this House. I say that the big issue before us to-day is simply to carry out by legislation, which should not be necessary, those principles of American liberty which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] likes to sing about and talk about, but when it comes to a concrete example of carrying them into practice we find opposition of this kind.

Gentlemen, I ask you to stand by this bill. Stand by American liberty and help us to vote down unfriendly amendments. [Applause.]

And, in closing, permit me to quote from a real great American, a real champion of American institutions—Abraham Lincoln. This is what Lincoln said:

I am glad to see that a system of labor prevails in New England under which laborers can strike when they want to, where they are not obliged to work under all circumstances, and are not tied down and obliged to labor whether you pay them or not. I like the system which lets a man quit when he wants to, and wish it might prevail everywhere.

[Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill very heartily. We have been discussing in the Congress, during my period of 10 years of service, mostly economic legislation. This is the first bill that sounded the old war cry of human liberty. I do not at this time forget to pay my tribute of admiration to some men in another body who are responsible for the measure—the great Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska; Senator WALSH, of Montana; Senator BLAINE, of Wisconsin. Those men held hearings running into three and four years in an effort ultimately to write the terms of a bill acceptable to the Congress of the United States. It strikes me when I read the terms of the bill that the bill is keyed to the old keynote of the Liberty Bell in that Philadelphia hall before the Liberty Bell was cracked. This bill is a bill for the freedom of men who labor. It is not a bill to destroy commerce or industry.

I was most interested in the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK]. I do not see how an injunction could stop a strike of such nation-wide comprehension as that which the gentleman suggested. We would need the Army and the Navy to put down a strike that was going to stop all the avenues of interstate commerce. One little judge could not do it.

I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania places too much emphasis on what he believes to be the power of the injunction. When the gentleman discusses instances over in Europe I can not see that there is any blame to be laid on labor for the stand they took or that the argument has anything to do with injunctions. If labor in England, bled white by the war, threatened to strike if England went to war with Russia, I think perhaps they were mightily justified in that. They seem to have had the only statesmanship. Bolshevism was created by tyranny, and it was no function of the free labor of England to go over to Russia under the English flag to put it down and put the Czar's friends in control. They wisely decided to leave it to the Russians to construct a government on some other basis than that which had been torn down by universal approval of Russia. Perhaps the strike in Belgium was for the same reason, for no country was ever crushed more than was Belgium by the invasion of the armies. Just because a group of kings may have wanted it, I do not see why Belgian labor at that dread hour should have been desirous of marching in the Belgian Army to plunge themselves and their children before Russian cannon. But what has all of this to do with injunctions and this bill? Does Mr. BECK think that an injunction should have issued to force British and Belgian labor to join the army and fight Russia? Could Moscow contrive anything worse?

It was said by Mr. BECK, "This is a government of laws, and not of men." Yet we have two governments in America, one a government of laws, the other a government of men. The government of laws consists of that part of the social system which is subject to the definition of the laws of the land. The expression, "This is a government of laws," was intended as a reminder to officials that they were bound to act within the limits of the law, as servants of the people.

The government of men, which America seeks to encourage, consists of that large field of life which no law controls and where conscience is the only governing force. The government of laws has a duty to maintain peace and order in this vast field that liberty may flourish.

Wages, hours of toil, and other conditions of labor are fixed largely by the government of men. No matter how majestic the government of laws may be, how attractive its soil or equipment, the pay envelope determines whether its homes are peopled by paupers or free men.

It is strange during a period when the loudest outcry from great industrial concerns has been that government has invaded the domain of private business with meddlesome laws, that they themselves have invaded the government in a scandalous way with successful demands for injunctions that strip from labor every natural and constitutional right. It is strange, in the field of American freedom where laws do not govern but men alone reign, that the most powerful impulse of these free rulers is toward tyranny.

This bill says that a Federal court shall not arbitrarily enter the field of the government of men, where the purest liberty ought to prevail, and by the power of the government bring down into slavery those who are attempting to negotiate for what they believe to be the necessities of their lives and the happiness of their children. We are restoring the courts to a government of laws.

Courts have issued injunctions bringing on conditions as extreme as those which were in the mind of the gentleman from Pennsylvania when he said, "If you do not have these injunctions you might have starvation."

A court issued an injunction against striking miners so that they had to leave their homes, although the State law gave them the right to stay there and contest their rights. The court issued an injunction to the effect that the union could not expend its money to feed them while they were on strike; that it could not help to clothe them and they were evicted from their homes under a Federal injunction, when the dispute was about wages, and they were sent out, 10,000 of them, to live in the snow, to starve, and freeze into submission.

Injunctions have been used most oppressively in this country. A court issued an injunction to the effect that no striker might talk to another striker about the strike; that a striker could not publish in the newspapers that there was a strike; that he could not telegraph, telephone or write to anyone in America that there was a strike; that a striker might not ever say there was a "yellow-dog" contract, signed with his name, but coerced from him by his bosses.

Why should we support injunctions of that character? We are not trying to have injunctions stopped, but we do not want injunctions which repeal the constitutional and natural rights of labor.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] thinks we are yielding to an organized minority. We are yielding to an honest and just demand. [Applause]. This petition for the redress of grievances has been put upon the desks of Congress for 20 years, and when we yield we yield practically unanimously, in the full dignity of our power, to a petition which long ago should have been granted. We are trying to reestablish a system of laws for the government of the courts. We are writing a law binding the courts to a definite course of action with reference to injunctions. We are not disturbing the government of laws but we are taking away from the courts their right to act as if they were a government of men. By unconscionable injunctions they have defied the first purpose for which courts were instituted—the protection of the freedom of the individual.

I have no fear about the paralysis of all of the commerce of the Nation. I have not seen labor organized to threaten to starve people of the country. They say Grover Cleveland felt that. Would labor starve its own children? There has been a lot of exaggeration about what labor has done. Probably Mr. BECK has been reading the affidavits of the owners of the roads instead of the replies of labor. Once in a while somebody ought to look into it to see whether labor ever had a just demand for a better wage and for better hours.

We are living in a free country, and the only people who have not been freed are the masses of the people. The industries are free to rush into court and take away the natural and constitutional rights of the great masses of the people by the process of injunction. Then, when labor appeals for the freedom of negotiating in the form of collective bargaining, we suddenly find out that we might have the same condition here as exists in Russia.

I have not noticed any great movement among labor toward the Soviet Government. I have not noticed in time of war any treason by American labor. Their patriotism was magnificent.

Labor is not attacking the courts. Give to labor the robe of Justice Holmes and they will build a shrine around it. Here their children will kneel and pledge everlasting loyalty to the courts which gave them a man so just. Their prayer will always be that other judges will be guided by the character of justice that blessed this great man's heart. We put his heart in this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein certain excerpts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the rules of debate in every parliamentary body in every civilized government provide that there shall be an equal division of time, equal alike for those who propose and for those who oppose. Those who oppose are not required to beg a little time from those who propose. I am sure the Members of the House, when they reflect upon the debate after passing this bill and the people of the United States who read this RECORD, will decide that there has not been a fair division of time. One-half of the hour used by the proponents in debate on the rule should have been allotted to those opposing the bill. But they granted the opposition not one minute. They used the whole hour.

The Rules Committee is autocratic. When it brings in a rule it suspends every other rule of the House. The rule of the Rules Committee becomes the law of the House and every Member must obey it. But it is supposed to be just and fair. It is supposed to equally divide the time used on the floor.

Now, to have been fair, under parliamentary procedure, the rule that came here from the Rules Committee should have provided that of the one hour for debate on the rule, it should have allotted one-half to those who were in favor of the measure and one-half to those who were against it, and some Member opposing the rule should have been given the control of the opposition's time, so they would not have to beg for time that was theirs by matter of right.

I called attention the other day to the kind of rule that I told the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] he had in his mind to bring in here governing this debate, which was just the kind of a rule he did bring here, and I intimated then it would be unfair; and when the rule was brought in here it provided that all four hours for general debate was in the control of the proponents, and of the hour in his control as the member of the Rules Committee calling it up for debate on the rule he gave not one minute of it to the opposition. Instead of yielding 30 minutes of that time within his control to those who are against the bill, he yielded the entire 30 minutes to the ranking member of the committee, who is just as much in favor of the legislation as the gentleman himself, and he used all of his time debating the merits of the bill, and he left not one single minute of the time for those who are against the bill. Is this fair? The people of the United States who read this RECORD will not so hold. And you gentlemen here, after cool reflection, will see that it is manifestly unfair.

Then the rule itself, providing for general debate on this bill, was it fair? Did it say that the four hours should be equally divided, two hours to be controlled by those who are in favor of the bill and two hours to be controlled by those against it? Oh, no; it was neither fair nor just. It provided that two hours should be controlled by my colleague from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], the chairman of the committee, who is strongly in favor of the measure, and that the other two hours should be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], who is just as much in favor of the measure as is my colleague. So control of all five hours was given to the proponents of the measure. Is this fair, my great lawyer friend from Maine? Oh, no. Control of your own time is most important in debate. Just why was the opposition given no control whatever of any part of the five hours for debate? Talk about gag rule! This is the first gag rule that has been brought into this House during this session, and I want the Rules Committee to understand that we are not going to stand for it. They did this deliberately after I had asked that the opposition be given control of half of the time.

Did we, who are opposed to the rule, not have an inherent right to ask the acting chairman of the Rules Committee [Mr. O'CONNOR] to give us our half of the time? And when we politely asked him for some time, was it not his duty to speak to us politely when we were exercising our God-given right in asking him for some time? Did he have the right to stand up like an autocrat and say, "No; I shall not." "I give you nothing."

You know some men can not stand a little power. They have not the capacity. My friend from New York has not the capacity properly to handle himself when he is given a little power. Just because we put him on the Rules Committee——

Mr. GAVAGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield now. I refuse to yield until I get through with what I have on my system.

Some men can not stand a little power. When we put our friend from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] on the Rules Committee we did not say to him, "We give you all the powers of the House so that you can come in here and abuse the Members."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is talking about the division of time for discussing the bill and is not confining himself to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I am proceeding in order. I know the rules as well as my friend from Wisconsin.

We did not tell him he could get up here and arbitrarily take all the time and then abuse us because we asked him for some time. You know a little temporary power sometimes destroys men who have not the capacity to assimilate it.

Upon what meat has this, our Cæsar from New York, fed that he has grown so great that he can not answer a colleague decently when he is asked for a little time? For a while the gentleman was a candidate for floor leader of this House. He now sees why we could not put him in that position. He could not handle the place properly.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; that is all I have to say about that. I am now going to discuss the bill. [Laughter.]

This is one of the most important measures that has ever been before this Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR entered the Chamber.

Mr. BLANTON. For fear the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] might not have been here when I said it, I repeat, Upon what meat has this, our Cæsar from New York, fed that he has grown so great? [Laughter and applause.]

This kind of greatness does not preside long. If I stay in the House 6 months or a year or 20 years more, before I quit I am going to see that when a rule comes from this Rules Committee it requires an equal length of time to be controlled by those who are for the bill and an equal length of time to be controlled by those who are against the measure. Now I will discuss the bill.

I am just as much a friend of those who labor and of labor unions as my friend LAGUARDIA. I have labored all my life. The callouses on my hands show that during the first years of my life I have done physical labor on the farm until after I was grown, and every sympathy of my heart beats for the man who labors for his daily bread.

I know exactly what problems confront a man who must do manual labor for his living. I know how hard it is to make ends meet. I know just how hard it is to make enough to pay rent, and lights, and fuel, and water, and buy food and clothing and necessities of life, and pay doctor's bills, and dentist bills, and for school books and tuition, and the thousand and one problems that daily beset the head of a family. I believe earnestly in a proper American standard of living, and an American standard of wages, and an American standard of working conditions, and an American standard of working hours. I believe that the working employee has just as many rights and is entitled to just as much consideration as the moneyed employer. But their rights are equal. They are entitled to equal consideration. The law does not, and should not, favor one as against the other. When an employee is unfair to an employer I am against the employee. When an employer mistreats an employee I am against the employer. The rights of both must be protected, for if there were no employers there would be no employees.

I have been a member of the bar of the supreme court in my State, and a member of the Federal courts in my State, for 35 years, with an active practice that has compared pretty favorably with that of any other lawyer in Texas. I have never represented a corporation against an employee; I have always represented the employees against the corporation. I have represented the under dog in all cases, but I am not one of the kind of men who will let labor unions dictate to me when they are wrong. I am like the gentleman from Pennsylvania—when they are right I am for them, and when they are wrong I am against them, and I am not afraid to let them know it.

When the President of the United States during war called attention to the fact that there had been several thousand strikes by labor unions against the Government, when some men were getting $30 a day in the shipyards, and nevertheless striking, after they had been exempted from the draft to work, and he asked us to give him a law that would authorize him, if the men exempt from draft refused to work, he could take the exemption away and send these workmen out to fight, I supported and helped to pass that amendment. That was what was called the "work or fight amendment."

It was a good amendment, and I made a speech on the floor in favor of it. That evening in my office Mr. Samuel Gompers advised me that I would have to back up on that, as I could not make a speech of that kind. I said, "What do you mean?" He said, "Because I tell you that you can not. We will defeat you when election time comes." That was when I told Mr. Gompers to go to a place where I am sure he did not go. [Laughter.]

Afterwards he sent to the newspapers of my district page attacks upon me over his signature, and Mr. Lloyd Thomas, then editor of the Abilene Times, estimated that about $100,000 was spent organizing my district against me. Do not think that I have not labor unions in my district. It would be very much easier for me politically to go along with the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] and vote for his bill, because opposing it will incite renewed opposition. I am not afraid of the consequences, however, for members of labor unions in my district are sensible men. I have an active district attorney now campaigning against me; but I am not apprehensive, because many members of the labor organizations support and have confidence in me; I mean the rank and file of labor-union men. If a walking delegate from Washington comes down and says to the labor unions in my home, "You pass a resolution against BLANTON," some man would rise up and say, "I could not vote for a resolution of that kind, for when I was sick and my wife was worn out nursing me, notwithstanding he had held court all day, BLANTON came and sat up with me at night."

A carpenter would say he could not vote against me, for when his house burned down and his wife and children were out in the storm "BLANTON was the one who left the bench and headed and circulated a subscription to raise the money to get my home rebuilt." These labor unions at home know where my heart is, and I am not afraid to tell their national union leaders now in the gallery that I am against the labor unions only when they are wrong.

This bill permits them to picket any establishment in the United States at will. No judge can stop it. I want to call your attention to a few cases here in Washington that have come under my observation.

There is a man named Reeves down here on F Street, a fine citizen of Washington. Years ago he began a little bakery and confectionery business. He had about three employees to begin with. He has been honest, efficient, and faithful to his Government and his country and his patrons and to his employees. He has built up a tremendous business and organization where he now has over a hundred employees. They did not want to be unionized; they were getting good wages and did not want to join any union. Everything was pleasant between Reeves and his employees. They had a contract with each other. They saw fit under the Constitution of the United States, which gives them the right to contract, to make a contract with each other that they would have no union connection. Was not that a right they had?

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] says this is a "yellow-dog" contract. He calls Reeves a yellow dog. The 100 honest employees of Mr. Reeves he would call yellow dogs because they did not see fit to affiliate with the unions. Was it not a right they had under the Constitution of the United States? Does an employee have to join a union and pay its officers union dues out of his salary as long as he lives to prevent Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. SUMNERS from calling him a yellow dog? Does an honest American citizen like Mr. Reeves, who prefers to work American citizens unaffiliated with unions, have to be called a "yellow dog" by Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. SUMNERS simply because he prefers to exercise his God-given constitutional rights? If he does, we are in a bad fix.

Yet when a labor union here in Washington went meddling around there and injected itself into somebody else's business and told these employees they had to unionize and they told them they would not do it, what did they do? They interfered with that constitutional right of private contract. They went there in front of Mr. Reeves's store and picketed that man's business, and had men and women walk up and down in front of the business with banners saying, "This is a scab shop," "This is unfair," "No decent people will trade here," "No decent people will go in or out," insulting men and women in the Nation's Capital, and finally costing Mr. Reeves thousands of dollars. I do not stand for that, I will say to my friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], and I want these leaders of these labor unions in Washington now sitting in the gallery to understand that I do not stand for that. I am an American citizen, and I demand for all honest Americans their rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

Down here at the Raleigh Hotel they had a bunch of waiters who were perfectly satisfied, who were getting more salary than any other waiters in town, not any of them dissatisfied. The waiters' union went around there and told them they had to unionize. The waiters told them they would not do it, and then the waiters' union threatened them and threatened them until they made them quit and walk out. No court could make them go back, I will say to my friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]; you can not find a writ of injunction that ever was issued by a Federal court in the United States which ordered men to go to work when they did not want to go to work. That has never been done. No court has ever ordered men to go to work. I challenge any of you here to produce such a writ. A court may have issued an order that they can not tear down a man's plant, it may have issued orders that they can not burn a man's plant, it has issued orders that they can not kill and maim men, women, and children, but they have never ordered that they must go to work.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They have.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, then, show it to me. Produce such a writ. You can not put any such writ that is authentic in this RECORD. I challenge you to do it. This waiters' union went down there and made those fellows quit, and because the Raleigh Hotel hired other waiters to do its work, the union put a whole bunch of men and women pickets in front of that hotel, a dozen of them, three shifts of eight hours each, and they walked around and around that Raleigh Hotel in the Nation's Capital every hour of the day and night for weeks, and to everyone who went into the hotel they would say, "This is a scab hotel," "This is unfair," "This is indecent," "No decent man or woman will go in here," threatening the people who wanted to go into the hotel, and that continued for about a month. I became so outraged that I went down there myself one day and had a lot of photographs taken of them, and told them that if they did not stop I would get out an injunction myself, and I threatened to do so from this floor, and finally they stopped. But it cost the Raleigh Hotel thousands of dollars.

Do you know Mr. Gude, the florist here, one of the best in the United States? He started away back yonder some 30 or 40 years ago, a poor man, with just himself, in a little hole in the wall. He by honesty, thrift, and enterprise has built up and built up until he has become one of the largest florists in the United States. Go out here south and look at his plant; go out northeast and look at his big plant; go elsewhere in the city and look at his big plants. He works hundreds of people, every one of them perfectly satisfied. They saw fit to enter into a contract with him where they said they did not want to be union members. Did they not have the right thus to contract? Yet they are called "yellow dogs" by Mr. LAGUARDIA, and proponents of this bill call Mr. Gude a "yellow dog." The union came along there and tried to unionize Mr. Gude's employees, who were perfectly satisfied and who did not want to join the union. The union threatened them and then put pickets around his business, with banners saying, "This is a scab outfit." "Do not patronize it." "No decent person will buy here." And they picketed that business for weeks and cost Mr. Gude thousands of dollars.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not yet. I must first get this out of my system.

Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I can not yield. I have not the time. But I thank the presiding Chairman for his fairness. The Chairman of this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CONNERY, of Massachusetts, and I do not agree on this question. We do not agree on the liquor question, but he is one of the fairest men and one of the ablest presiding officers I ever saw. If he had been in charge of this rule he would have given us an equal division of time.

My friend from Indiana, Mr. GREENWOOD, said that not all Federal judges granted injunctions in labor disputes. That is so. Some of them have not got the guts to do it, because they know that if appointive lightning should ever strike them and they were nominated for a high position and had to be confirmed by the Senate, these same labor-union boys that are now holding the whip over us up in the gallery will be over there in the Senate gallery saying to Senators, "You shall not confirm him, because this fellow granted an injunction on a yellow-dog contract." They would keep the Senate from confirming him just because the poor fellow had granted an injunction.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a few minutes. I can remember what occurred to the great historian of the United States, our historian, if you please, even though he is on the other side of the aisle, my historian, when he was first elected to this House, Mr. BECK. He had his commission from the governor of his State. He appeared here on the floor of the House with the rest of us. I can remember how those same boys now up in the gallery wanted him punished. I heard some Member say, "I ask that he stand aside." Mr. BECK, I voted for you then and helped to seat you because I did not believe in that kind of monkey business. The right that you had here to be sworn in was a God-given right that the people of Pennsylvania gave you when they elected you to Congress, and no one here had any just right to cause you to stand aside.

Mr. CELLER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry to refuse. I have not the time.

Mr. CELLER. I want to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. If my friend from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] will give me that other 30 minutes that I am justly entitled to under the rules of debate, I will yield to everybody. How is he going to use those extra 30 minutes that justly belong to the opposition? The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] said that nobody was against this bill except myself, although I heard a pretty good speech by my friend Mr. BECK. Mr. O'CONNOR may be right. There may not be anybody else here who will dare to get up and oppose this bill. If he is right, why could not I have my other 30 minutes? If my friend from Texas will yield me those other 30 minutes, it would not even then be a fair division of time, because the other side will have an hour and a half the better of us.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. BLANTON. If my friend from New York will get my colleague from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] to give me the other 30 minutes that is due from him to the opposition, I will answer the gentleman's question and all other questions, otherwise not.

Do you know where this bill will lead? Under its provisions it is possible for members of labor unions to be ordered by their union in secret session, without the knowledge of the public, to go out and burn and murder and dynamite and bomb a tremendous plant and kill a thousand people. And no judge in any court can hold the union, or the officers of the union, in any way responsible. Individual members of unions can threaten employers and satisfied employees with every kind of dire calamity and even with death and thus cause their cowardly mandates to be obeyed, and not a judge in any court can stop them by injunction. Under the provisions of this bill you are going to see members of labor unions do some dastardly acts with impunity that will shock the public mind, just as much as the present heinous crime of the infamous kidnapers of the most beloved baby boy in America has done; yet it seems impossible to stop its passage in the present atmosphere of this Congress. I am going to do my duty by raising my voice against it. Just why are you passing this law that provides that not a single officer of that union or the union itself is responsible in law?

Mr. Chairman, I refuse to be interrupted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], and the gentleman can not put his remarks in my speech when I have not yielded to him. They can answer in their own three and one-half hours that they have reserved for themselves. [Laughter.]

I ask the people of the United States who read the RECORD to read the bill. I caused this bill to be printed in the RECORD. Every provision of it is in the RECORD. I want the public to read it, and they will see that this law especially prohibits any union or any union man being held responsible. I believe in holding men responsible for their acts.

Section 6 of the bill provides as follows:

SEC. 6. No officer or member of any association or organization participating or interested in a labor dispute shall be held responsible or liable in any court of the United States for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, or agents, except upon clear proof of actual participation in, or actual authorization of, such acts, or of ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof and the liability of any such association or organization for unlawful acts of its members shall be similarly limited.

Will our friends tell us just how it will be possible for the employers to prove in a court to the satisfaction of a jury—probably sympathizers—that the union had knowledge, when its instructions had been given in secret?

The following is what the Washington Herald says happened in Detroit yesterday:

SCORES CLUBBED AT GATES OF DEARBORN FACTORY—3,000 DESPERATE—FIRE HOSE FAILS TO CHECK MARCH OF JOBLESS

DETROIT, March 7.—The One hundred and twenty-fifth Michigan Infantry was mobilized to-night and held in readiness to proceed to Dearborn if further rioting at the Ford plant or any other industrial units in the Detroit area should break out.

DETROIT, March 7.—Four men were killed, half a dozen wounded, some perhaps fatally, and two score more suffered minor injuries from bullets and clubs late to-day in a riot led by a girl at the Ford Motor Co. plant in Dearborn.

Among those injured is Harry Bennett, head of the Ford secret-service division, who was struck in the head by a rock hurled by one of the 3,000 communists who went to the plant on a "hunger demonstration."

REACH PLANT GATES

Tear gas, guns, clubs, and water failed to check the mob that succeeded in getting to the very gate of the plant.

Three rioters were instantly killed, the fourth dying after being admitted to the Henry Ford Hospital.

Seven Dearborn police officers were injured, three of them receiving fractured skulls.

Police arrested Mary Gossman, with the blood of her dead sweetheart, Joseph York, still on her clothes. Defiantly, she said: "He died in my arms. Sure I was there and I'm not ashamed of what I did. Now leave me alone."

Police insisted she was the leader who twice urged the mob on to the attack. They said she was a known labor agitator with a record in several other industrial communities.

Dearborn authorities had refused permission to the council to stage a demonstration at the plant. Leaders of the crowd defied authorities.

Shouting, crying, and cursing, they charged. Policemen fired into the air and met the attackers with night clubs. By main force of numbers the police were hurled to the ground and trampled upon. Members of the mob seized the night clubs and beat the fallen officers.

Uninjured policemen in the first attack, fled and took refuge behind the motor company's high steel fence. Firemen continued to hold the bridge approach, waiting for police reinforcements.

CROWD DEFIANT

The mob was defiant and the fighting was not placed under control until heavy reinforcements arrived from Detroit.

Edsel Ford, son of Henry Ford, and Charles Sorensen, Ford general manager, hastened to Bennett's bedside.

That is what we have in the papers this morning. An attack upon Henry Ford. He is the last man on earth who should have been attacked. They speak about communists. When I first came here William Z. Foster had the hand of approval of the American Federation of Labor upon his head. William Z. Foster was put in charge of the great steel strike by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. I can not forget that the American Federation of Labor had affiliated with and been mighty close to Emma Goldman, Alexander Berkman, and the McNamara brothers, the great dynamiters, in times gone by. I have not forgotten that, and I have not forgotten that years ago at Atlantic City Mrs. Rena Mooney sat on the platform with Samuel Gompers and the rest of the American Federation of Labor in their annual convention, asking general help for her dynamiting husband in California. I take my hat off to California.

In spite of all the money spent, in spite of that $20,000 mayor of New York going out there and meddling in their business, they have had enough stamina to say that New York mayors have nothing to do with the laws of California and that they can attend to their own business. Yet, Henry Ford, a man who has done more for labor than anyone else, a man who fixed a minimum wage of $5 a day for all his employees, a man who even employs convicts and gives them another chance to make good when they come out of the penitentiary, a man who all through this depression has kept his organization together and his plant going, a man like that is attacked last night by 3,000 communists, who, as I mentioned, were once closely affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. It is said that William Z. Foster led them. In the first speeches I made on this floor years ago I told the American Federation of Labor that if they did not divorce themselves from such cattle as William Z. Foster, Emma Goldman, and Alexander Berkman they would ruin them. Thank God they took my advice.

They finally have divorced themselves from them. The American Federation of Labor is now against communism. Last night at Ford's plant you found communists attacking him. There were four men killed and there were a dozen seriously wounded; and there were 40 men and women, aside from that, who received minor injuries, and it took the threat of calling out the militia to stop it. Yet we are going to pass a bill here like the one that is before you to-day that will permit that very thing to transpire before a court can stop it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman get me the 30 minutes more, please, that I am entitled to? I am sorry, but I do not have time. My time is limited. [Laughter.]

I wonder if you proponents of this bill were with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] when he was making that gallant fight in Chicago for the people? Here is what happened in that one strike case for which the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has criticized him for stopping: One thousand five hundred cases of violent assault with intent to kill growing out of that one strike. Just think of it! There were 65 cases of kidnaping accompanied by brutal assaults. There were 8 cases of tar and feathers, 51 cases of dynamiting and bombing railroad bridges for the purpose of wrecking freight and passenger trains. There were 250 records of bombing of railroad property or homes of nonstriking employees. There were 50 cases of train wrecking or derailment. There were hundreds of flagrant practices of sabotage in the equipment of engines and cars with a story of pulling off more than a thousand mail trains on account of these mobs. All of the above figures are given to me by Mr. BECK as correct. Were you with the gentleman when he was trying to stop that? Was the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] with him?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Those acts never took place. There was not a man indicted under that.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes, they were, and they were convicted. I would rather take the word of our distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK], who was then Solicitor General of the United States, who investigated the cases and now gives me the figures as correct, than the dicta of the gentleman from New York. I can not yield to the gentleman. If the gentleman will get me a little more time, I will yield. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] told you what brought about the Adamson law, with the threat to tie up every railroad in the United States. Does my friend from New York, Mr. O'CONNOR, and my friend from New York, Mr. LAGUARDIA, know what would have happened to the 6,000,000 people of New York if that strike had been pulled off? They would have starved your people to death.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas five additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I know retribution comes to us who oppose organized labor. I have been punished for making such speeches more than any man in the United States ever will be punished, but that does not stop me from doing my duty.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will get me some more time, yes; otherwise not.

I remember that when Senator Cummins passed that "work or fight" amendment in the Senate, he did not come back. I came very near not coming back. They had four men running against me down in my district that year.

I can understand that we who oppose will be punished.

But Brother BECK did not tell you some other significant facts about what happened after that Adamson law was passed, when Mr. William G. McAdoo, whom I loved up to that time, was influenced by a similar threat when he was the Director General of Railroads of the Government during the war, when they came to him and said, "Mr. Director General, if you do not give us $764,000,000 out of the United States Treasury, and date it back six months, we will tie up every railroad in the United States." McAdoo did not have the guts to tell them where to go, and he took it out of the people's Treasury, $764,000,000, and handed it over to them, and I have been against him ever since.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] did not tell you about something else. He did not tell you about when McAdoo gave up that position and Director General Hines took it over. They came back with another threat, and they said, "If you do not hand over $67,000,000 more we will tie up all the railroads," and Director Hines handed that $67,000,000 of the people's money over to them.

How much longer are we going to stand for this hands-up, stand-and-deliver? I am against the highwayman who holds you up and says, "Stand and deliver." I am against the kidnaper who says, "Come across and deliver." I am against the union man who sits in the gallery and tells the Congress of the United States, "Stand and deliver." I am against my good friend from New York, JOHN O'CONNOR, of the Rules Committee, who, when I asked him for a fair division of time, said, "No; stand and deliver. We will not give it to you." I am against all that "stand-and-deliver" business. I am for the people of the United States. I am thinking about the 120,000,000 people of the United States.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will get me my other 25 minutes more that I am entitled to by the rules of debate, I will yield; otherwise I decline to yield. What are you all going to do with this question? Are Mr. BECK and myself the only two Members who are going to vote against this bill? If so, there is one thing we have left. We have our own self-respect. We have the approval of our consciences. We can go back home and say, "Boys, we did what we believed to be right, and if you do not like what we have done put us out," and we will take our medicine.

What kind of a juror would our friend from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] make in a case like this, a man who says he hates the Federal courts? What kind of a juror would Mr. DYER make in an injunction case? What kind of a juror would Mr. LAGUARDIA make? They would have the case decided before it was ever called. I do not want that kind of a juror in my case.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask the gentleman from Texas to give me five minutes more. I want to answer some of these questions.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I know John would bust if he did not ask me a question, so I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman has spoken about the lack of intestinal stamina of Mr. McAdoo. Is that the reason why the gentleman in his speech the other day put in a statement by Mr. McAdoo, indorsing the gentleman's candidate for the Presidency on the Democratic ticket?

Mr. BLANTON. If you could just get the mind of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] off antiprohibition for one-half minute, he might be of some good to the country. He can not think of anything else except the antiprohibition question. I am glad Mr. McAdoo is supporting a friend of mine.

I want to say this: Every single provision that has been proposed in Congress for 15 years which would better the condition of laborers and union men that was not detrimental to the interests of the whole people has had my hearty support. When I support a thing I do not sit still in my seat and not open my mouth. I get up on the floor and support it. When I am for a measure I am for it. But everything that they have brought in here that has been injurious to the whole people of the country I have opposed. That is my record, and I can meet them anywhere and shake hands with them and say, "God bless you, brother, I am for you when you are right, but I am against you when you are wrong." Is not that a proper stand? Is it not?

Why, gentlemen, this bill should be defeated, or, at least, you ought to put the amendment in it that I suggested to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that when the Government of the United States is the petitioner this law shall not apply. Are you not for the Government? Is the Government as big as these union men in the gallery or are they bigger than the Government?

My time has expired. I feel that my fight is futile. This bill will pass. We can not stop it. But I have put up the best fight within the short time allotted me that I know how to make. I feel that I have done my duty. I know that my colleagues who are supporting this measure are sincere, and that they feel that they are doing their duty. And when we all do our duty, as we see it, that is all that we can do here in this House.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN].

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, there has been a lot said here about unfair division of time. If I am any judge of argument and reasoning, there has been too much time already divided in this matter.

It is agreed that this bill is being passed at the bidding of the great brotherhoods of this country. It is argued that it is a crime for the brotherhood to come here and have men up in the gallery as if they are trying to coerce somebody. Why, were any of you gentlemen in Congress when the manufacturers of this country came down here to get a tariff? If you were, you recall you could not even get within reach of the Ways and Means Committee room, and nobody then talked about there being anything wrong about that.

Of course, these men are interested. They are interested in a matter that reaches down to their very existence, and I want to take time enough now to say that, to-day, if it were not for the American Federation of Labor, we would be running all over this country right now trying to run down all the bolsheviks we would have in this country, and we would have so many we would not know how to catch them all. This would be true if it were not for the American Federation and its determination not to affiliate with bolshevism but to stand up for the rights of men.

Now, what does this bill do? There is nothing wrong with this bill. The manufacturers of this country are under a misapprehension as to what this bill does. This bill does nothing more or less than put into actual effect what the Congress did years ago when they passed the Clayton Act; that is to say, by a certain construction of the Supreme Court and other Federal courts they took out of that act the many safeguards that Congress had put in there, just as the Supreme Court of the United States wrote the word "reasonable" in the antitrust laws of this country, and you have seen the effect of that.

This bill is the result of the labor injunctions that judges have issued that we have had in effect; and I am here to tell you to-day, my friends, the time is not far distant when this House will be called upon to pass some similar measure to make effective the eleventh amendment to the Constitution, because the courts of this country are every day, by construction, destroying the purpose of the eleventh amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Why? Because the Federal court judges are issuing injunctions without regard to the eleventh amendment to the Constitution, which provides that no citizen may sue a State except in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Every day they issue injunctions against the tax commission or against the highway commission, and various other kinds of injunctions that are in violation of the spirit of the eleventh amendment. Down here in South Carolina the other day a Federal judge took away from the bank commissioner of the State of South Carolina the closing up of a State bank that had failed and put it in the hands of a Federal court receiver.

Every day we are having this situation, and this bill is here to rectify and make right such misconstruction of the laws of Congress.

The great question has always been raised by constitutional lawyers who say that the Congress has no right to interfere with the Federal courts, because the right to issue an injunction is an inherent right granted by the Constitution of this country. Why, no such thing is the case. There is only one constitutional court, and that is the Supreme Court of the United States. Every other court in this country is created by Congress and lives by reason of Congress, and the jurisdiction of the Federal courts can be fixed and must be fixed by the Congress.

What is there to this talk about invading the right to issue injunctions? We simply say we are carrying you back to the original law. Why, way back in 1796, when we wrote the first judicial act, we said that no injunction could be rendered without notice. They soon got that out of the way, and now they will issue injunctions without notice, and yet the Supreme Court of the United States in its equity rules, rules promulgated by Judge Taft, provides that notice must be given.

They say that five days is not long enough—five days to have an injunction issued against you without any hearing. Do you not think five days is long enough to go into a court room and see the judge and hand him a paper and some affidavits and have him issue an injunction against you? Do you not think five days is long enough to allow such an injunction to run?

Let me tell you something about judges. Judges are human. Unfortunately for my people, I have served on the bench [laughter], and I want to say to you that the character of a judge does not change because he is put on the bench and wears the ermine.

If he is prejudiced against certain things before he goes to the bench, he will take that prejudice with him. He is nothing but human. The courts should revere the laws of the country.

There is nothing wrong about this bill. Some manufacturers are insisting that there is, but they do not understand what the bill is. This is to make the same law we have had for years effective.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield.

Mr. GARBER. Isn't it a fact that this will correct the abuses of the equity power of the Federal courts?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. And only introduces one controversial proposition that has been approved by the decisions of the Supreme Court?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; it stops abuses and outrages that have been prevalent. I say that whatever you think of the labor organizations that is not here nor there. This is a proposition as to whether you believe that the Federal judges of this country should issue restraining orders in labor disputes promiscuously.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. McKEOWN. There is nothing wrong about the bill. We want to stop the abuses, we want to stop the abuse of going into a judge's room, putting an affidavit down on the desk, and let him issue an injunction on that.

You can not make an association of men responsible for everything that any one member of the association has done in violation of law. He can not enjoin a violation of law, for if you did, you would not have any crime. You could enjoin murder and kidnaping. But here is the proposition. We do not take away any real relief, but you must have some substance on which to base your injunction. You can not issue restraining order without any facts or something upon which you can base it, and then you can only run it for five days.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SPARKS].

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, the anti-injunction bill, recently passed by the Senate, and the one now under consideration in this body are the outgrowth of years of agitation in Congress for the curbing of employers' rights to deprive by contract the laboring man from exercising such rights as are necessary for him to deal on an equality with his employer.

The laboring man, who has been out of work and has a wife and several small children to support, falls an easy prey to the merciless employer who demands that before he secures employment he must agree not to become a member of a labor union or aid such a union. It was held in the case of the American Steel Foundries v. Tri-City Central Trades Council (257 U. S. 184) in an opinion by the late Mr. Chief Justice Taft that—

> Labor unions are recognized by the Clayton Act as legal when instituted for mutual help and lawfully carrying out their legitimate objects. They have long been thus recognized by the courts. They were organized out of the necessities of the situation. A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer. He was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and family. If the employer refused to pay him the wages that he thought fair, he was nevertheless unable to leave the employ and to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment. Union was essential to give laborers an opportunity to deal on equality with their employer. They united to exert influence upon him and to leave him in a body, in order, by this inconvenience, to induce him to make better terms with them. They were withholding their labor of economic value to make him pay what they thought it was worth. The right to combine for such a lawful purpose has, in many years, not been denied by any court.

The right which the court said was so essential—that is, to give a laborer an opportunity to deal on an equality with his employer—is taken away from him by contract, and the Federal courts have been sanctioning such contracts. Denying a workman the right to belong to a union in no way affects the ability of the workman to do that for which he is employed, but deals primarily with the laborer's rights to combine with others for the purpose of protecting himself against the arbitrary and unjust contract obligations of unscrupulous employers. Why should the employers be permitted to organize for their mutual benefits, but the laboring man be denied that privilege? The laboring man, because of his situation financially, and with dependents to support, is generally unable, single-handed, to cope with employers as to the substance of the contract between them and is compelled to agree to provisions in contracts which take from him that right which is so necessary to place him upon a basis where he may exact fair and reasonable treatment for himself. Why should the employer be given legal sanction to demand by contract those things which do not in any way affect the ability of the laborer to perform his work, but which seek to shackle and enslave him in his right to demand fair and honest terms of employment? Under present conditions, when the employer deals with individuals, he may exact terms which are unreasonable and unfair to the employee; but if the employer must meet the laborers in collective strength, generally, he is required to contract fairly and with due regard for the rights of laborers to earn their living by honest toil.

Is it unreasonable to write into our Federal laws that it is the public policy of the United States that no man shall be compelled to bargain away one of the greatest privileges that any citizen can enjoy—the right to protect himself in securing fair and honest dealings in competition with capital? Is it unreasonable to deny to the Federal courts the right to sanction contracts which go far beyond the scope of the necessary provisions for the work to be done and the compensation to be paid, and which seek the enslavement of the laborer by rendering him helpless to protect his own interests?

The constantly increasing combinations of wealth have concurrently built up court-made law which has placed the laborer at the mercy of capital, has denied to him a fair wage and a fair opportunity for freedom of contract. Shall combinations of wealth enslave the workingmen, or shall Congress give the laboring men the right to use their collective strength against the combination of wealth?

Congress should write into the law of the land that unjust discriminations against labor by capital shall not continue to exist; that contracts depriving the individual of the right to properly protect his own interests with fair and honest dealings shall not continue to receive legal sanction; that capital shall not crush labor with a despotic hand under the protecting arm of the law; but labor shall be placed on an equality with capital by permission to organize for mutual protection, the great weapon available to labor to secure fair and honest dealings, and when the laborer is thus clothed he may stand on an equality with his employer before the law. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

Mr. YATES. Ladies and gentlemen of the committee, in five minutes—and, for that matter, four minutes, except in war time, when we only had four minutes—it is utterly impossible for anybody to discuss all the questions involved in this bill, and I shall not attempt to do so.

Down at the bottom of our hearts, notwithstanding what may be said about us, we are trying hard to get behind the background to ascertain whether we can vote for this bill. Side issues have taken a good deal of time, and I do not criticize anyone.

If this bill has imperfections, let it be said so have all other laws. But if, despite this defect, the bill contains more merits than imperfections, it ought to pass.

Take, for example, the statement that officers of the American Federation of Labor are in the gallery. I hope they are. I am not ashamed to say that thousands of them are my friends, and I hope that I am theirs. I sympathize with the remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. NELSON], who said that organized labor in America was the chief bulwark against the potentialities of sovietism and anarchy. I think it is true. Only God knows the great debt this Nation owes to organized labor in America.

I think that is about all I want to say. I am for this bill and I would like to have my friends here and at home know that I am for it. I have the honor to be one of two Congressmen at large in Illinois. I have 7,000,000 constituents, three and a half million in Chicago and three and a half million out of Chicago, so that I can not be accused of being partial one way or the other. I believe they will sustain us if we pass this bill and vote down amendments to the contrary. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] beyond peradventure of doubt, misstates the fact when he ties up the American Federation of Labor with communism. He knows deep in his heart that the American Federation of Labor has been the greatest enemy to communism. I draw the veil of charity around the gentleman from Texas and do not charge him with a deliberate misstatement, although I say he comes close to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I did not claim that——

Mr. CELLER. I refuse to yield to the gentleman. He has indeed handled the truth rather carelessly to-day. Very likely he also comes pretty close to a deliberate misstatement of the record when he says that no injunction has ever issued which compelled men to work. That statement also is a vainglorious attempt to defeat this bill. I would remind him to the contrary and that in the Bedford Cut Stone case, reported in Two hundred and seventy-fourth United States Reports, page 37, the Supreme Court ordered an injunction against the Journeymen Stone Cutters' Association to restrain simple refusal to work upon stone which had been partly cut at quarries by men working in opposition to the association. That is tantamount, that is equivalent to compulsion to work, and it is because injunctions such as that issued in the Bedford Cut Stone case that we are compelled to bring forth this bill from the Committee on the Judiciary for your approval this afternoon. The injustice of that injunction prompted one of the judges, Mr. Justice Brandeis, writing a minority opinion, to say:

If on the undisputed facts of this case refusal to work can be enjoined, Congress created by the Sherman Law and the Clayton Act an instrument for imposing restraint upon labor which reminds one of involuntary servitude.

It is from just such "involuntary servitude" that the present bill will rescue labor.

In that same Bedford Cut Stone case Mr. Justice Brandeis, continuing in his minority opinion, said:

The Sherman law was held in United States v. United States Steel Corporation (251 U. S. 417) to permit capitalists to combine in a single corporation 50 per cent of the steel industry of the United States dominating the trade through its vast resources. The Sherman law was held in United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co. (247 U. S. 32), to permit capitalists to combine in another corporation practically the whole shoe machinery industry of the country, necessarily giving it a position of dominance over shoe manufacturing in America. It would indeed be strange if Congress had by the same act willed to deny to members of a small craft of workingmen the right to cooperate in simply refraining from work, when that course was the only means of self-protection against a combination of militant and powerful employers. I can not believe that Congress did so.

Yet the majority views held Congress did do so.

When in 1914 we passed the Clayton Act we viewed it as a red-letter day for labor, for we supposed it to be a new bill of rights, giving labor the protection for which it had yearned and fought during the preceding 20 years.

The American Federation of Labor had repeatedly attempted to withdraw labor unions from the scope of Federal antitrust legislation, but to no avail. Although the early decisions of the Federal courts were to the effect that the Sherman law embraced combinations of labor as well as of capital, an effort was begun in Congress to express a contrary intent. At this point, it is interesting to note, that on March 25, 1890, Senator Sherman proposed a proviso excluding labor and farm organizations from the terms of the act. Although this proviso was agreed to in the Committee of the Whole, it was omitted when the bill was again reported out of the committee to the floor of the Senate. And the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD does not disclose whether the proviso was omitted because of opposition to it, or because of the belief that the act itself so clearly excluded labor that the proviso was unnecessary. In any event, the speeches of Senator Hoar, Twenty-first CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 2729; of Senator Stewart, ibidem, page 2606; and of Senator Teller, ibidem, page 2562, seem to imply that the proviso was unnecessary, and that labor unions were not to be deemed as combinations in restraint of trade.

It was feared, however, that the statute would not be so interpreted in favor of labor unions, and various attempts were therefore made to so modify it as to indicate without question what the congressional intent was in the matter. Friends of the reform saw their opportunity to restrict appropriations for enforcement of the antitrust laws, by writing into the sundry appropriations bills a proviso against using any funds for the prosecutions of labor organizations.

These efforts, however, were but abortive and premature. The proviso passed the House but was defeated in the Senate. At a later period it passed both Houses, only to be vetoed by President Taft. Again, in 1913, it passed both Houses, and this time met the approval of the President, Woodrow Wilson, and was signed. Thereafter, similar appropriation bills, signed by President Harding and President Coolidge, contained such a prohibition against the use of any money by the Department of Justice for the prosecution or the restriction of the activities of labor organizations. Of course, such restriction did not help labor outside the sphere of governmental activities. It was doing by indirection what should have been done by direct legislation.

In 1912 the Democratic Party pledged itself to the withdrawal and exclusion of labor and farm organizations from the provisions of the Sherman law. The subsequent election of Woodrow Wilson made action in that regard inevitable, since relief for labor was an integral part of Wilson's gospel of "the new freedom." Later, Samuel Gompers, personally and with rare ability, led the forces and the struggle which culminated in the passage of the famous Clayton Act, which was signed by President Wilson and became law on October 14, 1914. The keynote of this act is contained in its declaration of policy:

The labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce.

At last Congress recognized the difference between the power and the right of man to produce, and the article or thing which he produces. The exact text of section 6 of the Clayton Act is as follows:

That the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce. Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations instituted for the purpose of mutual help and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade under the antitrust laws.

Of the declaration of policy, mentioned supra, Mr. Gompers said:

This declaration removes all possibility of interpreting trust legislation to apply to organizations of the workers and their legitimate associated activities.

But the roseate hopes held out by Gompers and the proponents of this legislation were soon dashed to pieces, for it was soon discernible, particularly by court interpretation, that the Clayton Act did not bring about the immunization of labor organizations from prosecution or suit under the antitrust laws. The courts so twisted what they deemed the "intent of the legislature," that it was soon apparent that the Clayton Act's purported labor protection was but pure fiction. Labor's so-called bill of rights became a mere shambles.

Not much time elapsed before a very famous case arose, Duplex Co. v. Deering (254 U. S. 443), to deal a telling blow to labor. In that case the majority of the court concluded that—

There is nothing in the section (6 of the Clayton Act) to exempt such an organization or its members from accountability where it or they depart from its normal and legitimate objects and engage in an actual combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade.

In this majority opinion Justice Pitney further said:

As to section (6), it seems to us its principal importance in this discussion is for what it does not authorize, and for the limit it sets to the immunity conferred. The section assumes the normal objects of a labor organization to be legitimate, and declares that nothing in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of such organizations or to forbid their members from lawfully carrying out their legitimate objects; and that such an organization shall not be held in itself—merely because of its existence and operation—to be an illegal combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade.

Many other such decisions followed, and each with its telling effect landed death-dealing blows to the cause of labor.

Finally it became illegal to persuade an employee to join a union where such a worker was under a contract with his employer not to do so. This is the so-called "yellow-dog" contract doctrine, which has done much to strike terror into the heart of labor.

It was supposed that labor had the right of collective bargaining, but the placing of a halo around the "yellow-dog" contracts by the courts utterly destroyed the efficacy of the right of "collective bargaining." These "yellow-dog" contracts were justified on the score that nonunion men or scabs should be permitted "freedom of contract."

Personally I can see no truth in that assertion. For certainly the man out of a job, without food or shelter for himself or his family, has no "freedom of contract" when dealing with the employer. The odds are all on one side, with the workman having no choice at all in the matter. If he must accept the company union or "yellow-dog" contract, he is being forced into "involuntary servitude." The courts reasoned that the employer and the employee are on an equality and that no legislation should be permitted to disturb this relationship. What a farce! Equality!

However, enlightened judges, like Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, rebelled against such judicial interpretation. But they pleaded in vain, and theirs were as voices in the wilderness. (See Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. at 27.)

Then came the famous Hitchman Coal Co. v. Mitchell case (245 U. S. 299), which impressed the "yellow-dog" contract on labor with a vengeance. Quoting from the book, The Labor Injunction, we find Prof. Felix Frankfurter writing (p. 148 et seq.) thus:

In the Hitchman case, it will be recalled, the Supreme Court gave equitable protection to these agreements by enjoining employees who had subscribed to them, even when employed merely from day to day and not for a definite term. This decision brought realization to employers that "yellow-dog" contracts had more than psychologic potency. The use of these arrangements and their variants in the form of company unions has spread widely and rapidly. The system, which is referred to as the "American plan," covers nearly all the unorganized coal fields in Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and elsewhere. Recent hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee furnish ample testimony that it is to-day one of the most active forces in large-scale industry.

Such a challenge to organized labor was bound to arouse appeal for legislative help. The first and, thus far, the only statutes do not directly outlaw "yellow-dog" contracts, but deny equitable relief in all cases involving the violation of a contract of employment * * * where no irreparable damage is about to be committed upon the property or property rights. In 1925, a bill sponsored by the Ohio State Federation of Labor, which provided that such contracts are against public policy and void, did not get beyond the lower house; within the next two years similar bills presented in California, Illinois, and Massachusetts failed of passage. In the 1928 session of the New York Legislature such a bill was pressed by the New York State Federation of Labor, but died in committee. We may be sure that this is only the beginning of the agitation. Effective recession in the present trend of prosperity is likely to invigorate the demand for legislation.

Following the Hitchman case, there came in rapid succession a score of cases in which equitable injunctions were issued; and it was found that the Clayton Act was utterly without power to stop this rising tide of restraining orders against labor. Such results were brought about, by holding the statute inapplicable when the strike was to unionize a factory, the courts saying that this purpose was for one other than the immediate betterment of working conditions of the laboring man. And when he refused to work upon nonunion products, it was deemed a strike for "a whim," and he was not protected by the Clayton Act.

Again, the act could not be successfully invoked when once the employer had refilled vacancies, because, it was held, there was no longer a relationship existing of employer and employee between the owner of the plant and the striker. A worker who picketed was no longer an employee to come under the protection of the Clayton Act. (See Dail-Overland Co. v. Willys-Overland, 263 Fed. 192.)

In fact, throughout the land, even peaceful picketing by strikers became anathema to Federal judges. They seemed obsessed with the idea that there could be no peaceful persuasion through the practice of picketing. (See Pound, Common Law and Legislation, 21 Harv. L. Rev. 383; see also American Steel Foundries v. Tri-City Central Trades Council, 257 U. S. 184.)

In the latter case Chief Justice Taft made a most effective, forceful, and penetrating analysis of the social justification of trade-unions. He said:

Labor unions are recognized by the Clayton Act as legal when instituted for mutual help and lawfully carrying out their legitimate objects. They have long been thus recognized by the courts. They were organized out of the necessities of the situation. A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer. He was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and family. If the employer refused to pay him the wages that he thought fair, he was nevertheless unable to leave the employ and to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment. Union was essential to give laborers opportunity to deal on equality with their employer. They united to exert influence upon him and to leave him in a body in order by this inconvenience to induce him to make better terms with them. They were withholding their labor of economic value to make him pay what they thought it was worth. The right to combine for such a lawful purpose has in many years not been denied by any court. The strike became a lawful instrument in the lawful economic struggle or competition between employer and employees as to the share or division between them of the joint product of labor and capital. To render this combination at all effective, employees must make their combination extend beyond one shop. It is helpful to have as many as may be in the same trade in the same community united, because in the competition between employers they are bound to be affected by the standard of wages of their trade in the neighborhood.

I know of no greater justification for the passage of the instant bill than this opinion by the late Chief Justice Taft.

Further, because of the laxity of Federal judges, all manner of abuses crept in the issuing of injunctions. One of the most obnoxious of these was the granting of an injunction at simply an ex parte hearing. On July 28, 1908, in his address accepting the nomination for President, Mr. Taft drew attention to the evils of ex parte injunctions:

In the case of a lawful strike, the sending of a formidable document restraining a number of defendants from doing a great many different things which the plaintiff avers they are threatening to do, often so discourages men always reluctant to go into a strike from continuing what is their lawful right. This has made the laboring man feel that an injustice is done in the issuing of a writ without notice. I conceive that in the treatment of this question it is the duty of the citizen and the legislator to view the subject from the standpoint of the man who believes himself to be unjustly treated, as well as from that of the community at large. I have suggested the remedy of returning in such cases to the original practice under the old statute of the United States and the rules in equity adopted by the Supreme Court, which did not permit the issuing of an injunction without notice.

The bill before you this afternoon precludes the issuing of an injunction without a hearing and the taking of testimony. It destroys forever the issuance of an injunction after an ex parte hearing. Both sides must be heard.

It is interesting to note that in New York, Governor Smith twice recommended that preliminary hearings be had prior to the issuance of injunctions by the New York State judges.

The instant bill further provides that a temporary injunction may endure for only five days. Examination of Federal injunctions indicates the serious abuse in the present state of the law by permitting a temporary injunction to remain alive for 10 days, to be renewed after "good cause shown." This has resulted in the keeping alive of restraining orders for weeks and months.

Time is the essence of the strike. Keeping the injunction alive by dilatory tactics blunts the edge of the only effective instrument that labor possesses, namely, the strike.

The bill now before us makes it well-nigh impossible to secure a restraining order except under the well-defined and limited conditions set out in sections 7 and 8.

SEC. 7. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, as herein defined, except after hearing the testimony of witnesses in open court (with opportunity for cross-examination) in support of the allegations of a complaint made under oath, and testimony in opposition thereto, if offered, and except after findings of fact by the court, to the effect—

(a) That unlawful acts have been threatened or committed and will be continued unless restrained but no injunction or temporary restraining order shall be issued on account of any threat or unlawful act except against the person or persons, association, or organization making the threat or committing the unlawful act or who actually authorized it or ratified it after actual knowledge thereof;

(b) That substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow;

(c) That as to each item of relief granted greater injury will be inflicted upon complainant by the denial of relief than will be inflicted upon defendants by the granting of relief;

(d) That complainant has no adequate remedy at law; and

(e) That the public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property are unable or unwilling to furnish adequate protection.

Such hearing shall be held after due and personal notice thereof has been given, in such manner as the court shall direct, to all known persons against whom relief is sought, and also to those public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property: Provided, however, That if a complaint shall also allege that, unless a temporary restraining order shall be issued without notice, a substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will be unavoidable, such a temporary restraining order may be issued upon testimony under oath, sufficient, if sustained, to justify the court in issuing a temporary injunction upon a hearing after notice. Such a temporary restraining order shall be effective for no longer than five days and shall become void at the expiration of said five days. No temporary restraining order or temporary injunction shall be issued except on condition that complainant shall first file an undertaking with adequate security in an amount to be fixed by the court sufficient to recompense those enjoined for any loss, expense, or damage caused by the improvident or erroneous issuance of such order or injunction, including all reasonable costs (together with a reasonable attorney's fee) and expense of defense against the order or against the granting of any injunctive relief sought in the same proceeding and subsequently denied by the court.

The undertaking herein mentioned shall be understood to signify an agreement entered into by the complainant and the surety upon which a decree may be rendered in the same suit or proceeding against said complainant and surety upon a hearing to assessed damages of which hearing complainant and surety shall have reasonable notice, the said complainant and surety submitting themselves to the jurisdiction of the court for that purpose. But nothing herein contained shall deprive any party having a claim or cause of action under or upon such undertaking from electing to pursue his ordinary remedy by suit at law or in equity.

SEC. 8. No restraining order or injunctive relief shall be granted to any complainant who shall have failed to comply with any obligation imposed by law which is involved in the labor dispute in question, or who has failed to make every reasonable effort to settle such dispute either by negotiation or with the aid of any available governmental machinery of mediation or voluntary arbitration.

I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, eminent Republican, and I would say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], eminent Democrat, that both party platforms admonish Republicans and Democrats alike to stand by and pass this bill. I read what the Kansas City Republican platform says.

The party favors freedom in wage contracts, the right of collective bargaining by free and responsible agents of their own choosing, which develops and maintains that purposeful cooperation which gains its chief incentive through voluntary agreement. We believe that injunctions in labor disputes have in some instances been abused and have given rise to a serious question for legislation.

This bill is the legislation in answer to the pledges in the Republican platform. What does the Houston Democratic platform say?

It states:

(a) We favor the principle of collective bargaining and the Democratic principle that organized labor should choose its own representatives without coercion or interference.

(b) Labor is not a commodity. Human rights must be safeguarded. Labor should be exempt from the operation of antitrust laws.

(c) We recognize that legislative and other investigations have shown the existence of grave abuse in the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes. No injunctions should be granted in labor disputes except upon proof of threatened irreparable injury and after notice and hearing, and the injunction should be confined to those acts which do directly threaten irreparable injury. The expressed purpose of representatives of capital, labor, and the bar to devise a plan for the elimination of the present evils with respect to injunctions must be supported and legislation designed to accomplish these ends formulated and passed.

This bill is the legislation in answer to the pledges in the Democratic platform.

We do no more, we do no less than exempt labor from the operations of the antitrust laws when we pass this bill now before you. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] had occasion to say something about his trip to England. He spoke of what they do over there. Let me remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania what they do in England with reference to injunctions in labor disputes.

It is well for us to take a leaf out of their book on labor injunctions. I read in this connection from Mr. Justice Brandeis, United States Reports, volume 257, at page 368, in the case of Truax v. Corrigan:

In England observance of the rules of a contest has been enforced by the court almost altogether through the criminal law or through actions at law for compensation. An injunction was granted in a labor dispute as early as 1868, but in England today resort to the injunction is not frequent, for the injunction has played no appreciable part in the conflict between capital and labor.

All we do by the passage of this bill is to follow the English practice and relegate the disputants to the criminal side of the law and to actions for damages. Only in rare cases do we allow injunctions in this bill.

If acts of fraud and violence are committed, if criminal statutes are violated, if municipal ordinances are infracted, if the peace authorities can not cope with the situation, then an injunction may issue, otherwise go to the criminal court and get your redress there.

I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] read more of English jurisprudence whence comes our American common law, and then the gentleman would come to the inescapable conclusion that we must limit to the hilt the power of Federal judges issuing injunctions in labor disputes.

I heard with interest the remarks of this same gentleman from Pennsylvania, who, with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], is probably the only opponent of this legislation that we know of thus far (and I venture the assertion there will not be more than 20 votes against the bill) when he said the bill is a far cry from Philadelphia, the cradle of liberty, where the Declaration of Independence was written and the Constitution was written; and that we were on the way to Moscow in passing this bill. I wonder what the fathers would say—Jefferson and Madison and Henry and Adams—if they could come to life to-day and could review the history of labor injunctions in this country, and there was shown to them all the grievances and wrongs of labor? I am sure they would vote for this bill. They would vote, indeed, against such an injunction as was issued in the shopcraft case.

That injunction was issued by Judge Wilkerson at the behest of Attorney General Daugherty, through whose influence Judge Wilkerson had just been appointed. The Attorney General placed it under the judge's nose and said, "Sign on the dotted line," and sign on the dotted line he did. This injunction was so all-embracing as to preclude peaceful assemblage, free speech, freedom of the press, the right to petition against a grievance, as well as a prohibition against payment of dues to a union. That injunction verily destroyed the bill of rights contained in our Constitution—the instrument that was drafted in historic Philadelphia. Certainly our fathers who wrote the Constitution, and particularly Jefferson, who wrote the bill of rights, would have ranted and railed against such an injunction, against such an iniquitous denial of fundamental rights. They would say, "It is high time to rescue labor. This bill is labor's bill of rights. Let it pass."

I recall to mind the comparatively recent injunctions granted by the Pennsylvania judges, from the State of the gentleman [Mr. BECK], in connection with the coal strike, wherein members of the union and their wives and children were actually enjoined from praying at the roadside, from singing psalms in churches or groups. Such injunctions are brutal and usually demoralize the union side of the controversy. I have read injunctions so fantastic, so arbitrary, that they were practically but one step from a threat of jail to a striker if he coughed, spat, or chewed. Some injunctions read very much like orders of an army of occupation bent upon vicious revenge. Many injunctions are not used to protect property from irreparable loss, but issued to disorganize unions and to terrorize and intimidate those on strike.

They, and with them "yellow-dog" contracts, shall be as extinct as the dodo, as far as Federal courts are concerned.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CONDON].

Mr. CONDON. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allotted to me I shall not undertake to discuss any of the sections of the bill. I merely take advantage of this opportunity to express my unqualified approval of the legislation.

As I listened to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, who often entertains and instructs this House with his eloquent addresses, I thought as he stood here he repeated, almost, though not in the same words, the very same ideas and thoughts that were in the minds of the special pleaders who appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary in opposition to this legislation. If you could have been present at the hearings before the committee you would not have seen any difference in the argument and in the attitude of the gentleman from Pennsylvania from that of those who were hired to come before the committee and attempt to defeat this legislation.

I accord to each and every Member of this House the right to differ with me upon any legislation, and I ascribe to him only the sincerest motives, but I recall at the outset of this Congress the gentleman from Pennsylvania took occasion to characterize the revolution of 1848 as one of the catastrophes in the history of civilization. Any man who can characterize the Revolution of 1848, that destroyed autocracy in Europe, that brought liberalism to all of the nations of western Europe—any man who can characterize that revolution as a catastrophe in human civilization is not the kind of man that any modern-minded Congressman can follow in this year of 1932. [Applause.]

What does this legislation do? It has been recommended to you by others who have had more time at their disposal than I have. It does three things. First of all, it declares the policy of the Government to the extent that Federal courts shall not grant injunctions without adequate time for the defendants to be heard. It abolishes or makes unenforceable in equity the infamous "yellow-dog" contract, that contract that has come to be known as the infamous badge of serfdom in the industrial life of America, and that is unknown in any other country in the world of which I have any knowledge. Lastly, it declares that when any criminal contempts are charged as having been committed against a court, out of the presence of the court or not so near thereto as to impede the administration of justice, those contempts shall be tried in the historic American way; tried by a jury of 12 peers of the accused in a court of the United States.

Is there any man or woman upon this floor who can not afford to subscribe to that doctrine? Is there any man or woman upon the floor of this House who is willing to say that the "yellow-dog" contract ought to be legal? Is there any man or woman upon the floor of this House who is willing to sanction injunctions that have come down from that famous judge in Chicago, Judge Wilkerson? If there are, then, of course, they will vote in opposition to this bill, and if the Members of the House are opposed to these things they will vote for the passage of this legislation, and it does not make any difference, in my judgment, that members of the great patriotic organization of the American Federation of Labor are seated in the gallery. It does not make any difference that they are here. I take it that each and every Member of this House will think only of his sacred oath of office and vote upon this legislation as in his clear conscience he believes he ought to vote, without any fear of compulsion, direct or indirect, from anyone outside this body. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have even this brief time in which to raise my voice in behalf of this proposed legislation. The strange thing to me is that Congress should have delayed so long to enact this legislation.

I want to felicitate organized labor and to congratulate the country upon this legislation soon to be enacted by this Congress. Our organized fighting army for economic freedom is organized labor. That army is fighting for the freedom of the great unorganized masses of the people.

Something has been said here that the public has an interest in this legislation; in the control, through court injunction, of the conduct of organized labor. I agree with that statement, but I want to say that that public interest is in seeing that the shackles are stricken from the hands of labor, in order that the great masses of the people may enjoy the benefits that will come to them as a result of the fight that labor is making for its own release from wage slavery.

It has been the policy of the employers of labor at all times to seek to prevent the organization of those who labor for wages in order that they might deal with that class of people as individuals and to destroy the collective bargaining power of the workers. It is the same policy that has been pursued as to the agricultural producers of the country. We find hostility toward the agricultural marketing act, which seeks to place in the hands of the farmers the collective bargaining power just as organized labor through its power has assumed that privilege. [Applause.]

I am for this bill because it enables employees, through collective bargaining, to deal at arm's length with employers in negotiating the terms and conditions of labor, freed from the exercise of autocratic and tyrannical injunctive powers of courts. This bill is a restatement of the Declaration of Independence and a reaffirmance of the bill of rights in behalf of the wage earners of this country. It, in effect, repeals a judge-made rule as to public policy relating to labor contracts and labor disputes between employer and employee and declares what that public policy is and shall be in future controversies involving terms and conditions of labor.

It is universally conceded that labor has the right of collective bargaining, but the exercise of that right has been denied through the enforcement by court injunctions of unconscionable contracts exacted by employers from employees. This bill makes the right of collective bargaining effective by depriving the courts of that injunctive power.

This legislation goes to the very heart of social economics and the social welfare. It concerns the great unorganized mass of the people as vitally as it concerns organized labor. It is in the interest of the whole people, whose battles labor has been fighting all these years, as well as its own. It is a long and permanent step in the progress of freedom from wage slavery. We owe to organized labor a debt of enduring gratitude for its untiring efforts in crystallizing sentiment for this legislation. Without the purposes, the hopes, and the power of that organization this bill would never have reached Congress. Chattel slavery was long ago destroyed in this country. The present bill will go a long way toward destroying economic slavery.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING].

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, admittedly there have been a good many cases of abuse of the injunction by judges throughout the country. That is why this bill is here to-day. This bill will not prohibit the use of injunctions in labor disputes, but it does undertake—and I believe it will succeed to a very considerable extent—to prohibit the abuse of injunctions in these disputes.

The history of labor troubles reveals that time and again Federal judges have laid aside their impartial judicial attitude and have become partisans against labor. The injunction, which was intended as a shield to protect rights, has been forged into a sword for use in attack.

The fact that this bill was reported unanimously by the great Judiciary Committee indicates not merely a change in sentiment on the floor of this House toward organized labor but it reveals a change of public sentiment throughout the United States, which demands that these past abuses shall cease.

Credit should be given to organized labor for helping to bring about this change in public sentiment. Great credit should be given to them for their patriotic action and for their unrelenting opposition to such un-American ideals as have been advanced by bolsheviks and communists. Organized labor is in the front trenches fighting these battles for the rest of the American people. It is now fighting for the defense of American institutions and American liberty. The American people, in turn, are coming to the aid of organized labor in its fight against injustice.

Some of those who are opposed to this bill insist that the injunction must be maintained as at present in order to protect the liberty of contract. "O liberty! how many crimes are committeed in thy name!" Liberty of contract, when a man has only the choice between signing the contract of employment offered him or facing starvation. There is no liberty of contract when a man is compelled to act under the compulsion of economic necessity.

Referring to the practices in the past, it was Burke who said, "you can not indict a whole people," and yet some Federal judges have undertaken the practice of enjoining a whole people. They have issued blind injunctions, without notice and without hearings. They have issued blanket injunctions against people unnamed and unknown throughout the entire country, enjoining everybody under penalty of punishment for contempt of court from doing certain specified things. In the future that can not take place.

After reading this bill I can not find in it any declaration to which any fair-minded man can not agree. As has been said, this is a most important piece of legislation; its passage will be hailed as a new birth of freedom, a new Magna Charta in behalf of mankind. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GARBER].

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein quotations from leading statesmen of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this bill simply corrects the abuses of the administration of the equity powers of the Federal courts. With but one exception this bill does not legislate a single proposition which has not been approved by the Supreme Court of the United States. Get that. There has been only one criticism of this bill that goes to its constitutionality. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] selects sections 3 and 4 of the bill as being unconstitutional.

Now may I request you for just a moment to consider section 4 of this bill. It prohibits Federal courts from issuing an injunction in nine specified instances, enumerated as a, b, c, d, e, and f, and so forth.

Now examine those instances wherein the Federal court is prohibited from issuing an injunction. Why not analyze this bill according to its terms?

Paragraph (a) prohibits the court from enjoining an employee from refusing to work or continuing in employment. Is there any innovation about that? It is a proposition that has been recognized by all the courts of the country as a natural vested right of the employee, namely, to cease work whenever he chooses to do so.

Paragraph (c) shall not prohibit anyone from paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person participating or interested in such labor dispute any strike or unemployment benefits or insurance or other moneys or things of value. Is there any question about the legality of that provision? Is it any invasion or infraction of equity for you to aid and assist one who is on a strike or engaged in a labor dispute in a peaceful and lawful way?

Now, mind you, every one of these paragraphs has been approved by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Take subsection (d)—

By all lawful means aiding any person participating in or interested in any labor dispute who is being proceeded against in, or is prosecuting, any action or suit in any court of the United States or of any State.

Is there anything wrong about this? Has not the employee the right to accept the aid of his friends in a suit at law?

Take subsection (g), with respect to giving publicity to the existence of the facts in relation to a strike being in effect. Wherein does this violate the law?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. GARBER. Time will not permit of a further analysis of the only legal criticism made against this bill by one of the ablest lawyers in this House, very pleasing to listen to, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks out of the ancient past. This bill deals with the present, with modern, up-to-date conditions, wherein social justice is the primary consideration. [Applause.]

The fundamental purpose of this legislation is the promotion of social justice, to place the employee upon an equality with his employer so that he may exercise a bargaining power which will exact a reasonable compensation for his contribution to the joint enterprise of capital and labor. Through their collective-bargaining power labor unions have sought to do this. They have secured better working conditions, shortened the hours of labor, and improved the laborer's condition and standing generally. But through the misuse and abuse of injunctive relief by the Federal courts they have been prevented from securing that degree of social justice to which their contribution of labor entitles them.

This is generally recognized. It was recognized by the respective political parties in their national platforms but three years ago. It is recognized by an enlightened public opinion to-day.

The bill declares our national policy to be that labor shall be free from interference in negotiating the terms and conditions of its employment and in other organized activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

Section 3 prohibits the enforcement in law or equity of any contract or agreement wherein either party agrees not to join, become, or remain a member of any labor organization, or of any employers' organization. This section prohibits the enforcement by injunction or proceedings in law of what is usually referred to as the "yellow-dog" contract, a contract procured upon the application of the employee for work wherein he is handed a written form which obligates him not to join any labor union while in such employment.

Section 4 of the bill prohibits the Federal courts from restraining or enjoining any person or persons participating or interested in any labor dispute from doing, whether singly or in concert, any of nine specific acts, one or more of which have been usually covered in blanket injunctions:

(a) Ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment;

(b) Becoming or remaining a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act;

(c) Paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person participating or interested in such labor dispute any strike or unemployment benefits or insurance or other moneys or things of value;

(d) By all lawful means aiding any person participating or interested in any labor dispute who is being proceeded against in, or is prosecuting, any action or suit in any court of the United States or of any State;

(e) Giving publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, any labor dispute, whether by advertising, speaking, patrolling, or by any other method not involving fraud or violence;

(f) Assembling peaceably to act or to organize to act in promotion of their interests in a labor dispute;

(g) Advising or notifying any person of an intention to do any of the acts heretofore specified;

(h) Agreeing with other persons to do or not to do any of the acts heretofore specified; and

(i) Advising, urging, or otherwise causing or inducing without fraud or violence the acts heretofore specified, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act.

Under section 7 a temporary restraining order may issue without notice, providing it is alleged that substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will be unavoidable unless such restraining order issue, supported by testimony under oath sufficient if sustained to justify the court in issuing a temporary injunction upon a hearing after notice, such a temporary restraining order to be effective only for a period of five days and become void at the expiration of that time. An adequate bond for costs and damages must first be approved before the temporary order becomes effective. In all other cases no temporary or permanent injunction shall issue except after hearing the testimony of witnesses in open court, with opportunity given for cross-examination and the hearing of testimony in opposition to the application, such hearing to be held only after due and personal notice has been given in such manner as the court shall direct to all known persons against whom relief is sought, and also to those public officers charged with the duty of protecting the complainant's property.

Before granting the application for the writ the court must make a substantial finding of fact in writing to the effect—

(a) That unlawful acts have been threatened or committed and will be continued unless restrained, but no injunction or temporary restraining order shall be issued on account of any threat or unlawful act except against the person or persons, association, or organization making the threat or committing the unlawful act or who actually authorized it or ratified it after actual knowledge thereof;

(b) That substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow;

(c) That as to each item of relief granted greater injury will be inflicted upon complainant by the denial of relief than will be inflicted upon defendants by the granting of relief;

(d) That complainant has no adequate remedy at law; and

(e) That the public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property are unable or unwilling to furnish adequate protection.

The above procedure will put a stop to granting of injunctive relief without notice and finding of fact sufficient to warrant such action. No longer will the advantage be to the one who first gets the ear of the court. Neither will incompetent judges be permitted to issue blanket orders which the layman can not understand. Notice, specific findings of fact, and definite orders make for orderly procedure.

Section 11 effects important and necessary changes in procedure in contempt cases for violation of restraining orders or injunctions issued by the United States courts. The accused is permitted to enjoy the right of public trial by an impartial jury and section 12 provides for a change of judge in contempt proceedings where the contempt arises from an attack upon the character or conduct of such judge and not in open court.

Has Congress the power to legislate the limitations and procedure provided for in this bill? Section 1 of Article III of the Constitution provides—

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

This delegation of power to Congress carries with it the power to define the jurisdiction of the inferior courts it creates, to enlarge or limit that jurisdiction within constitutional limitations. This view is clearly expressed in the case of Kline v. Burke Construction Co. in Two hundred and sixtieth United States Reports at page 234, as follows:

Only the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is derived directly from the Constitution. Every other court created by the General Government derives its jurisdiction wholly from the authority of Congress. That body may give, withhold, or restrict such jurisdiction at its discretion, provided it be not extended beyond the boundaries fixed by the Constitution.

Surely the power that can create or abolish the courts can, within constitutional limitations, fix the jurisdiction of the courts. The restrictions, therefore, upon the administration of injunctive relief by the Federal courts are clearly within the power of Congress.

In my judgment, the only constitutional question raised by the provisions of this bill is that to be found in section 3, whereby the employee agrees to join or not to join a labor union; in other words, the further use of the "yellow-dog" contract, declaring it to be in conflict with public policy, not to be enforceable, and not to afford any basis for the granting of legal or equitable relief.

Such contract is so well defined by William Green, president American Federation of Labor, that we herewith incorporate his definition and statement in reference thereto:

"YELLOW-DOG" CONTRACTS CONDEMNED BY EXPERTS

FOREWARD

When workers seeking a job are told to sign an agreement not to join a union before they are put on the pay roll, this condition is called a "yellow-dog" contract. Workers who accept such conditions give up their legal and economic rights because those dependent on them have to be fed and clothed.

To get money for these immediate necessities they must forego their right to plan and order their own lives, that is, the right to join with fellow workers to deal with common problems collectively. Wage earners like all other groups of citizens are expected to assume responsibility for their own progress. Persons who neglect opportunities to keep step with progress retard social advancement and may even become public wards.

A single wage earner is unable to make an advantageous contract with his employer. Acting jointly with other wage earners they can meet their employers on an equal footing and negotiate mutually satisfactory contracts. Employers who are unwilling to give their employees a fair chance to make progress require them to sign "yellow-dog" contracts.

When there is evidence of efforts to promote the organization of a union among workers who have signed "yellow-dog" contracts, employers usually apply to the courts for injunctions enjoining union activities. Thus the full force of government is put behind contracts which take advantage of the necessities of workers and these workers are denied the right to do things which the law regards as legal and which society regards as necessary and constructive.

Clearly, "yellow-dog" contracts and their enforcement by injunctions are in conflict with American principles of liberty and with orderly social progress.

Labor believes that such contracts should not be actionable. Our position is supported by many lawyers and experts who believe that law should be an effective social instrument. To be such an instrument, law must be something more than a mechanical application of precedents—it must be the application of principles of human justice to specific conditions and problems.

Quotations from authorities in different fields have been compiled for the ready use of wage earners studying this problem.

WM. GREEN,
President American Federation of Labor.

The purpose of the "yellow-dog" contract is to destroy the labor unions and thereby the bargaining power of the employee. It is now used in the coal fields, in many manufacturing districts, and on many of the railroad systems. Its use in recent years has rapidly increased. It destroys the independence of labor. It takes an undue advantage of a man who must have work to support his wife and children. The employee has no choice, no bargaining power, and must take whatever is offered. If the use of such a contract is continued, it will finally destroy the labor organizations, the independence of the worker, and create a general labor condition of involuntary servitude.

Clearly, such a contract should be against the public interest, our public policy, and should not be enforceable. It is not only "yellow dog" and Shylock but Machiavelian! This bill will outlaw such a contract; it will preserve the organizations of labor unions, and restore the independence of the worker. [Applause.]

The only objections to this legislation are coming from the sources of corporate power antagonistic to the unions, the sources that have always rushed into court and secured blanket injunctions from their willing tools on the bench. The objections come from sinister sources always seeking advantage in government and in the administration of the law.

The following leading representative public men more truly represent American standards and ideals, the standard of equality of citizenship, of the independence of the American laborer and of the security of his home, the necessity for the education of his family, and the interest of the Government in qualified, competent, American citizenship:

Theodore Roosevelt: "It is all wrong to use the injunction to prevent the entirely proper and legitimate actions of labor organizations in their struggle for industrial betterment, or under the guise of protecting property rights unwarrantably to invade the fundamental rights of the individual. It is futile to concede, as we all do, the right and necessity of organized effort on the part of wage earners and yet by injunctive process to forbid peaceable action to accomplish the lawful objects for which they are organized and upon which their success depends." (42 Cong. Record 1347–48 (1908).)

William Howard Taft: "They [trade-unions] were organized out of the necessities of the situation. A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer. He was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and family. If the employer refused to pay him the wages that he thought fair, he was nevertheless unable to leave the employ and to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment. Union was essential to give laborers opportunity to deal on equality with their employer." (American Foundries v. Tri-City Council (257 U. S. 184–209).)

Woodrow Wilson: "Governments must recognize the right of men collectively to bargain for humane objects that have at their base the mutual protection and welfare of those engaged in all industries. Labor must not be longer treated as a commodity.

It must be regarded as the activity of human beings, possessed of deep yearnings and desires. The business man gives his best thought to the repair and replenishment of his machinery so that its usefulness will not be impaired and its power to produce may always be at its height and kept in full vigor and motion. No less regard ought to be paid to the human machine which, after all, propels the machinery of the world and is the great dynamic force that lies back of all industry and progress." (From message communicated to both Houses of Congress at the beginning of the 66th Cong.)

Charles Evans Hughes: "I trust there will be no more struggles in futile opposition to the right of collective bargaining on the part of employees. The recognition of the right of representation and the prompt hearing of grievances provide the open doors to reasonable and just settlements." (From address before the Institute of Arts and Sciences, Columbia University, November 30, 1918.)

Notwithstanding the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that the so-called "yellow-dog" contract is legal, the commission is of the opinion that it is a source of economic irritation and is no more justifiable than any other form of contract which debars the individual from employment solely because of membership or nonmembership in any organization. The right of an employer to discharge for disloyalty, dishonesty, and incompetency or other unlawful conduct should not be abridged, but he should not be permitted to blacklist a discharged laborer for any other reason than disloyalty, dishonesty, or unlawful conduct. (Report of U. S. Coal Commission, 1925, pt. 1, p. 179.)

We recommend that such destructive labor policies as the use of spies, the use of deputy sheriffs as paid company guards, house leases which prevent free access and exit, and individual contracts which are not freewill contracts be abolished. (Summary of Recommendations, September 14, 1923, U. S. Coal Commission, in Bituminous Coal Mining. Government Printing Office, 1925.)

* * * When an applicant for work is compelled to sign a contract pledging himself against affiliation with a union, or when a union man is refused employment or discharged merely on the ground of union membership, the employer is using coercive methods and is violating the fundamental principle of an open shop * * *. (Federal Council of the Churches of Christ of America, press release, December, 1920.)

Francis B. Sayre, Harvard Law School: "The signs are all about us that labor groups throughout the country are smarting with a sense of injustice at the hands of the courts. * * * The situation calls for constructive efforts to meet the growing danger, not only on the part of labor leaders but on the part of all who believe in American law and American traditions.

* * * * * * *

"Seizing upon the Hitchman decision, employers have found an effective way to prevent peaceful and otherwise lawful union activities by requiring present or prospective employees as the price of employment to sign individual contracts against joining any union. Thus entrenched, they are in a position to defy every effort on the part of the unions to unionize their plants, and by a system of strategic individual contracts with their employees they are able in many cases to prevent unions entering into a competitive struggle with them over the price of labor. That courts would refuse in fields other than labor law to allow competition to be effectually stifled by means of strategic contracts with third parties seems clear." (Labor and the Courts, Yale Law Journal, March, 1930.)

Donald R. Eichberg, attorney, Railway Shop Trades Unions: "It is a waste of time to criticize judges who chatter about equality of right and liberty of contract between a billion-dollar corporation and a man looking for a job. When judges solemnly announce that society is more interested in preserving the freedom of one man to injure himself and his coworkers than in preserving the freedom of a hundred thousand men to promote their common interests it is unnecessary to argue that the lawmakers do not know what they are talking about. That fact is obvious. It is, however, worth while to point out the misdirection of persistent efforts to combat natural laws of human conduct with artificial laws.

"* * * And it is apparent that employees sign 'yellow-dog' contracts only because they feel compelled to do so. No man voluntarily puts his head in a noose and then hands the rope to his adversary, with the idea that he has improved his chance of winning the contest. If courts will not recognize the facts, and hold that the employer acts illegally when he interferes with the employee's natural rights to asscociate with his fellow men and thus to designate representatives to advance their common interests, then it is time to have the legislatures write this law and to make it binding on the courts." (From address delivered at the joint conference on injunctions in labor disputes in Pennsylvania, Labor Institute, March 16, 1930.)

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANTON). The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I submit the inquiry whether or not any other gentleman in opposition to the bill would desire some time now?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] will reserve the other 23 minutes that from his side is justly due the opposition, there will be opposition that will call for it at the proper time.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Is it meet and proper for the Chairman to ask for time while occupying the chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair answered a proper parliamentary inquiry that was within the knowledge of the Chair.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORR].

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I was very happy, indeed, to be here to-day to witness the wedding of those two sterling characters, the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Texas, and I would wish this couple a long and happy life were it not for the fact I realize that on next Monday morning, the Ides of March, on account of other issues that will be presented to this body, I am sure we will find them in anything but a happy mood.

I am happy to be here to-day to speak upon this particular bill. The injunction in itself, as it exists in law, does not deter any criminal act on the part of anybody, regardless of the fact that it is a law. Any threat whatsoever, whether it be in the nature of a law or not, has never acted as a deterrent to crime. The injunction that has been hanging over the heads of organized labor has been more as an irritant than as a corrective of any condition.

I was particularly taken to-day with the remarks of the gentleman from Texas, who is always speaking for the dear people, and to hear him to-day talk in favor of the industrialists partakes of comedy. I am not worried about what is going to happen to him down in his district of Texas, where he says the best people on earth live. We have all heard this designation and admitted it a thousand times, but I am fearful about what will be the thought of his people when the word goes out to his constituency in Texas that he has to-day joined and gone forward, hand and hand, with the most distinguished wet in this Congress in opposition to this bill.

I heard the gentleman talk about conditions in this Capital City, where the employer, he says, has been caused great inconvenience. Does he know the workers' side of the controversy?

The gentleman said he has worked himself, although it was 35 years ago, according to his own admission, and I am wondering whether he is taken back in memory when those who worked at that particular period of their lives were working not 8 hours a day, the limit men should work, but worked 12 or 14 hours a day in order to get their daily bread. Will the gentleman deny that organized labor should be credited with this change?

It has been a battle for human rights since men first began to toil. Labor has been protecting humanity, and industry only the product. Is not the individual more to be considered than the product? Is not human life more to be considered than the manufactured or produced product?

It has been my experience that where there has been excesses that it is not the outgrowth of any organized-labor agitation, and in most cases organized labor has stepped in and the agitators were kicked out. Organized labor to-day stands for stability in government and is the Nation's last port of call in time of stress.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. HORR. Injunction never acted as a deterrent to crime. Penalties fail to stop murder, and capital punishment does not lessen the taking of life. We have more laws to-day than any other nation, and we are the most lawless of nations. It is time some of these laws were taken off the statute books.

Labor does not need to be threatened with injunction to make it law-abiding.

The American people owe a great debt to organized labor. It has made its proportional contribution in war times, and it will not tolerate disloyalty to government in peace time.

Why place the yoke of serfdom on the worker by giving the courts the power to restrain by injunction, not only the individual but an entire community. Have the courts ever gone so far as to apply this law to industry? Has this power of injunction ever been used to compel the payment of fair wages to the worker or to maintain a factory or camp fit for men and women to inhabit? If injunction is for use to prevent violence, why has it never been used against an industry that maintains conditions that breed discord? If the injunction is good for labor it is equally applicable to industry. You and I know that the injunction has no place in a free democratic government.

This bill also provides against the "yellow-dog" contract. Were this the only section in the bill, it should appeal to the fair-minded legislator. When ever before was liberty so curtailed as by provisions found in such contracts of hire—contracts which go so far afield of legitimate contractual relationships, as even to take from the worker his human attributes of self-expression, free association, and right to betterment of his station in life—contracts which have wrongly been enforced by the courts of a civilized people?

I rejoice that the Congress of the United States on this day tells the courts of the country that it is not the desire of this legislative body to permit the use of these so-called "yellow-dog" contracts as a club to browbeat the individual out of his innate rights.

To-day should be a great day in the history of organized labor. For years this organization has been looking forward to this accomplishment, and I am happy to have had the privilege of raising my voice in the Congress of the United States in favor of the abolition of the injunction against the worker. I have supreme confidence that the worker will rise to the situation and will prove to the world that such a measure never was at any time necessary for industrial peace. How proud am I to be able to carry out my pledge to organized labor and on this day cast my vote to abolish that thorn of irritation that has been pricking the organization these many years.

To the American Federation of Labor and all of your locals throughout the land, I extend my heartfelt congratulations. I have tried to do my bit.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there being no other requests for time in opposition to the bill, except that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], and as I understand there are 23 minutes of that time remaining, I yield that to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, my mind was at ease on this bill, when Pythias BLANTON O. K'd Damon BECK. They both can not be right; and under the existing armistice, if one of them is wrong so is the other.

I am sorry that my friend from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] was so unfair to the "Abilene broadcaster," allowing him only 37 minutes on a program with the Philadelphia maestro [Mr. BECK].

I am authorized by my colleague, Mr. O'CONNOR, to answer the question of the gentleman from Texas, "Upon what meat does this our Cæsar feed?" It just so happens that O'CONNOR's ancestors for years fed on the blood of Englishmen. O'CONNOR himself usually feeds on Texas steer, but now that it is Lent he is eating Russian caviar. I suppose that makes him a red. It occurs to me also that probably the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] would like to be a minority of one, because even misery likes to choose its own company. [Laughter.]

This bill is simply a legislative injunction against the injunctions of arrogant gentlemen who have fed on Cæsar's meat. Both gentlemen who spoke against this bill enumerated certain crimes against which injunctions were to protect the public. There are plenty of laws on the books of all the States about the crimes enumerated. An injunction is no more terrifying than a term in the State penitentiary. An injunction is no more to be feared than capital punishment, and they have enumerated murder among their crimes. That is not the reason for the injunction. The reason for the injunction is that the employers can charge crimes in advance and have a judge, friendly to them, pass on the crimes before they are committed. The laws are plentiful on the question of crimes. You do not need injunctions against crimes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] said that some of the proponents of this bill had visited Moscow and got inspiration from Moscow. This bill did not come from Moscow. I remember away back in my days in prep school many years ago that we used to discuss whether or not there should be injunctions issued without a right of trial by jury in derogation of a man's constitutional rights. This question has been agitated in this country for years and years. This did not come from Moscow; it came right from the heart of America.

Gentlemen are inclined to liken our American labor leaders to communists. If there is any force that stands between communism and our American system, it is the intelligent, courageous American labor leaders, because it has been the American labor leader who has been put to the fight against communists in the front line of the industrial trenches. It is the American labor leader who has met their opposition all over the country in labor locals, where communists are trying to break in. It is the American union-labor leader that the people have to thank for the suppression of communism in this country, and not corporation lawyers who, by their acts and by their unfairness, attract the friends of communism to attacks upon America. They speak about the American labor leaders terrifying Congress. I have never yet in all my time in legislative work had a labor leader threaten me in any way, shape, or form. I have had those on the other side of the fence say they had no use for me because I happened to vote on the labor side of questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Can the gentleman from Missouri grant me some time?

Mr. DYER. I am sorry that I can not.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the gentleman from Texas, and I take back the "Abilene broadcaster" and will call the gentleman anything he wants me to call him. [Laughter.]

We have a constitutional provision against ex post facto laws. I do not know whether my Latin is right, because I have not consulted with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but if an injunction is anything it is an ex ante facto law. The injunction comes before the fact. We have a constitutional provision against legislating after the fact and having laws based on facts that happen prior to legislation; but here we have courts, judges, appointed for life—we do not know at whose request, we do not know with whose indorsement, nor why they were appointed—and we give them power to adjudge a man in advance of his acts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I made a remark upon the floor this morning, expressing my surprise and pleasure because the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] so warmly indorsed this bill. It recalled to my mind my visit to the South, to investigate the textile mills, because they were furnishing severe competition to our New England industry. I asked while there how it was that they could make money, and they replied it was because their wheels turned day and night, labor working 60 hours a week, and that they had no labor organizers and no labor interference there. And yet we hear the Democratic Party of the South claiming credit for this bill favoring organized labor. Why, down there they resist efforts to organize; they say to the American Federation of Labor that they are entirely unwelcome to come into those States to help organize labor there. Yet the Democratic Party undertakes to arrogate to itself great credit for this piece of legislation. So at this particular time I bring forward the idea that this is an invitation to the American Federation of Labor to go to Alabama, as they will now be welcome. I trust the American Federation of Labor will go at once and show those textile operatives who are working 60 hours a week how to obtain collective bargaining and change conditions. These industries are protected by the tariff and are ruinous to other like industries in the country by such unhealthy competition. It should happen very soon that equal hours of labor in industry should obtain in this country. If there were a 40-hour week, no unemployed would be walking the streets to-day, begging work. The Central Government may have to invade the States once more to demand equalization of conditions and equal hours in industry. However, it now seems that they will welcome the American Federation of Labor to organize their employees, which would of itself largely correct the conditions.

I found on my visit that if laborers were not orderly and docile, they were forced to move from the houses in which they lived, they being owned by their employers; thus they control employees who work for them. These conditions would also be greatly changed by organized labor. I trust the supporting of this bill will indicate that those working people in the mills of the South will soon enjoy privileges that other liberal States have given, such as a 48-hour week, and proper conditions relating to night work, to the end that they carry on competition in a proper manner with their sister States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 22 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I do not understand that the gentleman from Texas controls any time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to use the 22 minutes that were given me a while ago by the gentleman from Texas, and which I reserved.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] 22 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, such yielding now is wholly unnecessary, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] a short time ago yielded me 23 minutes, and I gave 1 minute of it to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] and I had reserved the other 22 minutes for myself.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] 22 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in my own right. I yield myself my own 22 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is recognized for 22 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas yielded back the balance of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserved his time. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 22 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I thank my colleague from Massachusetts, the present excellent presiding Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union [Mr. CONNERY], for his fair rulings at all times. Every Member present is noticing with a great deal of pride that he is making a splendid presiding officer. And we all know that he is a most valuable Member of this House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to use my time in answering some of the attacks that have been made upon me in this debate. I knew that when I opposed this measure I would become a target for every partisan of it to shoot at. That is one of the penalties we must pay when we oppose a class measure, when the class benefited is looking on from the gallery watching us.

The gentleman from New York, Mr. BLACK, said that his colleague the gentleman from New York, Mr. O'CONNOR, had granted me 37 minutes in this debate. That is incorrect. The gentleman from New York, Mr. O'CONNOR, did not grant me anything. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Michigan used the entire hour they had control of for the proponents of the bill. Not one minute did they grant anybody to oppose it.

Now, of the four hours that were allowed for general debate, of the two hours that were allocated to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], he, after reflection, finally yielded me 37 minutes of it, for which I am grateful, but I was due an hour under the rules of parliamentary debate; so after reflection he granted me my other 23 minutes, but even then the time has not been fairly divided, because the gentleman from Missouri, of his two hours, has yielded only 40 minutes to the opposition, when Mr. BECK was entitled to a full hour.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment.

Mr. DYER. I will yield the balance to anyone who desires it on this side.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did not the gentleman do that when Mr. BECK was on the floor, begging for more time? I have never been bothered about understanding the great popularity of my colleague from Dallas, Mr. SUMNERS, with the women. He is handsome. That answers that. But I have never understood his great popularity with the men until to-day. Now I understand it. If we will give him time to reflect, we can always depend upon his inherent fairness.

When my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], who is a great lawyer and a great statesman, and whom I follow much on this floor, reflected and remembered that in all parliamentary bodies those who are against a measure are entitled to control one-half the time, his good judgment stepped in and he responded and did justice. He finally gave me the hour I was entitled to. I admire and respect him. I commend him, and I am for him.

In reply to my friends who on the floor intimated that I said that communism now pervades the American Federation of Labor, permit me to remind them that I did not say that. They must keep the record straight. I said distinctly that I was one of the causes that led the American Federation of Labor to see that it could not longer harbor communism and that it finally divorced itself from it. I said that years ago communism did pervade it, and it did. Was not William Z. Foster once affiliated with the American Federation of Labor? Was he not affiliated with them at the very time I stood on this floor during the war and read his little red book on syndicalism? He had just been in charge of the steel strike, placed there by the American Federation of Labor. Was not Emma Goldman once affiliated? Was not Alexander Berkman once affiliated?

In years gone by I admonished the American Federation of Labor that the time would come when it would divorce itself from communism and anarchy, and it has done it, and I commend it for it.

But what are we going to do about this bill? Parts of this bill absolutely give the labor unions a throttle hold on this Government. I want to call attention to what has happened in the past before we pass this law.

Do you remember when during the war President Wilson recommended that we pass the Borland amendment requiring the Government employees to work eight hours a day? All of you who were here then will remember it. We put a provision in a supply bill that for the duration of the war the employees of the Government, to whom we were giving a $120 bonus, should work eight hours a day. Was there anything wrong with that?

During the war, when we had soldiers in the trenches of France, knee deep in mud, cooty infested, fighting 24 hours a day, and if they had murmured they would have been stood up against a brick wall at sunrise and shot for treason, was it unreasonable that we should ask the employees of the Government, after giving them a $120 bonus, to work eight hours a day during the war? We had given them one bonus of $120; we had given them a second bonus of $120; and we were giving them a third bonus, and it was a reasonable request. We passed a law. It went into one of our big supply bills as a rider, and the Government employees affiliated with unions marched on the Capitol and they marched on the White House demanding of the President in war time to veto that bill. And he vetoed it. Is that the proper kind of hold-up for us to approve of by passing a bill that gives them all power? I shall offer an amendment that right at the beginning of this bill these words be put in: "Except where the Government of the United States is the petitioner."

I wonder if I can get any of my colleagues to vote for that? Is not that a fair provision? If the Government of the United States is involved, it seems that the interests of 120,000,000 people are involved. That is what it means. When your Government is involved and goes into court as the petitioner, ought this kind of a bill to say that the courts have no right to grant redress to the people, because, forsooth, 5,000,000 union men are organized into a labor union? Do you know that there are not over 5,000,000 people in the United States belonging to unions? Did you know that? There are not 5,000,000 people in the United States affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Do you think it is fair that we should pass a special class act that takes away from all of the 120,000,000 people the inherent right they have under the Constitution and give it to 5,000,000 people and say they shall be put up above everybody else, and above the Government? They say there is no duress on any of us here at this time by these union leaders who sit up in the gallery. I will show you where the duress comes in. They have said to us in times past that if we do not give them proper obedience—not 30 per cent obedience, not 66⅔ per cent obedience—but if we do not give them 100 per cent obedience to their demands we will be put on their blacklist, and when election time comes they will send men throughout all of our districts to defeat us. They will send men into my district and say, "BLANTON is against organized labor. We have blacklisted him. We ask organized labor to fight him." Is not that duress?

Now, do you think we ought to pass a bill of this kind under such duress? They are demanding this bill. They have gotten it up here. They got it out of committee and they have gotten it on the floor. All of their organizations have their officers sitting up in the gallery waiting to see what we are going to do about it. They are watching us. They know we know we are going to be blacklisted if we go against them. Do you mean to tell me we are not under duress? Let us be reasonable. Are we not under duress? Have we a free rein here on the floor? Does not their sitting up there kind of pervade the atmosphere of the Chamber?

The other 120,000,000 people of the United States are not here. They are affected but are not here. They are not represented here. They are not here to have us look up into their faces and consider their rights. We only have sitting up there those people who are saying, "Give us this bill; give us this bill or we will blacklist you." That is what we know is coming. You take this Keating paper called Labor and you see how it will blacklist you if you vote against this bill. It will give the names of the fellows who vote against it and they will be on the black list.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Always to my friend from New York, because I know this: I know he is one man who, when labor demands something that does not appeal to him, presses down on them and refuses to go along with them, just as I do. I have seen him do that on several occasions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I saw the gentleman from Texas stand on that very same spot a few days ago and defend the right of a gentleman to be up in that gallery and listen to something in which he was vitally interested.

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell the gentleman why I did that, and I will show you I had a good reason, because the gentleman is a lawyer. Only the rights of that one man were involved. Nobody else's rights were involved but his rights, and he had a right to be there. Now, if the rights of the other people in the United States were not involved, then these boys would have a right to be up in the gallery. That would be all right, but they represent just 5,000,000 people against the rights of all the balance of the 120,000,000 people in the United States. There is the difference. So the gentleman can see I had a good reason for what I did.

Mr. SCHAFER and Mr. KARCH rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to yield to the gentleman on prohibition in a minute, but I yield to the gentleman from Illinois first.

Mr. KARCH. Did I understand the gentleman said he had little or no use for a Member who took orders from or listened to the wishes of anyone in the gallery?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I did not say that. I say this: I say that these men have a right to be there. I say they have a right to come here and tell us what they want; they have a right to call on us at our offices, but they have no right to threaten us and put us in duress, and they have no more rights than any other citizen in the United States.

Mr. KARCH. I will ask the gentleman this question: If he recalls the occasion when a resolution was pending in this House some years ago requiring unanimous consent for the impeachment of Judge English, who was impeached for having violated this very injunction system which we are about to rectify, and whether the gentleman did not raise an objection against the hearing of that resolution because he said he took orders to do so from Wayne Wheeler?

Mr. BLANTON. I never took orders from Wayne Wheeler in my life. After reflection, I remember that when the English resolution was up for unanimous consent Wayne Wheeler's office telephoned my office and asked that I please stop the resolution temporarily for that day until he could have the charges investigated, and, as requested, I did object to it being passed by unanimous consent. The reason that request was made to me was, I suppose, because it was known that I was always on the floor when such matters came up. I have stopped many bills temporarily until they could be carefully investigated.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does the gentleman approve of the black list of the Anti-Saloon League?

Mr. BLANTON. Now, I want the gentleman to be seated, and then I shall answer him.

If the Anti-Saloon League attempted to blacklist anybody, I would be against it just as I am against any other black list. I never have held any brief for the Anti-Saloon League. The Anti-Saloon League never put up a dollar in its whole existence for me in any campaign I have even been in and has never paid me a dollar in my life. It has no strings on me at all. You could wipe it out of existence to-day, I will state to the gentleman from Milwaukee, and you would still have prohibition upheld by the good men and women of this country. You could wipe out every single organization, and you would still have prohibition.

I want to remind the gentleman, in speaking about a black list, one of his wet organizations here last Tuesday, a week ago to-day, when the wet resolution was finally signed by the one hundred and forty-fifth Member, the organization headed by Mr. Henry Curran, of New York, came out in the Washington Post the next morning and said that it was going to stand for the reelection of the men who voted for that resolution and was going to stand for the defeat of the men who voted against it. Was not that black listing? And in the Washington Post of the same day there was a similar threat from the Crusaders, a wet organization, which said they would stand for the men who voted for that resolution and would be against the men who voted against it. Was not that black listing?

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield on that particular question?

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not yield further on prohibition. When the 14th of March comes, Mr. Chairman, we will meet the gentleman from Wisconsin on that subject, but not now.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. The gentleman spoke about the 5,000,000 who belong to the American Federation of Labor represented here to-day. Does not the gentleman think that if the other 115,000,000 people were against this bill they would be represented here?

Mr. BLANTON. No; because they are unorganized. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What?

Mr. BLANTON. That is the trouble.

Mr. SWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I want to answer the question first. You gentlemen know what organization means? Take the question that dominates the gentleman from Wisconsin from January to December, and you know what organization means with respect to prohibition. You wets are organized on this side of the aisle, organized to the teeth. The drys have no organization over here. [Laughter.] Over on the other side of the aisle you Republican wets—and you outnumber the Democratic wets, I am pleased to say [applause]—you Republican wets are organized to the teeth. You have got the brains of the wets in Mr. BECK, of Pennsylvania, as your leader.

You are organized as no other organization has ever been perfected before. Where is your dry organization? You have not any. There is no dry organization in this House. Why is there not? I want to say that if the drys are wise pretty soon they will effect an organization, and every time a wet gets up they will have a dry answer him.

Mr. PALMISANO and Mr. SCHAFER rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. PALMISANO. In view of the fact that the Republicans have a great leader of the wets, I would suggest that the gentleman from Texas be the great leader of the drys and organize the drys of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am just a humble dry in the ranks, but I want to make this statement: Is it not unfortunate that when a man gets up here and speaks his earnest and sincere sentiments on a bill he has to be a target for every little wet in the country?

Why, I had to be the target again of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORR], the Bremerton Navy Yard man, who came here by accident. He had better quit thinking about my constituents down in Texas and be thinking about John Miller's constituents out there now that John Miller is organizing. He had better look out, because John Miller is just as good a friend of the labor unions as our new Member friend from Washington ever will be, and the labor unions are for John Miller. He has a 100 per cent record for labor unions.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I want to use the rest of my time.

Is it not funny that we have to be targets? Why, because I made a dry speech over the radio the other day, do you know I have received every kind of insulting, threatening letter that cranks can write a man?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I got some letters, too.

Mr. BLANTON. I got a stack of them from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and from all around, attacking me from every angle.

They do not know me, and they imagine I am the very quintessence of everything that is bad, because I made a dry speech.

Just imagine! Do you as a lawyer think I could get a fair and impartial, unprejudiced jury of men to go into a jury box and pass on questions in the community composed of those men? You could not get a juror who had not made up his mind, you would get the same kind of a crank that attacks me on the floor because I oppose a measure. You would find the same kind of a crank who attacks me, because I spoke in behalf of the dry cause that my good mother espoused and taught me when I was a child to stand for.

Why, one of them called me a "dirty dry drinker." I never took a drink in my life. I am a consistent dry. I have never taken a drink, and I never will.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield for just one question.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman from Texas unduly castigated Mr. Keating, the editor of Labor, for publishing the black list. I know he did not get a threatening letter from him on account of his dry radio address because Mr. Keating was the star witness for the drys before the Judiciary Committee in the last Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Keating has had me on the black list ever since I have been in Congress.

Mr. SCHAFER. He has had me on it, too.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the gentleman from Wisconsin deserved it and I did not. [Laughter.]

Every time a laboring man gets into difficulty or wants something he comes to me, and I help him to get it. They do that because they know that I will fight for them when they are right. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL].

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I have read the objections to this bill. In some particulars it may not be perfect, as nothing human is perfect. It may be that it can be bettered by amendment; but I am for the end which this bill seeks, and that is equal justice between property and man.

I am not afraid of this legislation, because I am not afraid of the workingmen of America. When this depression began President Green of the American Federation of Labor pledged the faith of his organization that the workers of this country would do their part to "carry on" by abstaining from strikes. That pledge has been kept. I am for the men who kept that pledge. One of the marvels of this depression has been the fortitude, the courage, the patience, and the patriotism of the workers of the Nation who in the face of privation and suffering and long despair have done their full part, and more than their part, in meeting a situation which they did not make.

Men and women who in the face of conditions such as we are passing through, who day in and day out have stood in bitter weather at the closed doors of factories waiting for jobs and in the bread lines waiting for food, and yet have exhibited such self-control that practically no violence has been done to property in these times that try men's souls, can be trusted by the lawmakers of this Nation. With few exceptions the hearts of these men are sound. I would rather place my trust in the justice in their hearts than in some of the judges in the courts. If you treat them as human beings, they will act as human beings. If you treat them as Americans, they will act as Americans.

Choate held up as the law's ideal that "in a court there is no high nor low, no strong nor weak; there, will is nothing and power is nothing and numbers are nothing—and all are equal, and all secure before the law."

Has it been that way in the administration of equity? No. Let us endeavor to make it so. There is one item of this bill which in particular aims to end a species of injustice intolerable in a free nation. That is the provision forbidding injunctions to be issued restraining the gift of money or other things of value in time of labor disputes.

Let us put an end to that species of tyranny. And let us drive the "yellow-dog" out of the courthouses of the Nation.

When we do that men will be, as Choate said, "secure before the law." And when men are secure, property is safe.

The platform of my party in its last national convention recognized—

> That legislative and other investigations have shown the existence of grave abuse in the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes. No injunctions should be granted in labor disputes except upon proof of threatened irreparable injury and after notice and hearing, and the injunction should be confined to those acts which do directly threaten irreparable injury. The express purpose of representatives of capital, labor, and the bar to devise a plan for the elimination of the present evils with respect to injunctions must be supported, and legislation designed to accomplish those ends must be formulated and passed.

I am glad to help redeem that pledge. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am probably foolish to get up here this afternoon to enter this debate in defense of two gentlemen of this House who have had the courage to oppose this bill in the face of the almost unanimous view of the House. A great many Members have made suggestions and criticisms of two distinguished Members who had the courage to stand here and express their views. I do not want to see the day come when a man can not stand here and discuss the views that he may have on a bill without criticism. I think we are entitled to have open and free discussion, otherwise we would not be able to preserve the freedom of this Republic.

There is a great deal of good in this measure, and I want to support it. But I would like to have some of the measures in the bill discussed, for I do not understand what they mean, they have not been explained. This is very important legislation. For instance, I do not know at this minute whether or not it applies to the District of Columbia or to your city or my city, to the police force or the fire force. Does it mean that they can combine and walk out and leave the city unprotected?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman will find that completely answered. The answer is no; it does not. It applies only to the persons specifically defined and mentioned in section 13.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. It speaks of corporations. Would the gentleman be willing to put the word "private" before the word "corporations"?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They have to be engaged in industry, trade, craft, or occupation. That answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. So far as the labor leaders and laboring men are concerned, they are all my friends. I have a world of friends among them. They have always given me their support and I have supported them and I will to-day and will whenever I can. They are the bulwark of America to-day. I would like to see every laboring man have a good and well-paying job, because in that lies the safety of our country. I want to see them protected in every reasonable and possible way. But the laboring people themselves have their own families to protect, and they do not want to see legislation that is going to leave their families unprotected by firemen or police, or have them kept from getting milk or food or fuel as was mentioned here this morning, in the city of Chicago.

We do not want to see any condition of that kind arise where the public utilities are put out of business or ruined and the public made to suffer. Will the gentleman answer this question? Does this make it possible for lack of an injunction to tie up railroads and prevent them from transporting milk, for instance?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think the gentleman was a Member of the House in 1926?

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. No.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We then passed the railroad labor act, and that takes care of the whole labor situation pertaining to the railroads. They could not possibly come under this for the reason that we provided the machinery there for settling labor disputes.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Will the gentleman assure me of this then, and I shall be happy to support the bill because I believe it is a landmark in the freedom of American labor. It does not apply to the Government, the States, or the District of Columbia, or any city, in respect to the police and fire forces?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It would not.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. It does not apply to the transportation of milk or other necessities that go in interstate commerce?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Interstate traffic is entirely covered in the railroad labor act of 1926.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BECK. I take issue with the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. There is nothing in this proposed statute that in any way excludes disputes upon the theory that the Railroad Labor Board can attend to them. The Railroad Labor Board is purely an executive tribunal, and while its function is in mediation and settling disputes, where possible, yet a labor combination can stop every railroad in the country unless restrained by the power of an injunction.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. If that is true, then does not the gentleman think the individual members of the labor organizations would be as much in favor of the protection I am seeking for the public as any other citizen of the country?

Mr. BECK. No; if you ask me. I shall answer the question boldly and frankly. The chief proponents of this bill are the railroad brotherhoods, because they know that if this bill passes, they may potentially intimidate the business interests of the United States, including the transportation companies, and even the political Government of the United States.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Here is a division on a most important subject and I am frank to say that I do not know what are the facts. I have not been able to get them from this discussion to-day.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. I have been very much interested in what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just said concerning the brotherhoods of railroad workers, but in view of the fact that they in recent weeks have shown their patriotism by sticking to the railroads and taking a wage cut, I think we can trust them and other unions to stick by this.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. I am not thinking of the labor situation to-day. I have every confidence in the loyalty and patriotism of labor to-day; but what may occur 10 or 15 or 50 years hence?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, "Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small." Injunctions in labor disputes, which were tyrannical, which were an insult to American and Anglo-Saxon principles of liberty and justice, have at last so aroused the sense of justice of the American people that there is a demand for this bill to-day. After all, public opinion yet will control and rule this country. Maybe public opinion will not always arrive at exact justice, but if this bill to-day grants too much authority to labor, and if labor abuses that authority, public opinion will be against it. There is no organization or class of people who can safely defy public opinion. I know of no better proof of the fact that no one can be so powerful that he can safely defy public opinion than the fact that entrenched wealth became so powerful that it could walk down to a court and obtain an injunction which was tyrannical and an insult to justice, and now public opinion is resentful and is demanding this legislation to-day.

Shortly after the war the legislature of my State enacted what was known as the industrial court law. By government we were going to regulate wages. Let us see how it worked out. So long as there was a demand for labor, and, therefore, an opportunity for labor to obtain higher wages, the great industrial leadership of my State hailed that law with honor. Just as soon as there was an oversupply of labor and there was an opportunity to employ labor for less than it was worth, what was the leadership that went to the courts of the United States and destroyed that law? Was it labor? No. It was the employers.

We might as well be honest about it. In the case of governmental control over labor disputes during the last 10 years labor has not received a square deal, and we know that to be true. There is not a single citizen of the United States who would not resent being haled into court and told, "You have violated a decree of this court and you go to jail," the decree being an injunction which was not levied against him, but against John Doe, even though he never knew anything about it.

Some day and some time when the history of this country is written, some historian will obtain a copy of one of these tyrannical labor injunction decrees and will point out how far the courts went in excess of their rights and contrary to human liberty and righteousness. Injunctions enjoining a man from talking to his neighbor about anything which he may want to discuss, whether it be a strike or a labor dispute, or what not, is contrary to the true principles of liberty. If there were not a single laboring man in the United States asking for this bill, we should curb the power of the courts in granting these injunctions, upon the broad principle that such injunctions are a menace to liberty. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time, which is rightfully due to those opposing the legislation, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK].

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, I only avail myself of the courtesy of the ranking member of the Committee on the Judiciary to bring to the attention of the House this most important question, the construction which has been raised by the difference between the gentleman from New York, whose name this bill bears, and myself. If the gentleman is right, then in no respect could any labor dispute that involves interstate commerce be within this statute, and that as to all such labor disputes a court of equity has the powers that it enjoys in all other classes of cases and always has enjoyed in labor disputes. Then it must be admitted that the most serious threat to the industrial peace and prosperity of the American people is out of the case. But I am sure the gentleman is wrong about this, and I want to put it to him by this graphic illustration.

Suppose that the employees of the railroads of the United States, acting through their brotherhoods, asked for twice as much wage as they are now receiving. Let us suppose the railroads would say, "We can not do it. It would throw us into bankruptcy." A labor dispute is on. Let us suppose that thereupon the railroad brotherhoods start to tie up every railroad in the United States. Let us suppose then that the Attorney General of the United States, by direction of the President, enters a court of justice and asks that, first, a restraining order be granted for a short time, until all parties can be heard; and then a temporary injunction, pending the progress of the litigation, and, of course, after full hearing, if the case warrants it, a permanent injunction against the obstruction of interstate commerce. At once the learned judge will say, "I am confronted, Mr. Attorney General, by this clause of a bill recently passed by Congress":

> No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction upon the ground that any of the persons participating or interested in a labor dispute constitute or are engaged in an unlawful combination or conspiracy because of the doing in concert of the acts enumerated in section 4 of this act.

All of these acts, as has been determined repeatedly, are the appropriate and ordinary methods whereby a combination in restraint of interstate trade and in violation of the Sherman antitrust law has ordinarily been effected. Therefore the power of the Government itself to vindicate the freedom of commerce and to enforce the Sherman antitrust law is destroyed in courts of equity, and it is then relegated to whatever remedy it cares to exercise in the criminal court. Suppose you take section 7, "No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, as herein defined, except after hearing the testimony of witnesses," it refers to any dispute on any question and concerns any law by any litigant. If it be the Government itself, the courts of equity in that class of cases are to be forever stripped of their authority.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] says that because the Labor Board has some undefined powers of mediation that takes it out of this law. No court would ever say so, I venture to predict. They are absolutely put into a strait-jacket, and their powers as a court of equity are practically destroyed forever, except in cases of fraud and violence. In respect to them the remedy by injunction is so limited and hamstrung as to be largely ineffective.

Now you gentlemen can reconcile with your consciences as you will—and your motives are just as high as I claim for myself—the passage of this law. I rejoice that I was able to be in the House to-day to protest against it. I would protest against it as an impeachment of the sovereign powers of the United States Government in its own courts, if I were the only man here to do it. If I were the President of the United States and such a bill came before me, I would veto it if it were the last act of my political life. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remaining time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this bill comes as a protest and as a natural reaction against the abuse of power on the part of some of our Federal judges exercised in labor disputes. A great deal has been said in denunciation and in praise of organized labor. The persons who belong to organized labor are just flesh and blood. They are the same folks we are, no worse and no better. Working as they do for powerful organizations of capital, they have been compelled to organize in order to have a power great enough measurably to defend their status as free people. In the disputes between the aggregations of capital and the aggregations of working people the custom has grown up on the part of capital of invoking the injunction powers of the Federal courts. There is one very remarkable thing about this debate. One sitting in the galleries and listening to this debate would be justified in concluding therefrom either that we have no State courts or that this bill strikes down their equity powers. Why this bill? This is why: In instances so frequent that this bill has resulted, Federal courts have become courts to punish without that character of trial, without those safeguards provided for in American and Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence before punishment may be inflicted upon a citizen.

This bill comes as a popular protest and as an additional protection to American citizens against the abuse of the equity powers of the Federal courts. Labor is criticized and denounced in connection with the discussion of this bill. Labor is not responsible for this bill. The responsibility is upon those who invoked an abusive exercise of judicial power and upon those Federal judges who abusively exercised their powers. Gentlemen profess concern for our institutions. I am concerned also, but not so much as to what may come from without as I am concerned as to what may come from within.

One judge violating the fundamental laws of human justice can do more to establish bolshevism in this country than all the soap-box orators you can put on the streets. [Applause.] Governments that are just do not fall from attacks from without. The time of danger is when a government is tyrannical and unjust. I would rather see the agencies of government a little more cautious in the exercise of its extraordinary powers if it must err on one side or the other.

This bill seeks to remove from a few Federal judges in America the power to make this Government contemptible in its tyranny. There is a very remarkable thing about the attacks on this bill.

You would imagine from some of the remarks we have heard to-day that we do not have in this Government any States or any judges or any constabulary, nothing but the Federal Government. I take these few minutes to direct attention to that. Gentlemen would have you believe that if we were to strike down the equity powers of the Federal courts, there would be no judges left in all America who could exercise the equity powers. There are but two directions in which we may move—one is to continue as we are now going toward a great Federal bureaucracy or the other is back toward the States. We have reached the point at which we must turn back and reestablish in America popular government, government by the people. They will make mistakes, but we have no king. We have no hereditary nobility. We risk everything upon the ability of the people to choose officers fit to administer the powers of government. It was never intended and it never can be that the Federal Government shall dominate and overlord the States in our scheme of government save in connection with the loss of the ability of the people to govern. We have the Federal organization because it was found necessary by the States to have an agent to do for them certain things they could not do for themselves.

But always the States, the center and the source of governmental power, because they in turn alone are susceptible of popular control. This debate indicates that it is not only the popular notion but that it is held here on the floor of the House that this Government is resident in Washington and that some appointed persons must issue their edicts to American citizens, otherwise we have no government. Talk about bolshevism destroying this Government. That conception of government will destroy it. The time has come when the people of America must take back the powers of government from this great Federal bureaucracy if free government is to live. The people will make mistakes, but how are the people to preserve the ability to govern except by governing? God Almighty has a universal law. If you will not use your arm, strength departs from it. The fish in the Mammoth Cave have no eyes. People lose the power of governing when they yield that power to the great Federal bureaucracy at Washington and fail to do for themselves all of the things which can be done through those agencies of government which they control.

I do not want to take any more time of the committee this afternoon. One could not justify the taking of time on any assumption that this bill is in danger. I have used these few minutes to put into the picture the neglected, forgotten, discarded sovereign State, once the boast and the pride of our people and indispensable in any workable scheme of self-government. One of the considerations which has attracted my support to this bill is that it does tend to move us in the right direction.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. O'CONNOR). The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no court of the United States, as herein defined, shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, except in strict conformity with the provisions of this act; nor shall any such restraining order of temporary or permanent injunction be issued contrary to the public policy declared in this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On line 7 strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, we have to-day before us for consideration the Norris-LaGuardia injunction relief measure, which in my opinion is a very important bill.

I have been in the active practice of law for the past 20 years and have read many of the decisions growing out of the injunctions where injunctions have been enforced much to the abuse of those engaged in labor. In some cases it is not only unjust but exceedingly harsh.

The limitation of the jurisdiction of the Federal court to issue injunctions in labor disputes has been a subject for public discussion for many years. It is fair to say that public sentiment on the subject has reached the conclusion that some such limitation is absolutely necessary. Both of the great political parties in their last national platforms have promised remedial legislation upon the subject. The last Republican National Convention at Kansas City adopted a plank on the subject, as follows:

The party favors freedom in wage contracts, the right of collective bargaining by free and responsible agents of their own choosing, which develops and maintains that purposeful cooperation which gains its chief incentive through voluntary agreement. We believe that injunctions in labor disputes have in some instances been abused and have given rise to a serious question for legislation.

The Democratic National Convention at Houston, Tex., in its platform made the following declarations and promises for legislation on this subject:

(a) We favor the principle of collective bargaining and the Democratic principle that organized labor should choose its own representatives without coercion or interference.

(b) Labor is not a commodity. Human rights must be safeguarded. Labor should be exempt from the operation of antitrust laws.

(c) We recognize that legislative and other investigations have shown the existence of grave abuse in the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes. No injunctions should be granted in labor disputes except upon proof of threatened irreparable injury and after notice and hearing, and the injunction should be confined to those acts which do directly threaten irreparable injury. The expressed purpose of representatives of capital, labor, and the bar to devise a plan for the elimination of the present evils with respect to injunctions must be supported and legislation designed to accomplish these ends formulated and passed.

Chief Justice Taft, in the case of American Steel Foundries v. Tri-City Central Trades Council (257 U. S. 184), in passing on this case, said:

Labor unions are recognized by the Clayton Act as legal when instituted for mutual help and lawfully carrying out their legitimate objects. They have long been thus recognized by the courts. They were organized out of the necessities of the situation. A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer. He was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and family. If the employer refused to pay him the wages that he thought fair, he was nevertheless unable to leave the employ and to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment. Union was essential to give laborers an opportunity to deal on equality with their employer.

There was a time in the early days of this Government when even labor unions were not necessary in order for the laborer to protect his rights. For then the man who employed and the one who was employed worked side by side in performing labor. But when that condition was changed there became the necessity of organization.

I am very glad indeed that within the last few years there has been a very much better understanding between capital and labor than once existed in this country. These matters are now talked out and decided in a round-table discussion, without attempt to resort to anything drastic. This bill does not seek to prevent injunctions where they rightfully should be granted, but simply prevents an abuse of that discretion.

No injunction should be granted without notice to the party to be affected, and no injunction should be enforced by the court without a trial of the fact by a jury, unless it be for some conduct in the presence of the court in the trial of the case which would justify punishment. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. That request must be made in the House.

Mr. DYER. I amend the request, then, Mr. Chairman, and ask that all Members who have spoken on this bill to-day may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I would like to give notice now, if I may, that when we do get into the House, my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri, will concur with me in asking unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks on this bill.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], the chairman of the committee, whether or not it is the intention to proceed with the consideration of this bill and pass it before we adjourn to-day?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is our purpose if we can have the cooperation of the committee.

Mr. DYER. I may say that was my general understanding, and I also understood from the Speaker himself that the measure must be disposed of to-day.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I hope the committee will be willing to sit until we dispose of the bill.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

My distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], very resourceful and ingenious character that he is, made a statement to-day that I think can be taken as a text in support of the argument for the passage of this bill. The gentleman said that "some men can not stand power." It is because some men can not stand power that you are asked to-day to stop the abuse of power at the hands of these Federal judges who receive their appointment by some circuitous route or by some unknown agency and then become subservient to such agency. This measure is intended to curb the abusive power registered by certain Federal judges in the promiscuous issuing of injunctions arising out of labor disputes. It has application only to the inferior Federal courts of the Nation, and limits the jurisdiction and power of those inferior Federal courts. It has been contended by the opposers of this bill that it contravenes article 3, section 1, of the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore it is declared to be unconstitutional. Article 3, section 1, of the Constitution of the United States provides, "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." Provisions of this bill are merely limited by subdivision d of section 13, which reads as follows:

> The term "court of the United States" means any court of the United States whose jurisdiction has been or may be conferred or defined or limited by act of Congress, including the courts of the District of Columbia.

Certainly if the Congress has the power, which I claim it has, to establish and confer jurisdiction upon the inferior Federal courts referred to, it can not be questioned that it has the power to restrict or curtail the exercise of their powers as proposed in this bill. The Supreme Court of the United States construed this to be the law in Kline v. Burke Construction Co. (260 U. S. 226, 234 (1922)), wherein the court says:

> That only the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is derived directly from the Constitution. Every other court created by the General Government derives its jurisdiction wholly from the authority of Congress. That body may give, withhold, or restrict such jurisdiction at its discretion, providing it be not extended beyond the boundaries fixed by the Constitution.

If there be any serious doubt in the minds of the Members of the House as to the constitutionality of the legislation we are about to enact, may I refer you to the very able and scholarly brief presented in behalf of the American Federation of Labor by its counsel, James S. Easby-Smith, to the House Judiciary Committee. This brief can be found in the hearing before the Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, and discusses at length the limitation by Congress of the power to punish for contempt, and reviews the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in support of the constitutionality of this proposed legislation.

Section 2 of this act recites the declared policy of the United States Government with respect to the so-called "yellow-dog" contracts and is in harmony with the several progressive States of the Union which have enacted similar legislation.

Nothing is more despicable in the entire field of labor agreements than the so-called "yellow-dog" contract, which seeks to destroy the right of collective bargaining and attempts to coerce and control the freedom of the individual who signs such a contract.

I do not know how many Members of this House are familar with the operations of the so-called "yellow-dog" contract, nor whether any of you have ever been the victims of such contracts. If you will pardon a personal reference, I will take you back a quarter of a century ago and give you my experience. I was a member of a craft that worked from daylight to dark, 12 hours each day, in the region of the Great Lakes ports along the dock unloading the mammoth lake boats carrying iron ore from Duluth to Cleveland, and other lake ports. By the power and force of organized labor we were able to bring the working day from 12 hours down to 11 hours a day; and when in an effort to better our working conditions our union urged the employer to agreement by collective bargaining to a 10-hour work day, we were met with a flat denial and the alternative proposition of signing so-called contracts, which are known to-day as the "yellow-dog" contracts, which permit the employer to treat with the individual in each respective contract.

We were told unless we signed such a contract we could no longer be employed by the company for whom we had been working for years. Our organization believing in the principle of collective bargaining, its members refused to sign such agreements, hence the inevitable result was we lost our means of livelihood.

I have known of injunctions issued by Federal judges against the peaceful picketing by members of organized labor when engaged in a trade dispute to better their means of living. Many injunctions have been issued by Federal judges without notice, and individuals have been punished for contempt of court who were miles away from the scene of a labor dispute and who were denied the right of jury trial in these instances. So flagrant has been the abuse of power in the hands of certain Federal judges that the American press, as a whole, have repeatedly criticized the conduct of these judicial officers.

The passage of this measure defines and limits the jurisdiction of the courts sitting in equity with respect to labor disputes. It means that a new day for the working class of the Nation has arrived. This law will extend a ray of hope to the millions of those who toil in the sweatshops, factories, mines, and other industries of the Nation where human beings struggle in season and out, receiving low wages and working in many cases in unsafe and unhealthy surroundings. By the passage of this bill Uncle Sam gives to the struggling miners of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and the Western States the opportunity to organize and secure their distributive share of the earnings of the product, which they produce by the sweat of their brow. It will permit organization, without interference by the courts, of the textile workers of the South. There are places below the Mason-Dixon line where women and children work 12 hours during the night season. Little children of 10, 12, and 15 years of age are employed tending looms in their bare feet for a few cents a day. This condition has existed in the past because the powers controlling the courts in these respective districts are undoubtedly an influence in controlling judicial action.

In addition to protecting the working class of people in the country, this measure not only strengthens but insures free speech and the freedom of the press. Newspaper editors and magazine writers have felt the power of injunctions issued by many Federal judges in this country. Several of these news writers have gone to jail rather than submit to the tyranny of the judges and waive their "constitutional right" to disclose the despicable and horrible conditions that exist in the coal fields of Pennsylvania, and in the recent disclosures that appeared in Hardin County, Ky., and elsewhere.

A reference has been made to-day to the fact that a certain group of labor leaders are in attendance to hear the debate on this important subject. I did not know until somebody raised the issue as to their presence in the gallery. They have a perfect right to use the public Hall of Congress, and have a perfect right to lobby and petition their Representatives in an effort to secure a much-needed relief. You who are here from the industrial centers certainly can not criticize any activity organized labor may have registered in behalf of this bill, when you are aware that many of the captains of industry and manufacturers back home who are opposed to this legislation have used the long-distance telephone, written letters and sent telegrams urging you to destroy this measure because it would interfere, in their judgment, with the sacred right of contract, and informed you that it would be declared by the court to be unconstitutional.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK], the distinguished constitutional lawyer that he is, was fearful lest "a militant and vociferous minority might do damage if they secured the power ostensibly carried in this bill."

Let me say to my friend that it was through the efforts of this militant and vociferous minority that a campaign has been waged for the past quarter of a century seeking to secure legislation that would secure to the workers of this Nation the justice and the rights ordained to them by the Constitution of the United States.

I am grateful for this opportunity to express my convictions on the important subject now holding the attention of this House of Representatives to-day. I am willing to support this measure as it stands, excepting of course the committee amendments which will be presented and are merely corrective of certain language in various sections of the bill. I would urge that the House follow the example of the Senate, which had under consideration this identical measure last week and passed it in its present form without any material amendments being adopted. Labor's full right of association and freedom to bargain has arrived.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "that," insert the words "except where the United States Government is the petitioner."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to use any time except to call attention to the fact that my amendment would merely except the Government of the United States from the provisions of this bill.

I can not believe that this Congress will put the rights of 5,000,000 union-labor men above and superior to the rights of the Government of the United States and the other 100,000,000 people.

Under this bill, no matter how labor unions may tie up commerce and United States mails, and the business of the Government generally, the United States will have its hands tied and its feet hobbled and will not be able to go into the courts and obtain relief. I am not yet willing to surrender this power to labor unions.

I am one who still believes that the rights of the Government in protecting its 120,000,000 people are superior to the rights of any one class of persons. Is there anyone here who puts the interest of any class above the interest of the Government—the interest of all the people? I just put it up to the House. I have done what I conceived to be my full duty in opposing this bill. I have opposed it with all the vim and sincerity of my being. I am going to try to amend it so that the Government and the whole people may still have some protection. I know that my amendments will fail. I know that all amendments seeking to protect the Government will fail. I know that the bill will be passed, and there will be only a handful of Members voting against it. But I have shifted the responsibilities that rested upon my shoulders to the shoulders of the Members who vote for and pass this bill. They must assume the full responsibility for the serious, dangerous situations, which in the future, early or late, will surely arise. But some of these days, mark you, the great unorganized mass of Americans whose rights are wholly ignored by passing such class legislation are going to rise up in their might, and then beware.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and ask recognition. If the gentleman will refer to section 13, the definition clause of this bill, he will find there the following:

(b) A person or association shall be held to be a person participating or interested in a labor dispute if relief is sought against him or it and if he or it is engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation in which such dispute occurs, or has a direct or indirect interest therein, or is a member, officer, or agent of any association composed in whole or in part of employers or employees engaged in such industry, trade, craft, or occupation.

Then the (a) paragraph refers to associations or corporations. I do not see how in any possible way the United States can be brought in under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman did distinguished service during the World War under our flag. Is he willing, under the provisions of this bill, for the Army and the Navy to form a labor union and affiliate themselves with the American Federation of Labor and not permit the Government of the United States to preserve its rights?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, the Army and the Navy are not in a trade, craft, or occupation. Therefore, they could not possibly come under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not know what extensions will be made.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If we are going to be deluged with amendments, let me repeat what I read earlier in the afternoon from the front page of the New York Journal of Commerce of February 26, 1932. It is a short paragraph, but it is significant in its warning:

The enactment of anti-injunction legislation by both the Senate and the House of Representatives at the current session of Congress now seems likely. Opposed by large industries in the past, this legislation has been before Congress for 14 years. However, in its present form it is so complicated that it may be said to be beyond the comprehension of most of the legislators. This may give rise to an opportunity for amendments that will take the sting out of the legislation and make it more acceptable to finance.

Gentlemen, vote down the amendment if you are in favor of this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 21, noes 125.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BECK: After the words "public policy declared in this act," on page 1, line 9, add the following:

"Provided, however, That neither this section nor any subsequent section of this bill shall apply to any labor dispute which involves the suspension or discontinuance of a public utility whose continuous operation is essential to the property, health, and lives of the people of any State or community. In such cases where the welfare, health, or lives of a public are concerned who are not parties to such labor dispute, or where a labor dispute involves the obstruction of any instrumentality of interstate or foreign commerce, in such event the power of a United States court to grant injunctive relief in the interests of the public in accordance with the principles of equity jurisprudence shall not be denied or abridged, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment that it is not germane to the legislation before the House, and I would like to be heard upon it if necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the present bill refers only to disputes between employees and employer. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania brings in the public a purely penal provision for which there is adequate law and which it is not intended to repeal by the provisions of this bill. This is limited to matters between employees and employers. The public is fully protected by penal and other statutes not contemplated to be repealed by this bill.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be heard for a moment on the point of order. Here is a bill which proposes to strike down the power of injunction in labor disputes. The amendment seeks to classify labor disputes into two classes, one in which the outside public has no interest and only the interest of the employee and the employer is concerned and the other the class wherein the outside public has a very legitimate interest, in the continuation of a business which must be continued under the obligations of law covering public utilities. It seems to me that is a perfectly proper amendment in order to narrow the scope of the proposed legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is clearly an exception placed upon section 1, which provides that no court of the United States, as herein defined, shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction, and so forth. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania excepts from section 1 cases where the welfare and health of the public are concerned.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, I apologize for a third intrusion upon the patience of the House, but the importance of the matter may justify it. In the first place, I must express my surprise that anyone so militant and chivalrous as my good friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] generally is should have thrown out the threat that this revolutionary piece of legislation must be swallowed by every Member of this House without consideration even for a moment of amendments which operate perhaps to help the general purpose of the bill, and at all events are fair and reasonable and in the public interest.

I do not see that anything is gained by saying to this House "Vote down all amendments before you have even heard the amendments," because the worst you can say of a court of equity in the worst possible injunction case is not as bad as asking this deliberative body to reject an amendment before they have even heard it. [Applause.]

Now, I have said a great deal in this debate about the rights of the employer and the employee, but there has been very little said about the outside public, that in the last analysis are the people who chiefly suffer from labor disputes. They, sooner or later, as we all know, pay the bill. Therefore, in the case of a public utility, where the interests of the public rise far above the interests of either employer or employee, why is it not an unreasonable thing to say that, in respect to those great public interests with which the executive is charged with the solemn and sworn responsibility, this summary deprivation of a court of equity of the only method of bringing relief should be denied? I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. OLIVER or New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. How does an injunction start the railroads going again, for instance? Is it not a fact that if they start again they must start by using strike breakers? An injunction can stop violence against the property, but it does not affirmatively start the road.

Mr. BECK. In answer to the gentleman, I would appeal to the truth of history, that all great nation-wide strikes against railroads have been dissolved. The very moment that the nature of the obstruction to interstate commerce was presented to the court, and that, for the obvious reason that those who in many instances have sought to paralyze interstate traffic have never dared to come into court and show that they were not deliberately and willfully interfering with interstate transportation. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

I just want to call attention to the railroad labor act of 1926, which provides in the very beginning of the act:

First. It shall be the duty of all carriers, their officers, agents, and employees to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, and working conditions, and to settle all disputes, whether arising out of the application of such agreements or otherwise, in order to avoid any interruption to commerce or to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and the employees thereof.

Second. All disputes between a carrier and its employees shall be considered, and, if possible, decided, with all expedition, in conference between representatives designated and authorized so to confer, respectively, by the carriers and by the employees thereof interested in the dispute.

Third. Representatives, for the purposes of this act, shall be designated by the respective parties in such manner as may be provided in their corporate organization or unincorporated association or by any means of collective action, without interference, influence, or coercion exercised by either party over the self-organization or designation of representatives by the other.

Fourth. In case of a dispute between a carrier and its employees, arising out of grievances or out of the interpretation or application of agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, or working conditions, it shall be the duty of the designated representative or representatives of such carrier and of such employees, within 10 days after the receipt of notice of a desire on the part of either party to confer in respect to such dispute, to specify a time and place at which said conference shall be held.

Mr. Chairman, the law provides every detail for the settlement of disputes. Then, if all direct negotiations fail, the law establishes and maintains a permanent board of mediation. Now, in section 8 of this bill it is provided:

No restraining order or injunctive relief shall be granted to any complainant who has failed to comply with any obligation imposed by law which is involved in the labor dispute in question, or who has failed to make every reasonable effort to settle such dispute either by negotiation or with the aid of any available governmental machinery of mediation or voluntary arbitration.

So that there is the tie-up between the provisions of the railroad labor act and the necessity of exhausting every remedy to adjust any difference which might arise. The workers could not and would not think of going on strike before all the remedies provided in the law have been exhausted. If the railroads have complied, they would not, as has been suggested, be deprived of any relief which they may have in law or equity.

I submit that the amendment is not at all necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, there are sometimes occasions on the floor of this House when the most momentous issues are discussed and decided, and when sometimes some of us do not recognize that fact.

I think most of us to-day recognize that a change in our entire judicial procedure and form of government would be caused by the passage of this law, and we recognize the seriousness of the precedent that we shall establish.

It is reminiscent to me of an occasion when, upon the floor of this House in 1917, we had a discussion of the so-called Adamson law, when about 38 of us believed that it should not become the law of this land, and who to-day are confirmed in our belief that it was unwise legislation.

It is reminiscent of a day when in 1917 there was a declaration of war in this body for which I did not vote and which has caused untold misery to the people of this country, and which is not to-day so justified as it has been in the past. On this occasion we are changing the entire procedure of the Government, and its structure. I concede the honesty and fairness in the minds of some of the men who conceived the legislation, but I do not concede that the public has no interest in any disagreement between labor and those who employ labor.

If we do not adopt this amendment I know it will make it impossible for me to vote for the bill; and if we do not adopt it, we have gone back to the days when the capitalists said, "The public be damned," because that is what we have done if the amendment is not adopted. If we are going to say to the courts of this land that they shall have no power or authority, then we must say what shall take their place. If we say that the courts can not control the situation, we have then said we will change the jurisdiction of the United States marshal and will invoke the jurisdiction of the National Guard, because there will be lawlessness in the United States and there will be no remedy in the entire United States except to call out the National Guard. I do not want to see that time ever come.

I recognize the fact that there have been abuses in the use of injunctions. There can be no doubt of it whatever, but because there have been some abuses is no reason that we should say there shall be no courts, and that, therefore, the orderly conduct of business in the United States shall be purely in the hands of the executive branch of the Government, either the President of the United States or the governors of the respective States.

I can only say in conclusion that in my judgment if this amendment is not adopted, many of us will live long enough to rue the day that we changed the courts of the United States and inserted in their stead the rule of the machine gun and the bayonet. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not believe that by this bill we supplant law and order by the machine gun and violence. That is ridiculous. I earnestly ask, and the members of the Judiciary Committee who come in with a unanimous report earnestly ask, that you vote down this amendment, because you will take out of this bill all that is of value if you adopt this amendment.

The public is amply protected as the bill is now drawn. It is a mistaken notion that some have that all injunctions are proscribed. There still is left to the Federal courts the right to issue injunctions when there are unlawful acts threatened or committed, when substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property is done—and when there is no adequate remedy at law in all those cases, the Federal courts will still have the right to issue injunctions. When there is fraud, when there is violence, and when there is crime injunctions may issue. When any of those things are threatened or committed injunctions may ensue.

Nobody disturbs that right. It is a mistaken idea that some of the Members have that you are taking entirely away from chancery the right to issue injunctions in toto.

Why should the railroads and why should the public utilities be singled out for preferential treatment and exemption from the operations of the bill?

Text writers on the subject, every witness who appeared before our committee, those who appeared in favor of the bill and those who appeared in opposition to the bill, never said a word about any such exemption as the gentleman from Pennsylvania embodies in his amendment. They can not all have been wrong. The courts have chipped away, gradually but surely, all the worthwhileness of the Clayton Act. They set up exemption after exemption, exception after exception, until finally there was not left any vestige of right to labor in the Clayton Act, which at its passage was hailed as labor's bill of rights. Let us therefore refrain from setting up exemptions in this bill.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Is it not a fact that machine guns and the militia back up injunctions that are now issued by the courts?

Mr. CELLER. Indeed they do, and that is one of the reasons why we bring in this legislation.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. So the fact that you would not be able to issue injunctions except under the conditions mentioned by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] does not necessarily mean that machine guns would not still be there.

Mr. CELLER. I agree with the gentleman. I ask that the Members vote down this amendment.

Mr. GILLEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BECK) there were—ayes 63, noes 155.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Any undertaking or promise, such as is described in this section, or any other undertaking or promise in conflict with the public policy declared in section 2 of this act, is hereby declared to be contrary to the public policy of the United States, shall not be enforceable, and shall not afford any basis for the granting of legal or equitable relief by any court of the United States, including specifically the following:

Every undertaking or promise hereafter made, whether written or oral, express or implied, constituting or contained in any contract or agreement or hiring or employment between any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, and any employee or prospective employee of the same, whereby

(a) Either party to such contract or agreement undertakes or promises not to join, become, or remain a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization; or

(b) Either party to such contract or agreement undertakes or promises that he will withdraw from an employment relation in the event that he joins, becomes, or remains a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 3, in line 3, after the word "enforceable" insert the words "in any court of the United States."

On page 3, in line 5, after the word "any" insert the word "such."

On page 3, in line 6, after the word "court" strike out the words "of the United States."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in cases involving or growing out of any labor dispute to prohibit any person or persons participating or interested in such dispute (as these terms are herein defined) from doing, whether singly or in concert, any of the following acts:

(a) Ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment;

(b) Becoming or remaining a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act;

(c) Paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person participating or interested in such labor dispute any strike or unemployment benefits or insurance or other moneys or things of value;

(d) By all lawful means aiding any person participating or interested in any labor dispute who is being proceeded against in, or is prosecuting, any action or suit in any court of the United States or of any State;

(e) Giving publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, any labor dispute, whether by advertising, speaking, patrolling, or by any other method not involving fraud or violence;

(f) Assembling peaceably to act or to organize to act in promotion of their interests in a labor dispute;

(g) Advising or notifying any person of an intention to do any of the acts heretofore specified;

(h) Agreeing with other persons to do or not to do any of the acts heretofore specified; and

(i) Advising, urging, or otherwise causing or inducing without fraud or violence the acts heretofore specified, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 4, line 1, strike out the word "cases" and insert in lieu thereof the words "any case."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MICHENER: Page 4, line 23, after the word "fraud," insert a comma, strike out the word "or," strike out the semicolon after the word "violence," insert a comma and the following: "threats or intimidation."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane. The proviso is concerned with actual, tangible actions, to wit, fraud and violence. The amendment which the gentleman seeks to add deals with the state of mind or the spoken word, entirely distinct and separate propositions.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CONNERY). The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, section 4 provides, in substance, that the courts shall not issue a restraining order to prohibit, among other things—giving publicity to the existence of or the facts involved in any labor dispute, whether by advertising, speaking, patrolling, or by any other method not involving fraud or violence.

The only change suggested is to add the words "threat or intimidation," so that the prohibition in the section would not prevent the issuing of an injunction where fraud, violence, threats, or intimidation was involved.

I have talked with the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] about the matter. I submitted the amendment to him, and I hope he will agree to it. Of course, it is largely a question of what the word "intimidation" means. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] has suggested this definition:

Conduct intended to arouse fear or apprehension of violence.

I think this is the legal definition as given in Words and Phrases.

I am not offering this amendment as one hostile to this bill. I am going to vote for the bill. I am not opposing the bill. I am offering this amendment as one who believes he is friendly to the bill; one who believes it is an amendment that should be adopted in the interest of the things that the men who want this bill want to accomplish; and as an amendment which is fair, which is honest in every particular, and which can not reasonably, in my judgment, be opposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] or anyone else. I know how sincere the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is in this matter. I know how he feels about it. I know what he wants to accomplish in the matter, and I am not opposing his bill. I want to help the bill, and this is an amendment that will help it.

I hope the gentleman will accept the amendment.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman's amendment, in his opinion, do more than amplify the word "violence"? In other words, either with or without the amendment, if the gentleman were sitting as a court, would he not construe the words "threat and intimidation" as coming within the more general term "violence," so that the only possible objection that could be made to the amendment might be the claim that it is not necessary. Is it not, in substance, a clarifying amendment rather than an addition to it?

Mr. MICHENER. Possibly so, but I am sure this House does not want to pass any legislation that is going to do an unjust thing. I am sure the American Federation of Labor does not want an unreasonable or an unfair thing here. I am sure they want to accomplish the very things which this amendment would permit to be accomplished.

The sponsors of this bill should not hesitate to accept this amendment, because they surely do not want authorization of law to threaten and to intimidate, in order that they may accomplish their purpose. Public opinion always countenances an appeal to reason and will condemn any individual or group who asks legislation giving the individual or group especial permission to threaten or intimidate. I tell you, folks, we do not want a thing of this kind and the American Federation of Labor does not want it.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not a fact, in answer to what the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] has said, that violence means action or would be interpreted as some violent act, whereas intimidation or threat might be by word of mouth or in writing and yet would be very menacing?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is offering this amendment in absolute good faith. The gentleman, as he states, is friendly to the legislation and has been helpful in committee. The gentleman from Michigan called my attention to this proposed amendment this morning. He was most fair in informing me. At first blush, as you read it, the amendment would appear to be quite proper. I repeat that the gentleman is offering it as such.

I have since looked up court decisions on these same words, and in the face of the experience of the past with the Clayton Act and the decisions thereunder, it would be very unsafe to permit this amendment to go into the bill. If the gentleman from Michigan were the judge and were passing upon the meaning of the words "intimidation" and "threat," we would have no difficulty and there would be no danger of defeating the purposes of the bill, but let me read you from the decisions:

A simple request to do or not to do a thing made by one or more of a body of strikers under circumstances calculated to convey a threatening intimidation with the design to hinder or obstruct workmen, in violation of an injunction against the use of such means is no less obnoxious than the use of physical force for the same purpose. (Allis Chalmers v. Iron Molders Union, 150 Federal Reporter, 155.)

Intimidation is not limited to threats of violence or of physical injury to person or property. It has a broader significance. (Vegelohn v. Guntner, 44 N. E. 1077; 167 Mass. 92; 57 Am. St. Rp. 443.)

Under the decisions, Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Michigan it would be unsafe to write the amendment into the law. We are now forced to enact this legislation, to do what? To prevent just a few individual judges outraging decency and disregarding law, as they have been doing for the last 14 years, since the enactment of the Clayton Act. We can not, therefore, take any chances with language which might permit judicial abuse. I will say frankly that after consulting the author of the bill on the other side of the Capitol, and talking with men who have had actual experience and who have lived these last years under this situation, and after reading the decisions from which I have just quoted, I hope we will not impair the purpose of this legislation by loading it down in this manner.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Did not the gentleman, as a member of the committee, agree to the amendment in section 7 covering the situation of threats, and has not the gentleman omitted in section 4 to recognize that amendment and include it in this subsection (e) as in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], and also in subsection (i). I am not talking about the use of the word "intimidation" but the proposition about threats, which has already been incorporated in the bill as reported from the committee, and I submit that if the gentleman gives it a moment's thought he will agree that the proposition ought to be covered in this subsection and also in subsection (i).

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The subsection which the gentleman refers to has not the same significance as this would have.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The significance is the difference between a man killing another, and a man threatening to kill another.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Such a situation would not come under the provisions of this bill—the acts described by the gentleman are crimes and fully covered by the criminal law.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail, because in the construing of this phrase the courts have taken the opportunity to defeat the provisions of the bill. If anyone comes into court and claims that he has been threatened or intimidated, it is the easiest thing in the world to say that certain conditions prevail. It is a matter you can not establish, except by the opinion of the one who claims he has been intimidated.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. An examination of the precedents in this country and in the State and Federal courts will show that the word "intimidation" forms the basis of greatest abuse in labor injunctions. The cases seem to indicate that the word "intimidation" is not capable of exact definition, and hence the courts become laws unto themselves. There is no limit to what the judges embrace within the word "intimidation." If this amendment were adopted it would cover all sorts of peaceful and lawful actions. You would destroy "peaceful picketing," recognized universally as proper and lawful. Judges, however, have twisted evidence into strained meanings. They have on occasion prevented peaceful picketing as a result of so-called "intimidation." You already have sufficient safeguards in the bill. Do not add any more needlessly.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The gentleman's argument seems to be against the word "intimidation." Would he have any objection to the word "threats"?

Mr. CELLER. That would be subject to the same objection. It is just as intangible. It would simply give judges a pretense to destroy labor's rights. Vote the amendment down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. EATON of Colorado) there were 62 ayes and 161 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 6, after the word "fraud," insert a comma, strike out the word "or" and strike out the semicolon after the word "violence," insert a comma and the following: "threats or intimidation."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, after line 8, insert the following:

"(j) Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the issuance of an injunction to prevent injury to a business by threat to or intimidation of its patrons or customers to boycott the business."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON), there were 38 ayes and 142 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BECK: After the word "acts" in section 4, line 5, page 4, insert the following: "Except where said acts are performed or threatened for an unlawful purpose or with an unlawful intent, or are otherwise in violation of any statute of the United States."

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, if the enthusiastic majority will indulge me just for a moment or two, I shall not take the five minutes. I call attention to the vital character of this amendment. A strike in reference to industrial conditions or wages is certainly per se lawful, but a strike to accomplish an ulterior purpose, by the courts of this and every other country, is unlawful as, for example, a strike such as I instanced in England, where the political government was sought to be coerced by the threats of a wholesale suspension of transportation services. All I ask is, not that in labor disputes an injunction shall in all cases issue but that in labor suits where the acts are for an unlawful purpose or for an unlawful intent or in violation of any statute of the United States this immunity from the remedial powers of a court of chancery shall not be given.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 47, noes 143.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. No officer or member of any association or organization, and no association or organization participating or interested in a labor dispute, shall be held responsible or liable in any court of the United States for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, or agents, except upon clear proof of actual participation in, or actual authorization of, such acts, or of ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 5, line 17, strike out the words "and no association or organization."

Page 5, line 23, after the word "thereof," insert "and the liability of any such association or organization for unlawful acts of its members shall be similarly limited."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, as herein defined, except after hearing the testimony of witnesses in open court (with opportunity for cross-examination) in support of the allegations of a complaint made under oath, and testimony in opposition thereto, if offered, and except after findings of fact by the court, to the effect—

(a) That unlawful acts have been committed and will be continued unless restrained;

(b) That substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow;

(c) That as to each item of relief granted greater injury will be inflicted upon complainant by the denial of relief than will be inflicted upon defendants by the granting of relief;

(d) That complainant has no adequate remedy at law; and

(e) That the public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property are unable or unwilling to furnish adequate protection.

Such hearing shall be held after due and personal notice thereof has been given, in such manner as the court shall direct, to all known persons against whom relief is sought, and also to those public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property: Provided, however, That if a complainant shall also allege that, unless a temporary restraining order shall be issued without notice, a substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will be unavoidable, such a temporary restraining order may be issued upon testimony under oath, sufficient, if sustained, to justify the court in issuing a temporary injunction upon a hearing after notice. Such a temporary restraining order shall be effective for no longer than five days and shall become void at the expiration of said five days. No temporary restraining order or temporary injunction shall be issued except on condition that complainant shall first file an undertaking with adequate security sufficient to recompense those enjoined for any loss, expense, or damage caused by the improvident or erroneous issuance of such order or injunction, including all reasonable costs (together with a reasonable attorney's fee) and expense of defense against the order or against the granting of any injunctive relief sought in the same proceeding and subsequently denied by the court.

The undertaking herein mentioned shall be understood to signify an agreement entered into by the complainant and the surety upon which a decree may be rendered in the same suit or proceeding against said complainant and surety, the said complainant and surety submitting themselves to the jurisdiction of the court for that purpose. But nothing herein contained shall deprive any party having a claim or cause of action under or upon such undertaking from electing to pursue his ordinary remedy by suit at law or in equity.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 6, line 9, after the word "been," insert the words "threatened or," and in line 10, page 6, after the word "restrained," insert "but no injunction or temporary restraining order shall be issued on account of any threat or unlawful act except against the person or persons, association, or organization making the threat or committing the unlawful act or who actually authorized it or ratified it after actual knowledge thereof."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment by Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: In line 12 of the committee amendment strike out the word "except" and insert the word "excepting."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman think that it carries out the intent better to substitute the word "excepting"? I think the phraseology carries out the intent with the word "except."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. My own judgment is that it is not very material, but the bill as it comes from the Senate has the word "excepting," and it seems to me there is a little shade of difference that makes the word "excepting" preferable.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the other committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 20, after the word "security," insert the words "in an amount to be fixed by the court."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Page 8, line 8, after the word "security," insert the words "upon a hearing to assessed damages of which hearing complainant and surety shall have reasonable notice."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMNERS of Texas to the committee amendment: Page 8, line 8, strike out the word "assessed" and insert in lieu thereof the word "assess."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MICHENER: Page 7, line 7, after the word "to," insert "the chief of those public officials of the county and city within which the unlawful acts have been threatened or committed," and strike out the remainder of line 7 and all of line 8 down to and including the colon after the word "property."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I call especial attention to this amendment. The bill as drawn provides that before an injunction may issue in any of those cases you must first give notice to all of the public officials anywhere who may be responsible for the protection of the property or person. Now, that would be a physical impossibility. We would at least have to commence with the governor. You would have to serve notice on everybody all the way down. The amendment provides that notice must be served on the chief law officer of the county, who would be the sheriff, for instance; also upon the chief of police, for instance, in the city where the trouble is. There can be no exception to that amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, we consent to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Amend section 7, subdivision (e), page 7, line 15, by striking out the sentence, "Such a temporary restraining order shall be effective for no longer than five days and shall become void at the expiration of said five days," and insert in lieu thereof "Such a temporary restraining order shall be effective for no longer than five days (and shall not be renewed if, in the judgment of the court, unjustifiable delay is sought by plaintiff) and shall become void at the expiration of said five days unless extended by order of the court for good cause shown."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I will not take the time permitted, but this is simply to cure a condition that might arise in some cases. For instance, a court might be unable to take the matter up because engaged in some other important matter at the time. That is about the only excuse he could have for not taking up the matter. It is to give the court a sufficient number of days, a few additional days, if needed, in connection with the expedition of the business of the court.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield.

Mr. McKEOWN. If a temporary restraining order is issued, if it is not renewed, it will die of its own effect. This limitation of five days is to stop the habit of judges issuing these restraining orders and then refusing to hear them and letting them stand. After a restraining order is issued, when it is renewed it becomes a temporary injunction. I think the language offered by the amendment puts the bill in better shape.

Mr. DYER. It is only to extend it a day or so in case the facts warrant. There is no attempt to secure an improper delay. However, I submit the amendment.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The language as it is now written is, in my judgment, a better situation, because after a temporary restraining order is issued, when it is renewed it becomes a temporary injunction. The gentleman changes the situation. If it is only five days, that is without notice, and it should not be continued longer than that time until they have an opportunity to be heard. I appreciate what the gentleman is attempting to do. The gentleman thinks that a situation might arise where five days might not be sufficient, but it is enough on an injunction without notice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the court can very easily gage himself accordingly?

Mr. McKEOWN. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. Suppose something very important was taking place in that court and the judge could not get to it, and suppose all the parties interested were agreeable that it should be laid over for two or three more days?

Mr. McKEOWN. That does not prevent him making the order.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I submit the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking a question, which can be answered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] or the chairman of the committee.

Section 8 relates to restraining orders, and I want to ask whether or not the provision which has just been read about temporary restraining orders for five days qualifies the provisions of section 8. In other words, section 8 requires certain things to be done as conditions precedent to the granting of injunctive relief. There might be emergencies where it would be impossible to meet these conditions. The question is whether or not the qualifications set forth as to temporary injunctions apply to section 8, where a temporary injunction might be asked, where it might be impossible to move to settle a dispute by negotiation or with the aid of any governmental machinery, mediation, or voluntary arbitration referred to in section 8.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The answer to that is simple. In seeking a restraining order a party believed to be aggrieved comes into court and under a certain state of facts, which are enumerated in the bill itself, asks for a restraining order. If time has not permitted him or the corporation to avail itself of the existing governmental machinery for the settlement of a labor dispute, he recites that as one of his facts, which is full compliance, of course, with the provisions of section 8, which makes it a condition precedent that every remedy must be exhausted to settle the strike before the injunction will issue.

Mr. THATCHER. Then if he pleads that in his bill, setting up the state of facts, he would get the temporary injunction?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. No restraining order or injunctive relief shall be granted to any complainant who has failed to comply with any obligation imposed by law which is involved in the labor dispute in question, or who has failed to make every reasonable effort to settle such dispute either by negotiation or with the aid of any available governmental machinery of mediation or voluntary arbitration.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The chairman of the committee indicated a little while ago that he was rather particular about the language of this bill. I notice in line 17, page 8, the words "has failed." The gentleman means "shall have failed," does he not?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. CROSSER. In line 19, the language should read "who shall have failed" instead of "who has failed"?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. CROSSER. And in line 18, the language should be "which shall be involved" instead of "which is involved."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That makes it better, but I think it is all right as it is.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. In all cases where a person shall be charged with indirect criminal contempt for violation of a restraining order or injunction issued by a court of the United States (as herein defined), the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the contempt shall have been committed: Provided, That this requirement shall not be construed to apply to contempts committed in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to interfere directly with the administration of justice or to apply to the misbehavior, misconduct, or disobedience of any officer of the court in respect to the writs, orders, or process of the court.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 9, line 21, strike out the word "where" and insert the words "arising under this act in which."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the bill as passed by the Senate is as originally contained in the bill now before you. The committee amendment restricts the purpose of the section. In other words, the Senate bill is sufficiently broad to embrace and take care of all criminal contempt cases and also such contempt cases that have become known as the "press" cases. I personally am in favor of the broader section. That is, I am in favor of the section as amended by the Senate. I deem it my duty to call your attention to it. If you are in favor of the Senate provision, which is broader and takes care of the "press" cases, the vote is against the committee amendment; but if you are in favor of the committee amendment, which restricts the provision, then the vote is in favor of the committee amendment.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Of course, the gentleman understands this bill is primarily a labor bill, and without the amendment, of course, we put in the newspaper cases as to free speech. While I am heartily in favor of the newspaper proposition, does not the gentleman think that ought not to be tangled up in this act?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman states the case correctly.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: Page 9, line 21, strike out the words "this act" and insert in lieu thereof "sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 of this amendatory act."

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, the reason for offering this is simply that when we make this amendment this becomes the judiciary act and the intent is to confine this limitation to the provisions of this act. By enumerating the sections there is no question about the limitation. I hope the amendment will be accepted.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. May I ask this question: This bill, if made law, will be an addition to the Judicial Code?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Exactly.

Mr. MICHENER. It in no wise amends any provisions of the Judicial Code other than to the extent that this is an addition and deals with a specific thing. This deals with labor disputes between individuals, not where the Government is involved. It is my notion that under this bill the Government can function with an injunction, if that is necessary in order to carry out the purpose of the Government. I should like to see this clarified, but I want to go on record as saying that under my interpretation of this bill the Federal Government will not at any time be prevented from applying for an injunction, if one is necessary in order that the Government may function.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. That is not involved, really, in the amendment. The amendment which I am offering is simply to clarify and define to what particular sections of law this limitation refers, and it was not the intention it should refer to injunction matters, outside of labor disputes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. It is not the purpose of this legislation to include any other class of matters except matters of labor disputes.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. And this makes it definite and defines what it alludes to.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. SPARKS. Is not the purpose of the bill to provide limitations for the granting of injunctions?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. SPARKS. And it is not possible under the provisions of this bill to create the basis for the allowance of injunctions.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. As it stands now it might include injunctions in other cases. Therefore the amendment is to define exactly to what this limitation applies.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON].

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 9, line 22, strike out the word "indirect."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 9, line 23, strike out the words "for violation of a restraining order or injunction issued by" and insert the word "of."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 10, line 3, strike out the word "requirement" and insert the word "right."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 10, line 3, strike out the words "be construed to."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Amend section 11, page 10, line 8, by changing the period to a comma and adding the following: "nor to contempts committed in disobedience of any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command entered in any suit or action brought or prosecuted in the name of or on behalf of the United States."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, the only purpose of this amendment is to take out these criminal contempts or trial-by-jury injunctions growing out of the antitrust law or what are known as the padlock cases. There are some 40,000 injunctions so far issued in prohibition matters which are referred to as padlock cases, and while not a great many, there are some in connection with the antitrust law, and this is to except from the provisions of this bill cases of that kind.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, we have just taken care of that situation by a committee amendment. We have fortified the committee amendment by the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON], and now as the section is, it is limited to acts arising under sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 of this amendatory act. So that by the wildest construction of the bill it could not apply to the cases which the gentleman has in mind, and we should vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. The defendant in any proceeding for contempt of court is authorized to file with the court a demand for the retirement of the judge sitting in the proceeding, if the contempt arises from an attack upon the character or conduct of such judge and if the attack occurred otherwise than in open court. Upon the filing of any such demand the judge shall thereupon proceed no further, but another judge shall be designated in the same manner as provided in case of the approval of an affidavit of personal bias or prejudice under section 21 of the Judicial Code. The demand shall be filed prior to the hearing in the contempt proceeding.

The following committee amendments were read and agreed to:

Page 10, line 10, after the word "court," strike out the words "is authorized to" and insert the word "may."

Page 10, line 17, strike out the words "provided in the case of the approval of an affidavit of personal bias and prejudice under section 21 of the Judicial Code" and insert the words "is provided by law."

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. When used in this act and for the purposes of this act—

(a) A case shall be held to involve or to grow out of a labor dispute when the case involves persons who are engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation; or have direct or indirect interests therein; or who are employees of the same employer; or who are members of the same or an affiliated organization of employers or employees; whether such dispute is (1) between one or more employers or associations of employers and one or more employees or associations of employees; (2) between one or more employers or associations of employers and one or more employers or associations of employers; or (3) between one or more employees or associations of employees and one or more employees or associations of employees; or when the case involves any conflicting or competing interests in a "labor dispute" (as hereinafter defined) of "persons participating or interested" therein (as hereinafter defined).

(b) A person or association shall be held to be a person participating or interested in a labor dispute if relief is sought against him or it and if he or it is engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation in which such dispute occurs, or has a direct or indirect interest therein, or is a member, officer, or agent of any association composed in whole or in part of employers or employees engaged in such industry, trade, craft, or occupation.

(c) The term "labor dispute" includes any controversy concerning terms or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms and conditions of employment, or concerning employment relations, or any other controversy arising out of the respective interests of employer and employee, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee.

(d) The term "court of the United States" means any court of the United States whose jurisdiction has been or may be conferred or defined or limited by act of Congress, including the courts of the District of Columbia.

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 12, line 2, after the word "terms," strike out "and" and insert "or."

Page 12, line 2, after the word "employment," strike out "or concerning employment relations, or any other controversy arising out of the respective interests of employer and employee."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. If any provisions of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 12, line 11, after the figures "14," strike out lines 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, and insert the following: "If any part of this act is unconstitutional or otherwise invalid, the remaining part of the act shall not be affected thereby."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make this pro forma amendment for the purpose of directing the attention of the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] to the fact that the Christopherson amendment to section 11 was limited to sections 3, 4, 5, and 6. It therefore would not cover any situation which might arise under section 7. If you will look at section 7, you will find that it is also a section vesting or defining jurisdiction in the United States courts and is concluded with a proviso which is the part of the bill vesting jurisdiction in the court to issue temporary injunctions. In no other part of the sections 3, 4, 5, or 6 is such authority designated. Therefore it conclusively appears that if it is the purpose of the proponents of this bill to make any change in the law concerning contempts which might arise in connection with the granting of a temporary injunction, section 7 ought to be included in the amendment. I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw my pro forma amendment and that the Christopherson amendment be amended so as to read:

In line 21, on page 9, there be inserted between the words "under" and "this" the words "sections 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 of."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. May I again direct your attention to the committee amendment which was adopted in line 9 on page 6, which is in the first clause of subsection (a) of section 7, where by the insertion of the word "threatened" you made section 7 of the bill, at least, extend to threatened unlawful acts as one of the causes upon which an injunction might be issued. You will notice that this amendment permits a judge to issue an injunction if he finds that "unlawful acts have been threatened or committed." When I spoke upon the Michener amendment proposed to subsection (e) of section 4, I directed your attention to the fact that the method of the use of threats ought to be included with the method of the use of fraud and violence in the excepting portion of that subsection. I also directed your attention to the necessity for including the word "threats" with the words "without fraud or violence" in subsection (i) of said section 4. As you now have this bill, by section 7 a court may find as a fact that unlawful acts have been threatened, but by section 4 (e) no court shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction to prohibit in a labor dispute, giving publicity to the existence of or the facts involved in any labor dispute by any method involving threats of fraud or violence; and by section 4 (i) no injunction may issue to restrain the advising, urging, or otherwise causing or inducing the acts specified without threats of fraud or violence. The text may be involved. There is a double negative. But this thing is certain: No matter what may be the meaning of the words used, "threats" are entirely omitted from every effect of the section, and not merely as stated in the two subsections designated. I listened to the explanation given about the use of the word "intimidation." Not a word was said about the use of the word "threat," as I now recall the debate. Again, I say, look over this whole bill again and see if you will not agree that section 4 ought to recognize threats of fraud and violence as well as acts perpetrated, which come under the proper definition of the words "fraud and violence," and have the bill amended before final passage.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the committee rises.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CONNERY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5315) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes, and, under House Resolution 166, he reported the bill back to the House with the amendments adopted by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them en bloc. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I am.

The SPEAKER. Is any member of the committee opposed to the bill? If not, the gentleman from Texas is recognized and the Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose at the proper time to ask unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill, a similar bill, and to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman should ask unanimous consent to do that now and it should prevail, it would cut out the motion to recommit. After the motion to recommit is voted upon, then unanimous consent can be granted to consider the Senate bill.

The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instruction to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment, to wit: On page 1, line 3, after the word "that," insert "except where the Government of the United States is the petitioner," and on page 1, line 9, add the following:

"Provided, however, That neither this section nor any subsequent section of this bill shall apply to any labor dispute which involves the suspension or discontinuance of a public utility whose continuous operation is essential to the property, health, and lives of the people of any State or community. In such cases where the welfare, health, or lives of a public are concerned who are not parties to such labor dispute, or where a labor dispute involves the obstruction of any instrumentality of interstate or foreign commerce, in such event the power of a United States court to grant injunctive relief in the interests of the public in accordance with the principles of equity jurisprudence shall not be denied or abridged, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division, and pending that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Nine Members, not a sufficient number; and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes, 17, noes 255.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 935, strike out all after the enacting clause, and substitute the provisions of House bill 5315.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I call the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] to the fact that that would make every provision of the Senate bill in order on this bill for consideration by the conferees when the bill goes to conference. There is a provision in the Senate bill which I do not think my colleague from Texas approves of, which would destroy the force and effect of several thousand pending padlock cases that are now in force and effect in the United States. I am hoping that my friend from Texas does not approve of that provision of the Senate bill. Mr. Speaker, I object to the request.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 362, nays 14, not voting 56, as follows:

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. PERSON, is unavoidably absent. He has asked me to announce that he is in favor of this legislation and that if he were present he would vote "aye" on this roll call.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. REID of Illinois, is ill at home. He asked me to say that if he were present he would vote "aye."

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. COCHRAN, is necessarily absent. He has asked me to say that if he were able to be present he would vote "aye" on this bill.

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. MAGRADY, is absent on account of illness. He has asked me to state that if he were present he would vote "aye" on this bill.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to announce that the following Members are unavoidably absent on important business and if present they would vote "aye": Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. GREGORY, Mr. CARY, Mr. BRIGGS, Mr. MAY, Mr. SPENCE, Mr. VINSON of Kentucky, Mr. DIETERICH, Mr. SABATH, Mr. IGOE, Mr. CARDEN, Mr. GRIFFIN, Mr. DOMINICK, Mr. GILBERT, Mr. ROMJUE, Mr. PATTERSON, Mr. COLLIER, Mr. RAGON, Mr. BLOOM, Mr. LAMNECK.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I announce that my colleague the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. RAGON, is absent because of the critical illness of his brother. If here, he would vote "aye" on this bill, which is the child of the brain of the great commoner, William Jennings Bryan.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] may prevail. I want to support the injunction bill in recognition of my conviction that at times there has been abuse of the injunction power, and I want to correct the situation so that this power may not be applied excepting in the interest of the public good. With the adoption of the amendment that has been offered or a somewhat similar amendment that has been discussed this afternoon I should support the measure. Without some such provision I can not support it, for, in my judgment, the measure itself would then become an instrument that would work injury most of all upon its most earnest proponents—the men of our country who are engaged in manual labor, and on their families.

The effect of the proposed amendment would be to leave with the Federal court the power of injunction only when issues arise that involve the essential operation of activities for the protection of property, health, and lives of the people of any State or community. Surely in such cases, where the welfare, health, or lives of the public are concerned, no party to a dispute can be benefited by placing these elements in jeopardy. As I see it, the question involving these factors can arise only, or at least chiefly, in populous centers. Here is where the breaking down of the service of some public utility might work irreparable injury upon millions of people. Food supplies might be cut off; fuel supplies might be prevented; conditions might well arise that would mean unmeasured loss of life and health and property. No one and no cause could be benefited through such conditions. The public has an interest that must be protected.

But some one has said that this amendment affords exemption to private institutions performing public utility service. This statement as such can not be true. The very language of the amendment negatives the assertion, because it provides that the injunction power may be exercised only when the suspension or discontinuance of a public utility is essential to the property, health, and lives of the people of any State or community.

In my judgment, the ones who will suffer most in event this amendment may not prevail will be those who most of all should receive the thoughtful attention of this body. I refer to the children and to the populations who have no great financial means. I refer to the populations who are poor. Under conditions that would witness the breakdown of public utility institutions serving a populous center the people of wealth could arrange for their families to be sent to areas where the question would not be a problem; where the question of warmth would not arise; where foods and needs of all kinds readily could be provided. This would not be true for the millions of some of our cities, as they are to-day dependent upon the constant and steady maintenance of channels that supply fuel and food and necessaries of life. To protect these people, this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, througout the ages it has been the aspiration of the affluent to perpetuate possession, the aim of the powerful to continue control of the influential to perfect and make permanent their ascendancy. Suppliance has always paid court to authority. These are human responses to instincts of self-interest.

The right of might and riches was accepted as demonstrated and sequential until the appearance on the horizon of our own great country and its doctrine of human rights and human equality. It was fully half a century before its judicial system came to understand the right of toil and brain to equal rating with rights of property; and even then it required more than another half century for the light of the conception to gain widespread understanding.

It has been only in the last decade that legislatures have found a way of expressing this equality in statutes. Only five States have placed upon their books the declared policy that toilers shall not be subjected to economic inequality through the duress of necessity. I am proud to observe that my own State is one of those which has legislated to invalidate the authority of the employer to subject the employee by force of circumstance to agree to refuse to associate himself with his fellows for mutual benefits and improvement.

Until comparatively recently the employer has actually asserted a property right in the divided action of his employees, and courts have supported that contention. The intent of the employee to benefit himself by united action has actually been adjudicated a conspiracy against his employer. The employer has assumed an attitude of beneficence and benefaction over those whom he employed, as if there existed as a result of that employment a unilateral rather than a bilateral obligation of benefit, and that the employee was the sole debtor. Such a contention is insupportable in any logic except that upon which autocracy finds its justification and basis.

Such logic demanded an attitude of supplication of the worker before the employer. He was and is expected to-day in extensive circles to accept the benefactions of employment with gratitude upon whatever basis his employer grants.

It has been the practice and aspiration of industry to continue to appraise its market, buy its material, and arrange its other costs by bargain, and, finally, to grant to labor what it felt a reasonable profit would permit, the employer, of course, appraising the reasonableness of the profit. Labor has never had a voice in the final equation of cost and price, except as it has been the beneficiary of competition under rare and unusual circumstances, such as those which obtained during the World War and for a short time during 1928 and 1929. With modern mechanization of industry a surplus of labor has been displaced from employment and thus made a competitor for each job, making improbable the return of the conditions of these periods at any early era.

The doctrine of high wages as the economic means of righting distribution and keeping the economic and industrial machine in motion has been abandoned in recent months and the demand of the industrialist has turned to lower and lower wages, urging Government to follow his example.

Centralization of industry and business in great units prohibits the energetic and ambitious workman of this age his former recourse of creating for himself the job that was wanting in the employ of another. The great corporations have set the workman off as a separate element in the production equation. He is procured only when he is needed, and then only at the rate which the entrepreneur's judgment finds that functionary will find an assured profit.

The workman is found haphazard, is forced to compete in the most drastic fashion with his fellow worker, to play his abilities against those of other workers in the most prodigal and damaging way.

There is a grim humor in the flood of petitions of employers' associations coming here against the abrogation of their privilege to forbid their employees to associate with each other for identically the same reasons the employers are associated together. If they are to have the privilege of union for mutual interest and action, why not the workman who toils at the benches in their factories? If they need united action, why do not the still further disintegrated defenses and forces of their employees need it more?

The whole contention resolves itself to the benefits of the right of free contract. But is it a free contract when the lesser of the contracting interests is under the duress of economic necessity?

Economic force is just as real and certainly as effective as is physical force. It has all the elements of physical force. It is just as punishing, even more so, than is the force of the law of the jungle. Its pains are just as great, its wounds just as painful, its scars just as deep and lasting as are the scars and wounds of warfare. The trace of the saber's blade is no more hateful than the memory of malnourished days. Neither has the dispiriting effect of destitute dependents.

Where is there a duress, a force, a club like the appeal of a hungry child? Freedom of contract will come when the employee meets the employer upon a ground of equality in bargaining and an equality of service to each other, both recognizing its benefits. Whether such a Utopia between a buyer and a seller is rationally to be hoped for is questionable. We can only so hope by daring to do so.

It is irrational, certainly, to call a contract made under the duress of economic necessity a contract of freedom. It is to outlaw such a contract that this legislation is designed. The signing of such a contract under the necessity of food and shelter is a penalty levied by the employer in violation of all the rules of equity. Such a levy of necessity is equaled only by the usurer who lends at an exorbitant rate under exactly parallel circumstances. Nearly every State has enacted a law frowning upon the usurer, and the Federal Government approves such legislation. Why not outlaw its sister offense against justice?

The abusive use of the labor-dispute injunction is another offense against the rules of equity. Its significance is arrived at only when one realizes the damage done to the workman's property right in his services to an employer. I am not challenging the recognized principle of right of combination, and that for the purposes of combination human labor shall not be considered a commodity of commerce. Every human being is a going concern. His right to sell his services and his right to be fully informed and to inform his competitor of the conditions of such a sale should not be denied him.

This is not a proposal that the employee should exercise unrestrained privilege of duress upon the employer by a threat to damage or destroy his property. This bill does not grant such privileges. I should not support it if it did.

There is a tendency for those opposed to workers' associations to point to examples of violence upon their part as evidence of their menace. Violence has not been indigenous to one side of such disputes. It has marked the actions of both sides and under the restraints and inhibitions exercised against labor, I submit there is certainly as much justification for labor to lose its "sweet reasonableness" in these circumstances as for employers to do so.

The practice of the courts in outlawing commonly inoffensive and ordinarily legal actions by injunction and making felonies of misdemeanors by the same device is indefensible. There is no right of a court to legislate for advantage of one side of an industrial dispute, even though it may usurp such authority and make its usurpation prevail. Exercise of a power does not make it a right. If it did, might would seldom be in error.

Courts have forbidden workers in wage disputes to exercise such constitutionally guaranteed rights as attendance at Divine worship.

There is only one just way for the agency of society to arbitrate such rivalries and disputes; that is, by demanding fair and open justice to both sides. The suppression of open assembly and the denial of the right of free speech and free press, surreptition and repression are not the devices of free and democratic government. That form of government can have only one instrument of judgment, and that is free discussion and arriving at agreements just to the interests of both parties to such disputes as well as to the public interest.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, organized labor has cause for rejoicing in the passage by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the anti-injunction bill, after years of effort on their part to obtain such legislation.

For years the American working people have felt a keen sense of injustice because corporations have resorted to the wrongful use of injunctions in labor controversies, and have suffered mentally and materially through what they firmly believe was the unjust application of the injunctive process.

The right to organize is nullified when people are prohibited from exercising their economic strength and from appealing to other workers to join with them in a common cause.

Because of the injustices and the abuse of power on the part of some of the Federal judges this legislation was enacted; and if, on the other hand, labor organizations or their sympathizers will unscrupulously violate the intention of this act, they will in no uncertain terms draw the same condemnation to these practices from the great American people, so much so as the far-reaching injunctions heretofore issued and now the issue of rebuke.

Both great political parties in the last national convention took a definite stand in favor of the passage of this legislation, which would give relief from the evils and wrongs brought about by the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes.

The Republican platform said in part:

We recognize that legislative and other investigations have shown the existence of grave abuse in the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes.

The Democratic platform said:

We believe that injunctions in labor disputes have in some instances been abused and have given rise to a serious question for legislation.

It can be truthfully said that the adoption of this legislation by the Congress of the United States is a triumph for organized labor, and it will be squarely up to the working units of America to preserve that victory.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to those of us who for many years have viewed with increasing alarm the abuse of the process of injunction in labor disputes to find that a bill to curb that abuse has received the almost unanimous approval of the Senate and is now destined to receive the overwhelming support of this body.

The unanimity with which this measure is being supported not only gratifies me, but, I am frank to say, surprises and even puzzles me. When Members representing constituencies in which the elementary principles of collective bargaining are still in doubt, and in which workers find in their struggle for better conditions the employers and also frequently the agencies of government arrayed against them, enthusiastically approve this measure, I begin to wonder and to doubt whether all that the bill aims to accomplish will in fact be achieved. It has been almost a revelation to see so many of our friends from those sections hit the sawdust trail.

Let me say, at the very outset, that what is proposed by this measure regulates the abuses of which we complain, but does not abolish them. No restraining order will be granted in the future, except in exceptional cases, without notice to the defendant and a hearing in open court of the testimony of sworn witnesses on both sides. When issued without such a hearing, or notice, the court will first have to take testimony under oath rather than by affidavit, and such an order is effective for only five days. Provision is also made to remedy the abuse that has grown up of holding officers and members of unions liable for damages for the acts of other members without proof of participation or direction or ratification of such acts. There are also other desirable changes.

I would prefer the abolition of the injunctive process rather than its regulation, so far as labor disputes are concerned. The evils that have brought us face to face with the seriousness of this problem have arisen from the usurpations of judges, and since it will remain with these judges to regulate themselves I am none too confident that we shall not find as time goes on that the evils will creep in again.

To avoid that possibility a statement of policy is included, but such statements have not been very effective in controlling the judges in the past. When the Clayton Act was passed Congress thought that it had accomplished all that is sought by this measure, but in the hands of the courts we learned that our policy and theirs differed widely—and theirs prevailed.

It may be that at this stage of our efforts, and bound by restrictions that are already in the laws and decisions, we shall not be able to do better than make this attempt once more. It has been pointed out that there are only 11 States in which the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes is restricted by laws similar to the one we now have under consideration. In the rest of the States actions brought in the State courts to restrain the legitimate activities of organized labor in time of strike will still be available to the enemies of labor. And it has also been pointed out that the enactment of this bill will not take away from the Federal Government any rights which it has under existing law to seek and obtain injunctive relief where the same is deemed by Government officials to be necessary for the functioning of the Government.

In other words, a tremendous field in which the injunction can still be used effectively will remain after the enactment of this bill. We may, even under this act, be confronted with the kind of an injunction which Judge Wilkerson issued against the striking shopmen at the behest of the then Attorney General Daugherty. And that, by the way, was one of the most flagrant cases of the abuse of the injunction in many years.

The gravest danger, of course, is the construction which the courts will place on the various provisions of this measure. We know from experience that the more things are legislatively changed the more they remain judicially the same.

When the Clayton Act, intended to restrict the Federal chancellors' power along the lines we now have in mind, was enacted after many years of agitation it was referred to by the venerable president of the America Federation of Labor at that time, Samuel Gompers, as the "Magna Charta" of labor. President Wilson said that it gave to the "workingmen of America veritable emancipation." It seemed that labor had achieved its purpose to organize without interference, to strike for better living conditions, and to exercise the same rights which corporate wealth had always exercised.

Yet the number of injunctions against labor has increased since 1914, when the Clayton Act was passed. In October, 1919, at the instance of the Attorney General of the United States, Judge A. B. Anderson, of the Federal district court in Indiana, issued without opinion a remarkable decree forbidding a threatened strike, and there has been a steady flow of injunctions from Federal courts ever since.

What happened was this:

The Supreme Court of the United States, passing on section 20 of the Clayton Act, which, so far as the workers were concerned, was the meat of it, held that the act was intended to be merely declaratory of what always was the best practice. And since it changed nothing, the court proceeded then, and other courts have proceeded since, to decide cases the way they always had.

Between 1916 and 1920, in 13 cases in which opinions are reported, lower Federal courts applied section 20 of the Clayton Act. In 10 of these cases, the statute was held not to stand in the way of an injunction. This surprising result, as one noted authority has pointed out, was achieved by the courts by applying two independent and inconsistent constructions: First, that the section did not change the previous rules of law; second, that the section did create new privileges but extremely limited in scope.

I do not propose to go into these decisions at this time, but just how the law was emasculated is illustrated by the following instance, which is typical of the judicial mind: Picketing, the court held, indicated a militant purpose, inconsistent with peaceful persuasion. It would be better if the pickets were to be called, the court said, "missionaries." It does not sound as militant. Having taken the militancy out of picketing, the court proceeded to decide how many were to engage in the picketing, where they were to stand, what they were to do, and so forth.

We think—

The court said—

that the strikers and their sympathizers engaged in the economic struggle should be limited to one representative for each point of ingress and egress in the plant or place of business * * *; that such representatives should have the right of observation, communication, and persuasion, but with special admonition that their communications, arguments, and appeals should not be abusive, libelous, or threatening, and that they shall not approach individuals together but singly * * *.

And since, in all questions that arise as to whether certain language is abusive or is actually used at all, as to whether the pickets act singly or together, whether they threaten or not, are questions of fact, all an employer needs is a sympathetic judge to determine the facts, and the strikers are enjoined.

These were some of the dents which the court made in the law. Other courts made other dents. The net result was that we were back at the same old stand, witnessing precisely the same kind of abuses in the issuance of injunctions, and suffering the same oppressions from judge-made law which we had suffered in the past.

If anything, the judges, many of them, became worse. Injunctions were issued that would deny the members of labor unions who are strikers the benefit of dues or of reserves made up of their funds which they themselves had contributed for periods of economic struggle. Officers of unions were denied the right to extend such benefit to the members who were out on strike.

There were injunctions forbidding workers to strike. There were injunctions enjoining those in sympathy with the strikers from furnishing food and medicine to babies of miners during a strike. One of those injunctions was issued by Judge Parker, whom President Hoover subsequently sought to elevate to the Supreme Court of the United States. Fortunately for the Nation and for those who work for a living, an alert group in the Senate blocked the effort.

Injunctions have been issued forbidding workers the constitutional right even to confer with each other on common questions and problems arising out of their employment. The strikers were not allowed to appeal in possession suits where they lived in company dwelling houses, and in some mining towns the company owns not only the mines but the stores from which the workers purchase their necessities, the schools in which their children obtain their education, the newspapers which the workers read, and even the ground on which stand the churches in which the workers worship.

There have been injunctions denying striking workmen the right to meet in their churches and sing hymns and join together in worship, because these places were in close proximity to the property where a strike was in progress. One Federal judge enjoined the singing by strikers of the hymn "Onward Christian Soldiers," because the feeling engendered by the singing of that hymn created a sense of solidarity and devotion to a common cause which would strengthen the determination of the strikers to continue the struggle.

Not only did the terms of these injunctions reach unbelievable proportions in their denial of elementary constitutional and civil rights but the manner in which these injunctions were issued and the proceedings which were brought for their alleged violation were equally high-handed. The judge whose order or decree had been violated, if, in fact, it had been violated—and in many such instances the violation of the decree was the only course a self-respecting American could pursue—became the prosecuting officer, the jury, and the judge all rolled up in one.

He was the complainant, he was the prosecutor, he judged the facts without a jury, convicted the accused, and sentenced him to jail for contempt of court. And these judges, setting at naught the most precious rights which ages of progress and struggle had made the heritage of all, expected the people to have anything but contempt for them and their orders.

It is possible in a civil suit involving only a few dollars to have a trial by jury, but a man could be sent to jail upon the whim of a judge without a jury trial.

What is important to observe is that the injunction in labor disputes is an American institution, pure and simple. In 1895 the Supreme Court of the United States for the first time in its history passed on the validity and scope of an injunction in a labor dispute. The next year it became one of the major political issues. "Government by injunction" was the slogan by which the Democratic platform of 1896 inveighed against the practice of issuing labor injunctions. After 1908 the Republican Party also proposed the correction of abuses due to judicial intervention in labor conflicts.

It is just 36 years since this became an issue. Every effort so far to settle it, and settle it right, has been nullified again by judicial decision and judicial legislation. I hope that we are nearer a solution to-day. Perhaps the unmistakable declaration of policy contained in this bill will help, or help more than such declarations have helped in the past.

In this measure it is proposed to deal also with a twin evil, the "yellow-dog" contract, as it has been very appropriately called. I am particularly glad that we are united in seeking to outlaw—at least to the extent that we can do so, which is in the Federal courts—this abominable product of autocracy in industry. Wisconsin in this, as in so many other fights for social and industrial reform legislation, has been a pioneer, and it was the first State to make the "yellow-dog" contract illegal and unenforceable in our State courts.

The "yellow-dog" contract usually requires the worker to agree not to join a union, or if he is already a member, to leave the union; that his employer may fire him without notice, but that he can not leave without notice to the employer. Such contracts usually provide, also, that all conditions of labor, hours and terms of employment are entirely within the determination of the employer.

If there is any difference between the conditions imposed upon a worker by such a contract and a condition of involuntary servitude or peonage, I do not know what it is.

Yet, in the Hitchman case the Supreme Court of the United States gave equitable protection to these agreements by enjoining employees who had subscribed to them, even when employed merely from day to day and not for a definite term. Assisted by this and subsequent decisions, employers have exacted from workers these agreements, and they have been pretty generally sustained.

In our efforts to outlaw these agreements, or to make them unenforceable, we shall run the danger of meeting the argument on which a good deal of judge-made law rests, namely, that there is a "liberty of contract" which is basic under our Constitution, and that in attempting to determine what contracts shall or shall not be made the Government is invading the sanctuary of our liberties.

The fact that industrial progress has made this ancient doctrine of liberty of contract a myth, so far as actual conditions are concerned, has not prevented the courts from resorting to it when social legislation was involved. Thus, in its decision nullifying the minimum wage law for women, the Supreme Court of the United States predicated its view on the same doctrine.

This doctrine presupposes that the girl who seeks a position in a department store, and the owner of that store deal with each other on terms of equality. She is free to work or not to work; he is free to employ or not to employ her.

Or, to take another illustration, that a worker seeking employment with the United States Steel Corporation and the manager, acting for the corporation, deal on terms of equality. One who still believes that will believe anything.

The fact of the matter is that the worker who needs a job—without which job he and those dependent on him are doomed to die—is not in quite the same position as the employer, who may have a thousand others ready to take the same position.

If we are to approach intelligently and act justly in the consideration of our industrial and social problems a realization of the tremendous changes that have come about and the recognition that new truths have made ancient truths uncouth are essential. To speak of "liberty of contract" in the way our forefathers did is to leave all that has intervened from their day to ours a vacuum, from which we have learned nothing and forgotten nothing.

I am confident that the House is acting with a knowledge that vast industrial changes require equally vital changes in terms that might be revered for their ancient history, but which have no application to modern conditions or modern life. If the courts, when they come to pass on our efforts, will disclose the same realization we shall not find ourselves again with this problem on our hands at some future date. At least, the problem of injunctions in labor disputes and "yellow-dog" contracts will have been removed from the arena and we can then take up other questions. I hope that the overwhelming sentiment by which we shall now declare ourselves on this public policy will not be without its effect on the courts.

COMPARATIVE PRINT OF BILL TO PROVIDE REVENUE, EQUALIZE TAXES, ETC.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing on House Concurrent Resolution No. 28 and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina submits a privileged report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 28

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a comparative print of the bill (H. R. 10236) entitled "To provide revenue, to equalize taxation, and for other purposes," as reported to the House by the Committee on Ways and Means on March 8, 1932, showing the changes proposed to existing law, be printed as a House document; and that 8,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the House document room, and 2,000 copies for the Senate document room.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

JOINT CONFERENCE ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks to include a declaration of principles announced by the unemployment conference in St. Louis.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the declaration of principles of the Joint Conference on Unemployment held in St. Louis, Mo., March 1, 1932. The matter referred to above is as follows:

A reversal of policy by the President and the Congress in dealing with the unemployment problem is hereby recommended, after a careful study of the facts, by the Joint Conference on Unemployment, in session Tuesday, March 1, 1932, at the Hotel Statler, St. Louis.

The relief measures so far sponsored by the President and adopted by the Seventy-second Congress show a tendency on the part of the present administration to attack the crisis by giving relief at the top strata, that of big business, rather than at the bottom strata, where are millions of unemployed men and women.

Only by beginning the relief work at the bottom, we believe, can the gross injustices of the machine age be terminated and this country be restored to a reasonably permanent state of prosperity with employment for all.

Let us keep in mind that the unemployment problem, while intensified by the economic depression now in its third year, existed long before that depression; that in those years of the Coolidge administration chronicled as the most prosperous years in the history of this country between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000 workers were involuntarily idle.

We hold that the first rights in this country are human rights—the rights of its approximately 120,000,000 people—and that those rights must be protected by the capitalistic system if it is to endure. Greed has developed the erroneous idea that people have little excuse for living except in so far as they can serve business. Business must learn that it properly is the servant and not the master of the people, and that the welfare of the people must come first and profits, if any, later.

The founders of our country dedicated the Stars and Stripes to liberty and justice—to the idea that all men are created with equal rights and consequently that upon all territory under that flag there shall be so nearly as possible equal opportunities for all and special privileges for none.

Yet machinery, which should have lightened the burden of men and women generally, has had the effect of throwing an alarmingly large percentage of them out of employment and of concentrating most of the wealth of the country in the hands of a few people.

Several governments previously thought stable have been overthrown, largely if not entirely through economic adversity reflected from the present world depression; which depression, in the opinion of many nations, began in the United States. While our Government may not be in any immediate danger, we believe that depressions so destructive in their nature are inexcusable, if it is humanly possible to prevent them.

Even when confined entirely or largely to one country, such as the United States, depression with its business failures, lost savings, lost jobs, broken family ties, starvation, disease, and death impresses us as a greater plague in many respects than war.

Distribution in the form of a shorter work week—perhaps five days of six hours each—of such employment as there is in a machine age appears to us to be the only sound way to start the machines and keep them running, so must eventually come, we believe, for selfish if not altruistic reasons. Thus we feel all the power of greed can not prevent machinery from ultimately lightening man's burden—giving him more leisure for public affairs, advancement in arts and sciences, spiritual development, and recreation.

But it required more than a decade of bitter warfare in industry to cut the work day from 10 or 9 to 8 hours. It seems probable that the severe depression of the early nineties could have been averted had the 8-hour day then been in effect. Only by action of the Federal Government can the urgently needed reduction in the work week be accomplished in time to serve in the present emergency. Let us have this adjustment quickly and peaceably rather than by further delay in the matter invite a starving and undernourished multitude to resort to force.

An amendment to the Constitution empowering the Congress to regulate the work day and the work week and establish a minimum wage would pave the way for the solution of the unemployment problem in the United States. It is obvious that, no matter to what extent the work week may be shortened, the pay of the worker must be sufficient for the support of himself and his dependents. Otherwise, too, he and his dependents can not consume their fair share of the products of machinery and so help to guard against another surplus of manufactured goods, and, consequently, another period of unemployment and depression.

Even without awaiting the enactment and ratification of a constitutional amendment, the Congress could provide a shorter work week (perhaps five days of six hours each) for all Government employees, without reduction in salaries and wages. Such action would serve as an example which many business concerns would be certain to follow. Already several large corporations have the 6-hour day in operation.

Then there should be a safety valve, or safety valves, to take up the slack. Such a valve might be:

1. Unemployment insurance.
2. A Government program of national improvements.

With employment for most of the people most of the time unemployment insurance could function on a sound basis, just as do life, fire, and casualty insurance. The insolvency of unemployment-insurance funds in England resulted from an excess of unemployment all the time.

A Government program of national improvements could include reforestation; waterway, water-power, road, and park development; drainage and irrigation projects; and construction of public buildings, bridges, viaducts, etc., and provide employment for all comers at a moderate wage per day; such program to be carried out in a leisurely way, over a long period—perhaps 20 to 50 years.

It would not be necessary to limit the selection to one plan. There could be two or more safety valves, affording a man or woman out of a job a choice of avenues of unemployment relief.

Any such plan or plans would require Government financing and direction. The simplest and most equitable means of such financing, and even of meeting Government deficits such as the present, would be the issuance of bonds redeemable out of inheritance and gift taxes and heavier surtaxes on very large incomes. Such practice, while securing the necessary revenue, would solve the problem of concentrated wealth.

The inheritance tax should be greatly increased and the gift tax should be revived, it to equal the inheritance tax and be surrounded with ample safeguards, including a provision whereby any sum paid for property or service beyond a reasonable valuation thereof should be held to be a gift.

Old-age, disability, and mothers' pensions are needed, as are means of providing employment for able-bodied men and women dependent upon themselves, who are being refused employment by large corporations because of the age limit for employment, which is apt to be any where from 40 to 45 years, and in some instances is as low as 35 years. Perhaps the Government could favor the older men and women in allotting jobs and use its influence to have State, county, and city governments do likewise. The sources of revenue above suggested could yield the Government sufficient income to pension the aged and the disabled.

The employment in the United States of children under 16 should be prohibited by law.

We believe that prompt action by the President and the Congress along the lines herein suggested will enable the capitalistic system to serve all the people, or at least most of them, instead of merely a few of them.

REPORT FROM COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have until 12 o'clock to-night to file two reports on bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman inform the House what bills the gentleman refers to, so that the Members may know what bills are about to be reported?

Mr. MEAD. They are two or three bills recommended by the Postmaster General raising revenue, which will be on the calendar to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. But can not the gentleman give us the number of the bills, so that we can have them to-night and examine them before the session to-morrow?

Mr. MEAD. I will be glad to give the entire list of bills to the gentleman, but I do not have it here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Only these two bills?

Mr. MEAD. Offhand, I can not recall the numbers.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman expect to take up the full afternoon to-morrow?

Mr. MEAD. We hope to get through as soon as possible. It will be determined by the activity of the Members in indulging in debate.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask the majority leader what he expects to take up later, if the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads only takes a small part of the time to-morrow afternoon?

Mr. RAINEY. If the next committee is not prepared to go ahead, I think it might be advisable to take up the rule on the irrigation bill.

Mr. SNELL. What I am anxious to find out is whether the Committee on the Public Lands will be called to-morrow; and if so, whether that committee expects to bring in the bill establishing a national park in the Everglades of Florida?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not able to answer that question. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. May the Chair suggest to the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York that if they hope to pass the rule referred to to-morrow, to-morrow being Calendar Wednesday, they ask unanimous consent now that at some time to-morrow it may be in order to offer that rule.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that at some time to-morrow it may be in order to take up the rule providing for a moratorium in connection with certain irrigation payments. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it would seem to me that would be rather bad policy unless it is definitely understood that some of the other committees do not want to go forward with their work. If, after the completion of the bills brought in by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, no other committee desires to go forward with its work, I should not have any objection to the taking up of that bill.

The SPEAKER. If unanimous consent is granted, of course, it would be within the discretion of the Chair to determine when the Chair would recognize the chairman of the Committee on Rules to take up that particular bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, would the granting of the unanimous-consent request as put by the Speaker take the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads off the floor some time during the middle of the afternoon, before the completion of its business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not be inclined to take the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads off the floor.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, this bill would be taken up if there were plenty of time after the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had finished its business.

The SPEAKER. That would depend upon the action of the House to-morrow. Of course, if that committee should run until late in the afternoon the Chair would hesitate to recognize anyone for that purpose. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

LIMITATION OF INJUNCTIONS

Mrs. PRATT. Mr. Speaker, I was not in the Chamber at the time the vote was taken on the anti-injunction bill. If I had been here, I would have voted "yea."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HARE (at the request of Mr. MCMILLAN), for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. MURPHY (at the request of Mr. CABLE), for an indefinite period, on account of sickness.

To Mr. ROMJUE (at the request of Mr. FULBRIGHT), on account of death in his family.

To Mrs. KAHN (at the request of Mr. CURRY), for three days, on account of illness.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1861. An act authorizing the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to print and distribute additional sets of the writings of George Washington;

S. 2985. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Connecticut River State Bridge Commission, a statutory commission of the State of Connecticut created and existing under the provisions of special Act No. 496 of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, 1931 session, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Connecticut River; and

S. 3132. An act to extend the times for the commencement and completion of the bridge of the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad, in said county, in the State of Minnesota, and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg, in said county, in the State of North Dakota, across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAINEY.. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 9, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

MOTION TO DISCHARGE COMMITTEE

February 23, 1932.

To the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

Pursuant to clause 4 of Rule XXVI, I, ROBERT S. HALL, chairman Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, move to discharge the Committee on Rules from the consideration of House Resolution 117, entitled "A resolution providing for consideration of H. R. 4650, a bill to provide for the aiding of farmers in any State by the making of loans to drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, counties, boards of supervisors, and/or other political subdivisions and legal entities, and for other purposes," which was referred to said committee January 20, 1932, in support of which motion the undersigned Members of the House of Representatives affix their signatures, to wit:

3887. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the clerk of board of supervisors, San Francisco, Calif., opposing reductions in Army appropriation bill before present session of Congress; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 9, 1932

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou infinite source of life and love, who art perfect in holiness, yet boundless in mercy; forgive our manifold transgressions of Thy righteous law which Thou hast written in our hearts and bathe the soul of this Nation in the dew of Thy grace as in the renewing fountains of the eternal dawn. Remove the cloud of sorrow that overshadows us with poignancy of grief and grant that the Nation's sympathy may comfort those who keep love's holy vigil in anguished hours of waiting, till in Thy love and mercy the blessed child is restored once more to the loving hearts and aching arms of those in whose behalf we offer up united prayers.

Comfort all who mourn and are oppressed, raise up all who are fallen, heal and restore the sick, pierce with Thy love every lingering hate, that evil may be done away and that we, Thy children, may live the true life of to-day, unwounded by the arrows of unhappy yesterdays, looking unto Thee in perfect trust for to-morrow's golden peace. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar days of Monday, March 7, and Tuesday, March 8, when, on request of Mr. FESS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. McKELLAR. The junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] is detained on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GEORGE. My colleague the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] is still detained from the Senate because of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GLASS. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is absent in attendance upon the disarmament conference at Geneva.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is necessarily out of the city.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5315) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 28) to publish a comparative print of the bill (H. R. 10236) entitled "The revenue bill for 1932" as reported to the House, showing the changes to existing law, as a House document, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1861. An act authorizing the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to print and distribute additional sets of the writings of George Washington;

S. 2985. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Connecticut River State Bridge Commission, a statutory commission of the State of Connecticut created and existing under the provisions of Special Act No. 496 of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, 1931 session, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Connecticut River; and

S. 3132. An act to extend the times for the commencement and completion of the bridge of the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad, in said county, in the State of Minnesota, and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg, in said county, in the State of North Dakota, across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. JONES presented a petition of sundry citizens of Olympia, Wash., praying for the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by Cherokee Lodge, No. 370, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Parsons, Kans., favoring the passage of Senate bill 2793, providing for the Federal regulation of motor-vehicle traffic, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BARBOUR presented resolutions adopted by the Rotary Club of Hackensack, N. J., favoring the passage of the so-called Patterson-Cochran bill, making kidnaping or abduction a Federal crime, with capital punishment therefor, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a memorial, in the form of a resolution (containing 341 signatures), of members of the South End Woman's Christian Temperance Union and other citizens of Houston, Tex., remonstrating against the proposed resubmission of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution to the States, and favoring the making of adequate appropriations for law enforcement and education in law observance, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BROOKHART presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Sharpsburg and vicinity, in the State of Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for the closing of barber shops on Sunday in the District of Columbia or other restrictive religious measures, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALCOTT presented petitions and papers, in the nature of petitions, of the Leagues of Women Voters of New Haven and West Hartford, and sundry citizens of Westport, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by groups of the Polish National Alliance of Derby and Stamford, in the State of Connecticut, favoring the passage of legislation providing that October 11 in each year be proclaimed General Pulaski's Memorial Day, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a letter, in the nature of a petition, from the Windsor (Conn.) Chamber of Commerce, praying for the passage of the so-called Hayden bill, being the bill (S. 1663) to prohibit the sending of unsolicited merchandise through the mails, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented memorials and papers, in the nature of memorials, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Yalesville and Meriden, and Norden Lodge of the International Order of Good Templars, of New Britain, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the proposed resubmission of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution to the States, or the modification or repeal of the Volstead Act, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from District No. 2, Department of Connecticut, the American Legion, New Haven County, Conn., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Unit of Campilio-Holmes Post, No. 123, the American Legion Auxiliary, of Rocky Hill, Conn., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties, and also the establishment of a World War Veterans' Committee of the Senate, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by the American Fruit and Vegetable Shippers' Association at Chicago, Ill., opposing the Government engaging in any or all forms of business enterprise in competition with the people, and favoring the placing of motor truck and bus transportation under reasonable regulation, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the American Fruit and Vegetable Shippers' Association at Chicago, Ill., favoring a substantial and immediate reduction in governmental expenditures, and the holding of the heads of the various departments strictly responsible for the accomplishment of greater economy and efficiency in the use of public revenues, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE TRAFFIC IN NARCOTIC DRUGS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by the Kiwanis Club of Troy, N. Y., favoring the prompt ratification of the Geneva convention to limit the manufacture of dangerous narcotic drugs.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by the Kiwanis Club of Troy, N. Y., on March 3, 1932

Whereas the Geneva treaty convention of 1931, negotiated by delegates from 57 nations, limits the manufacture of dangerous narcotic drugs to the amount required for legitimate and scientific purposes, and prescribes measures of national control necessary for carrying out the provisions of the convention; and

Whereas the illicit narcotic drug traffic, through world-wide smuggling operations and its armies of drug addict slaves, is extorting from society annually hundreds of millions of dollars, laying upon mankind an incalculable economic burden and a tragic burden of suffering, degeneracy, and crime, endangering the public health, the public morals, and the public safety, menacing the foundations of modern civilization: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the illicit narcotic drug traffic should be placed in the same category as piracy and destroyed, and to this end we petition the Congress of the United States for prompt and effective action in the necessary ratification of the Geneva convention and enactment of legislation for its enforcement, and we also petition the Legislature of the State of New York for the enactment as soon as practicable of an adequate defense law to put into operation the full police power of the State.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I present a letter from the Miami (Fla.) Woman's Club, inclosing a resolution on the subject of the World Court, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MIAMI, FLA., February 25, 1932.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the regular meeting of the board of directors of the Miami Woman's Club, I was instructed to send to you the inclosed resolution and to ask you to give this matter your especial attention in order to hasten the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations in bringing the matter of the World Court before the Senate at the earliest possible date.

Trusting that you will take favorable action in this matter, I am,

Very truly yours,

Mrs. F. H. WOOD,
Corresponding Secretary Miami Woman's Club.

Resolved, That the Miami Woman's Club, of Miami, Fla., requests the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate to report out the World Court protocols at its earliest opportunity in order that the United States Senate may place the subject of the World Court on the calendar and take action thereon.

THE MIAMI WOMAN'S CLUB,
By Mrs. HICKS ALLEN, President.
By Mrs. STEPHEN C. SINGLETON, Secretary.

(Copy of resolution passed at the regular meeting of the Miami Woman's Club, of Miami, Fla., February 23, 1932.)

PROPOSED FEDERAL GASOLINE TAX

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I present a letter from Hon. A. Harry Moore, Governor of the State of New Jersey, protesting against the imposition of a Federal gasoline tax. I request that the letter may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
March 4, 1932.

Hon. W. WARREN BARBOUR,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to protest against the imposition of a Federal tax on gasoline. This is a subject of taxation by the States, and for the Federal Government to impose this tax would interfere very seriously with New Jersey as well as with other States.

Just at present we are in need of funds as much as, or even more so, than the United States Government, and an additional tax by the Government would be disastrous.

On behalf of the State of New Jersey I wish to enter a vigorous protest against the levying of such a tax at this time.

Very truly yours,

A. HARRY MOORE, Governor.

PROPOSED SALES TAX BILL

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Baltimore Sun of this morning relating to the pending or proposed tax bill.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun, Wednesday, March 9, 1932]

A REVOLUTIONARY TAX BILL

In the effort to repair the wreckage which a $900,000,000 deficit last year and a threatened deficit of $3,000,000,000 this year are causing in Federal finances, the Ways and Means Committee has framed a new revenue bill in which the manufacturers' sales tax is by all odds the most important single levy.

We have had numerous increases in the income tax before and we have had stiff estates taxes buttressed by a gifts tax before. What we have never had is a general sales tax, and the inauguration of such a levy is a fiscal landmark comparable in importance with the adoption of the first constitutional income tax in 1913. In the one case as in the other, an important new source of revenue is opened up for Federal exploitation, the potentialities of which are likely to play an important part in our fiscal history for many years to come.

But whereas years of agitation preceded the adoption of the income-tax amendment and the income tax itself (years in which the merits and the demerits of the tax were carefully canvassed) the manufacturers' sales tax springs full grown from the Jovian brows of the Ways and Means Committee. Three months ago it was scarcely considered as a potential source of Federal revenue. To-day it forms the backbone of the Budget-balancing tax bill and is expected to produce the astounding sum of $595,000,000 in the very first year of its operation.

When it is recalled that the income tax was introduced in a modest form that yielded only $71,000,000 in the first year of its existence, the debut of the manufacturers' sales tax appears the more impressive. If a 2¼ per cent tax can safely be expected to bring in nearly $600,000,000 a year with business conditions what they are, what might not such a tax produce in a normally prosperous year such as we had in 1928? And what would be the result if the rate were to be doubled?

If it were not for the urgent emergency with which the Treasury is confronted, the introduction of such a drastic tax on such short notice would be unthinkable. Not only does it open up enormously productive potentialities. It also relegates to a secondary position income as a measure of the taxpayer's capacity to pay and makes consumption the principal basis of Federal taxation. It was to escape just such an emphasis on consumption that the income tax was adopted.

The only possible excuse for such an abrupt change in the direction of our tax policy is that the revenues needed to balance the budget can be obtained in no other practicable way. On this point the members of the Ways and Means Committee, after exhaustive investigation, are satisfied. But it must be remembered that in arriving at this conclusion the Ways and Means Committee ruled out of consideration any attempt to legalize 2.75 per cent beer and to levy a special excise on that particular beverage.

Whether they have accurately assessed the temper of Congress and of the country in this regard remains to be disclosed when the issue comes up on the floor of the House. It is safe to say that if such a beverage could be legalized and subjected to a tax, the general sales tax would lose much of its claim to inevitability. It also goes without saying that if, under the eighteenth amendment, we had not surrendered the right to tax the admittedly huge business in spirituous liquors, there would be no need for the sales tax at all.

However, if the beer tax does not materialize, the general sales tax may in the end have to be accepted.

But it is at least worth while to canvass the situation again in the debates in the House and Senate. And, should the manufacturers' sales tax in the end prove inevitable, it ought to be accepted with a full recognition of all the drawbacks and all the enormous potentialities it may entail.

Patterning our proposed tax after the Canadian levy, the Ways and Means Committee has done everything possible to prevent the pyramiding which constitutes the vice of the sales tax as administered in France and in other countries where it occupies an important place in the revenue system. Under the Canadian system and under the one to which we propose to adhere all manufacturers doing a business of $20,000 a year or more would be licensed, and sales from one licensed manufacturer to another would not be taxable. The tax would accrue only where some licensed manufacturer sold to some unlicensed person, or, in other words, to some person not a manufacturer. This arrangement has effectively prevented pyramiding in Canada, and it may reasonably be expected to do the same here.

But while pyramiding of taxes may be prevented by the licensing system, it can hardly be expected to prevent a moderate amount of pyramiding of prices. Under a system in which the tax accrues whenever a manufacturer sells to a distributor, the distributor's cost will be the manufacturer's price plus the tax. And since the distributor figures his profit on the basis of his own cost his profit with the tax in effect will be figured on a sum two and one-quarter per cent larger than would be the case if the tax were not there. For example, if a manufacturer's selling price for a specified article is $100, the distributor's cost price would be $102.25, and the distributor's profit would be figured on the latter sum.

Similarly, where a distributor sells to a retailer the retailer's cost price will be advanced as a result of the tax by an even larger percentage, with the result that the final selling price under the tax may easily be 5 per cent or more above what it would otherwise be.

Under the existing Canadian system the price increases appear to have been accepted without outcry. Since the tax is assessed against the manufacturer and not against the retailer, it is not brought to the customer's attention as State gasoline taxes are. Hence there is no great amount of consumer complaint against the tax and no evidence to indicate that it has seriously interfered with the course of business.

Observers of the Canadian tax have pointed out that it falls primarily on middle-sized manufacturers and producers. The small producers, who are the farmers, and the group of large producers, in which mines and public utilities are included, are, according to Dr. Thomas S. Adams, of Yale University, not affected. The tax which the Ways and Means Committee has drawn appears to have a similar incidence. Farm products are exempt, and there appears to have been no attempt to reach the utilities or the mines. Whether in the interest of fairness the group of large producers might not also be taxed is one of the questions to which Congress will need to devote some attention.

While the sales tax is the most important single feature of the new revenue bill, it is not the only feature that calls for attentive consideration in Congress and the country.

Important questions also arise in connection with the new income-tax schedule. In practically doubling the existing surtaxes, the committee has arranged a system of progression under which the income taxes will rise sharply through the lower and intermediate brackets to a maximum of 40 per cent at $100,000. Beyond that point there are no further increases. It is seriously to be questioned whether this arrangement does not impose an undue burden on the business initiative and energy which are represented in the lower and intermediate brackets of the income-tax structure and too light a burden on the accumulated wealth represented in the extremely high brackets.

A somewhat similar consideration arises in connection with the reduction in the credit for earned incomes to 12½ per cent instead of the 25 per cent allowed under the old law. This change sharply reduces the advantage formerly allowed to a class of taxpayers who are under a far greater necessity of putting a portion of their income into savings than the more favored class in possession of unearned incomes. Before Congress finally disposes of the revenue bill a careful assessment of these two features of the new income levy will be in order to see whether greater advantages can not be accorded energy and initiative without substantial loss of public revenue.

In the process it might also be advisable to reconsider the sections of the committee bill dealing with the capital-gains tax. In its desire to check the practice of selling securities at a depreciated price solely to establish losses for income-tax purposes, the committee has introduced into the bill provisions limiting the deductions for capital losses on stocks and bonds in any one year to the amount of capital gains registered in the same year. While in practice these sections may have an altogether desirable result in the next few years, they are founded on the false theory that capital losses can be treated differently for purposes of taxation from capital gains.

Another point for serious consideration is to be found in the unusual relationship established in the new bill between the estates tax and the gifts tax. The estates-tax rates now in effect are doubled in the new bill, while credits on estates taxes paid to the States are held to the same figures provided in the revenue act of 1926. There can be no question as to the fairness of this arrangement to the States. The Federal Government, under the committee plan, would still allow the States as much as it promised to allow them six years ago, and the States could have no ground for protest.

But there is a strong possibility that the new gifts tax will operate to deprive the States of the advantages they now enjoy under the terms of the estates tax. The gift-tax rates are fixed so that they will be 25 per cent below the new estate-tax rates. This arrangement constitutes a standing invitation to the possessors of large estates to distribute their property by gift while they are still living instead of waiting to bequeath it by will at the time of death. Property distributed by gift would escape the estates taxes, which carry a maximum rate of 40 per cent above $10,000,000 and would be subject only to the gift tax, on which the maximum rate—also applicable above $10,000,000—is but 30 per cent.

Unless wealthy individuals are blind to the advantages of this invitation, it will tend to promote the breaking up of large estates by gift, on the taxing of which there are no reciprocal arrangements between the State and Federal Governments. That the procedure will work to the disadvantage of the States is hardly open to question, and it would seem to be incumbent on the House and the Senate to consider whether it is advisable to place the States under this handicap at a time when, like the Federal Government, they are seriously pressed for revenue.

REDUCTION OF GOVERNMENTAL COSTS AND EXPENSES

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a very intelligent and comprehensive statement touching proposals for the reduction of governmental costs and expenses.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TILLAR, ARK., March 3, 1932.

Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am wondering if you would like to know just what one common, everyday salaried man is thinking about all this fuss about our unbalanced budget, both State and National. It seems to me that instead of hunting something else to clap a tax on, we ought to reduce the expense of Government. We have too much government, too many bureaus, etc. Too many people on the national pay roll. My salary has been cut 33⅓ per cent, and I am not kicking, because I think it right in such a depression as we are in now. When my expenses go above my income I just cut expenses and come out all right. If that works with the individual, why won't it work with the Nation?

I tell you, Senator, we common people are getting tired of such high taxes, and yet they are planning to raise them higher still. Well, I don't see what else they can tax here in Arkansas unless it is the air we breathe. I own my home, and the taxes, insurance, etc., are so high that I believe it would be cheaper for me to rent. Some of our people are delinquent, and, to be frank, I don't see where they will get money to pay their taxes at all. In times like these the watchword should be economy. The main trouble with us is that we as individuals and a nation have lived or spent beyond our means. And the sooner we regain our senses the sooner we'll get out of this pinch. So, Mr. Senator, let's cut expenses in every legitimate way we can. Pardon me for writing. I just thought you would like to know what they are thinking back home. We all are proud of you and believe you will act for the best interest of us all.

Yours very truly,

R. B. MCCAIN.

PROPOSED TARIFF ON COPPER

Mr. KING presented a resolution adopted by members of the Utah State Press Association, favoring the imposition of a tariff on raw copper, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The copper-mining industry of Utah, Arizona, Montana, Michigan, and many other States and communities is practically suspended, and threatened with complete extinction.

This condition has been brought about by the unlimited and unrestricted competition of foreign copper, produced from rich ores by cheap labor under conditions of actual peonage and proximating slavery.

As a result 2,200 families, or about 10,000 persons, are destitute at Butte, Mont., looking to charity for food, clothing, shelter, and medical attention; about 17,000 are in the same condition in the copper-mining communities of Arizona, and in our own county of Salt Lake there are 35,000 persons whose immediate needs are a public problem. A fund of $100,000 is being raised at Salt Lake City for the benefit of the unemployed. Situations are similar in other mining districts.

The production and consumption of copper within the United States are practically in balance when American mines are producing normally, a condition that assures the successful protection of this basic industry if an adequate tariff was in force.

American copper miners, American copper companies, the entire business, labor, and social structure that is dependent upon the copper industry should be afforded ample tariff protection.

The revival and maintenance of the American copper industry by the enactment of an adequate tariff is absolutely essential, from the standpoint of economic readjustment; of the reemployment of many thousands; the reestablishment of thousands of businesses dependent directly on the industry; the revival of hundreds of mining communities and the reestablishment of business and taxable values; the resumption of production in order that the copper-mining industry may resume the payment of taxes necessary to maintain government within the many copper-producing areas; the reestablishment of markets for farm products in the copper-mining communities; and also from the standpoint of its vital importance to national defense, the necessity for which may arise at any moment from disturbed world conditions.

For these reasons, we, the members of the Utah State Press Association, do hereby resolve that it is urgently necessary that the present Congress enact an adequate tariff on raw copper, and that we urge upon our Representatives in Congress, and upon all Members of Congress who have the prosperity of this country, the employment of its people, and the protection of our country at heart that they actively support the enactment of such a copper tariff by this session of Congress; and we do further Resolve, That copies of this resolution be sent to our Representatives, to any Representatives from other States known to our members, to the President of the United States, and to the press.

UTAH STATE PRESS ASSOCIATION,
By L. L. TAYLOR, President,
HOWARD A. JONES, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McGILL, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 266) to provide for an investigation and report of losses resulting from the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 404) thereon.

Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3836) to authorize the construction of a temporary railroad bridge across Pearl River at a point in or near the northeast quarter section 11, township 10 north, range 8 east, Leake County, Miss., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 405) thereon.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9349) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 406) thereon.

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (S. 3744) for the construction of a reservoir in the Little Truckee River, Calif., and for such dams and other improvements as may be necessary to impound the waters of Webber, Independence, and Donner Lakes, and for the further development of the water resources of the Truckee River, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 407) thereon.

Mr. DICKINSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1295) for the relief of Willie Hutchinson, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 408) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1719) amending the act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in Oklahoma to submit claims to the Court of Claims," approved June 4, 1924, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 409) thereon.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 15) to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of the Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals, in the State of Alabama, to authorize the letting of the Muscle Shoals properties under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

I ask unanimous consent that I may have until next Monday to file a written report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF THE POST OFFICE COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters, which were placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 3997) for the relief of Hilda Barnard; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 3998) approving and confirming contract for apportionment of waters of Ahtanum Creek, Wash., between Yakima Indian Reservation and lands north thereof, dated May 9, 1908; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 3999) for the relief of certain officers and employees of the Foreign Service of the United States who, while in the course of their respective duties, suffered losses of personal property by reason of catastrophes of nature; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 4000) granting a pension to Mary C. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 4001) for the relief of the Isbrandtsen-Moller Co. (Inc.); to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4002) for the relief of William W. Giles, deceased; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GLASS:

A bill (S. 4003) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Central Romana (Inc.), and to render judgment for just compensation;

A bill (S. 4004) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Ingenio Porvenir C. por A., and to render judgment for just compensation; and

A bill (S. 4005) to compensate Prince William County, Va., and York County, Va., for certain of their public roads and highways seized by the United States for the use of a permanent Marine Corps post at Quantico, Va., and a Navy mine depot at or near Yorktown, Va.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4006) to pay the agreed purchase price due from the United States to various individuals for certain lands, comprising 5,000 acres, embraced within the area now occupied by the United States Marine Corps post at Quantico, Va.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 116) relating to the allocation of funds to the Secretary of Agriculture under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. SMITH, subsequently, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 116) relating to the allocation of funds to the Secretary of Agriculture under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, reported it without amendment.

EMERGENCY HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BULKLEY, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. BYRNES each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction with a view to increasing employment, which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COSTIGAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8397, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Under the heading "Howard University"—

On page 109, line 15, strike out "$450,000" and insert "$475,000" in lieu thereof.

On page 109, line 21, strike out "$225,000" and insert "$275,000" in lieu thereof.

On page 109, lines 22–24, both inclusive, substitute for the committee amendment the following:

"For construction and completion of a heat, light, and power plant at Howard University, $460,000, to be immediately available."

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. REED, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2248) for the relief of Alexander M. Simons, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

ACCEPTANCE OF TABLET OF ESCUTCHEONS OF THE WASHINGTON AND STANDISH FAMILIES

Mr. FESS submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 20), which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Joint Committee on the Library is authorized and directed to accept, on behalf of the United States, from J. E. Aldred and Henry J. Fuller, of New York City, the gift of a stone tablet, formerly in Duxbury Hall, Chorley, England, and dated 1622, bearing the conjoined escutcheons of the Washington and Standish families, and thereby showing a family connection between representatives of the earliest Southern Colony and the earliest New England Colony. Such tablet shall be placed in such part of the Capitol as the committee may deem suitable.

UNVEILING OF STATUES OF JUNIPERO SERRA AND THOMAS STARR KING IN STATUARY HALL

Mr. SHORTRIDGE submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 21), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, with illustrations and bound, 5,000 copies of the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings held at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statues of Junipero Serra and Thomas Starr King, presented by the State of California, of which 1,000 shall be for the Senate and 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of California.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer and shall procure suitable illustrations to be published with these proceedings.

DEATH OF JOHN PHILIP SOUSA

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the resolution be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 184), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret of the death of John Philip Sousa, late a lieutenant commander in the Navy, who was universally recognized as the world's greatest composer of march music.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to join a similar committee on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and unanimously agreed to.

Under the second resolution, the Vice President appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES].

ALABAMA SENATORIAL CONTEST—EXPENSES

Mr. HASTINGS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 185), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, authorized by resolution of February 28, 1931, to hear and determine the pending contest between John H. Bankhead and J. Thomas Heflin involving the right to membership in the United States Senate as a Senator from the State of Alabama, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $5,000 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for such purpose.

OBSERVANCE OF MOTHER'S DAY

Mr. SCHALL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 186), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Whereas by House Joint Resolution No. 263, approved and signed by President Wilson May 8, 1914, the second Sunday in May of each year has been designated as Mother's Day for the expression of our love and reverence for the mothers of our country; and

Whereas there are throughout our land to-day an unprecedentedly large number of mothers and dependent children who, because of unemployment or loss of their bread earners, are lacking many of the necessities of life: Be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon our citizens to express, on Mother's Day this year, our love and reverence for motherhood—

(a) By the customary display of the United States flag on all Government buildings, homes, and other suitable places;

(b) By the usual tokens and messages of affection to our mothers; and

(c) By making contributions, in honor of our mothers, through our churches or other fraternal and welfare agencies for the relief and welfare of such mothers and children as may be in need of the necessities of life.

PROPOSED TARIFF ON OIL

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from this morning's Washington Post entitled "A Disguised Oil Tariff."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, March 9, 1932]

A DISGUISED OIL TARIFF

One highly controversial item in the tax bill is the provision for an excise tax of 1 cent a gallon on all imports of petroleum and petroleum products. The 2¼ per cent sales tax upon manufactures is considered excessive by some authorities, but 1 cent a gallon on petroleum imports amounts to a tax of from 25 to 70 per cent. Affecting as it will the products used by the already overtaxed automobile, it is destined to work hardships upon millions of citizens who are already overtaxed as a class.

The traditional policy of the United States is not to tax fuel, the basic necessity of all industry. Oil differs from agricultural products and manufactures in that it is one of the great and irreplaceable assets of the United States. The oil that is imported into this country comes almost exclusively from properties owned and operated abroad by Americans, developed at the urgent request of American officials as a necessary protection to the Nation against the time when domestic supplies may fail.

If a sales tax is applied to American manufactures and to competing imports, it would be entirely equitable that imported petroleum products should stand their share, but to put them under excise taxes of more than ten to thirty times as great appears oppressive. Such an import tax would tend to increase the cost of gasoline and petroleum products in the United States.

The independent oil producers who have been working for two years for an embargo or a duty on foreign oil seek by this means to force higher prices that will make the product of their small wells profitable once more. To benefit these few producers Congress would have allow a bonus to all the great oil companies. There are more than 660,000,000 barrels of oil in storage in the United States, more than 95 per cent of it owned by the huge oil corporations. Its value would be raised by import taxes of this kind, and automobile owners would pay extra profits to the big oil concerns. Why soak the motorist, who is already paying more than his share?

COMPARATIVE PRINT OF NEW REVENUE BILL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 28, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a comparative print of the bill (H. R. 10236) entitled "To provide revenue, to equalize taxation, and for other purposes," as reported to the House by the Committee on Ways and Means on March 8, 1932, showing the changes proposed to existing law, be printed as a House document; and that 8,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the House document room and 2,000 copies for the Senate document room.

Mr. MOSES. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED ANTI-INJUNCTION LEGISLATION

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, House bill 5315, which has just been sent over and which is known as the anti-injunction bill, is practically the same as the bill which passed the Senate. The original bill introduced in the House was a copy of the bill introduced at the same time in the Senate, and the language of the two measures was exactly the same. The House of Representatives has not acted on the Senate bill, which we sent over there; it is still on the Speaker's desk; but the House has passed practically the same bill, although it is a House bill. Of course, if the Senate should act as the House has acted, we never could accomplish anything; unless one body acts upon the bill of the other there never can be any legislation. In a technical parliamentary sense the Senate is exactly where it was before it passed the Senate anti-injunction bill. In a technical and legal sense all that we have done is of no avail whatever; our bill is dead; it is on the Speaker's desk of the House of Representatives.

I should like now to obtain unanimous consent from the Senate to take up the House bill, which has been brought over from that body; and, if the Senate grants such consent, I will then ask unanimous consent to amend the House bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the bill which the Senate passed and as we passed it.

I will say I have not had an opportunity as yet to examine the House bill in detail, but I followed it as closely as I could as it went through the House, and I will say to Senators there is very little difference between the two measures, there having been only one or two amendments made by the House to the original bill as introduced. One of them is a rather important amendment, but otherwise there is very little change. With the exception of those changes the language of the House bill is just the same as the bill which passed the Senate. However, as I have said, the House has taken no action on the Senate bill; it is the House bill which is now here and our bill is over there.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should be glad if the Senator would withdraw his request at least until we may have an opportunity to consider for a while the pending appropriation bill. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who will have to leave shortly, desires to speak. He is not at present in the Chamber, but will be here in a very few moments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Montana has been detained. I think he will have time——

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I can not proceed except by unanimous consent. That is the reason why I have made the explanation.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Utah wants to look into it, I will withdraw the request for the present and renew it later.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish the Senator would make the request later.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am advised that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is called out of the city and must leave at 3 o'clock to-day, to be absent several days. He desires to continue his discussion of the Interior Department appropriation bill this morning. In order to accommodate that Senator I ask unanimous consent that the Senate dispense with the morning hour and call of the calendar to-day and that we now proceed to the further consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand it is the purpose of the Senator from Oregon to adjourn at the conclusion of to-day's business, so there will be a morning hour to-morrow and an opportunity afforded for the transaction of business in that hour.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; it will only defer the morning hour and consideration of the calendar until to-morrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. A number of Senators desire a morning hour this morning, but I am prepared to agree to the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the appropriation bill will be proceeded with.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8397) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 20, line 12, after the word "equipment" in the item "for purpose of developing agriculture and stock raising among the Indians," it is proposed to strike out "$382,000" and insert "$407,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the senior Senator from Utah with regard to the totals carried by the pending bill as set forth in the report submitted by the committee. The report indicates that the total amount of the bill as reported to the Senate is $54,870,754.35. There are 29 continuing balances in the bill—that is, a continuation of 29 balances or funds appropriated last year but not expended. May I inquire whether these totals are included in the $54,870,000?

Mr. SMOOT. They are, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator have in mind what is the total of those continuing balances?

Mr. SMOOT. No, I have not; but I will furnish the information to the Senator later.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The reappropriated balances are not included in the total?

Mr. SMOOT. The total carried by the bill as passed by the House was a little more than $50,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but in the totals that are given reappropriated balances are not included.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is what I want to find out.

Mr. SMOOT. I misunderstood the Senator from Michigan. The unexpended balances are not included in the total carried by the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, in fact, the bill carries a greater total than $54,870,000?

Mr. SMOOT. Not of direct appropriations.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But so far as department's expenditures are concerned it does?

Mr. SMOOT. As to the unexpended balances, those appropriations were made by preceding sessions of Congress, and some of them were made, I will say to the Senator, knowing very well that they would not be expended in the fiscal year for which the appropriation was made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the Senator from Michigan say there were 29 unexpended balances reappropriated?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I found 29 instances where unexpended balances are continued.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would it be possible for the Senator from Utah to find out just what is the amount of each one of those reappropriated balances, so that we may have the true facts?

Mr. SMOOT. I can find out the figures some time during the day. I will have to get the information from the department because they will have the amounts that were expended, say, up to last night.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to say to the Senator from Michigan that I think he has asked a very pertinent question. It is a matter about which we ought to have the figures.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not see how we can tell what the department is expending without such information.

Mr. SMOOT. The appropriations which are made available until expended are never carried in the totals of bills that subsequently are presented to the Senate. Many of the appropriations which are made available until expended may not be expended in the year in which the appropriation was made; they may not even be expended in the following year, but they are reappropriated until expended.

Mr. McKELLAR. But where appropriations are made and are continued until expended, they have no place at all in this bill. The 29 instances to which the Senator from Michigan refers are cases where the continued expenditure has not been authorized, and it has to be reauthorized in this bill. Of course if these unexpended balances were not reauthorized they would all go back into the Treasury on the 1st of July, 1932.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. So the question, I repeat, if I may, asked by the Senator from Michigan is an exceedingly important one. The information he seeks I know we can get from the department; and I am very happy the Senator from Utah is going to get that information.

Mr. SMOOT. For instance, I will call attention to the item on line 10, page 17—and it is a case similar to one to which the Senator referred, or among those to which he referred:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $109,746.25 contained in the first deficiency act, fiscal year 1930, for payment to the loyal Shawnee Indians in settlement of their claim arising under the twelfth article of the treaty with said Indians proclaimed October 14, 1868 (15 Stat., p. 513), as authorized by and in accordance with the act of March 4, 1929, is hereby continued available until June 30, 1933.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. When the Senator ascertains the total amount of the unexpended balances, I think it would help us all if we had the amount of each unexpended balance rather than the total, so that we may find how much of the sums to be reappropriated remain unexpended as of this date.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMOOT. In this instance $109,746 was originally appropriated.

Mr. TYDINGS. What is the unexpended balance of that particular amount?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator means of the portion of $109,746 that has already been expended?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; and how much remains in cash?

Mr. SMOOT. The statement of one would, of course, include the other.

Mr. TYDINGS. But this item reads:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $109,746.25.

But it does not say how much that is. It strikes me that it would be better if it said the unexpended balance of the appropriation on such a date, which is so much.

Mr. SMOOT. There could not be expended more than the original appropriation of $109,746.25.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, that is so; but the bill could set forth the amount that is still available instead of the amount of the appropriation made a long time ago.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let me submit to the Senator a different question relating to an item which I think is more typical than the one to which he refers. Let me call his attention to page 20, line 5, from which I read as follows:

For the purpose of obtaining remunerative employment for Indians, $60,000, and the unexpended balance for this purpose for the fiscal year 1932 is continued available for the same purpose for the fiscal year 1933.

It is perfectly obvious that the Senate can not know how much money is to be spent "for the purpose of obtaining remunerative employment for Indians" unless it knows what that unexpended balance is.

Mr. SMOOT. More than likely the balance has already been assigned to certain work and that work has not as yet been completed, but as completed it will be paid for. The appropriation of the balance is authorized by this provision.

Mr. TYDINGS and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield first to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. On page 23, line 9, there is even a more complicated provision making a direct appropriation together with the appropriation of the unexpended balance of an old appropriation. I do not see how the committee could find out how much direct appropriation to make unless they knew exactly what the unexpended balance of the old appropriation was.

Mr. SMOOT. We knew it. In nearly every case the amount is stated in the hearings. I can not turn to one at the moment——

Mr. TYDINGS. The unexpended balance of the particular appropriation made some time ago is not in the hearings.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to say to the Senator from Maryland that I do not think the committee had those figures. Under our rule in dealing with these regular appropriations, where no amendment is suggested either by the House committee or by the Senate committee, they just go ahead. Therefore, we have not the figures.

I want to digress here long enough to say to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] that I think he has performed a very valuable public service in calling the attention of the Senate to these reappropriations of unexpended balances.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, for the information of the Senator, I will state that the facts requested are given in the House hearings, and I will begin with the first one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the junior Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. KING. I yielded the floor to the Senator from Nebraska, and I continue to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I read from page 267 of the House hearings:

Mr. HASTINGS. The next item, on page 72, is for the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $109,746.25 contained in the first deficiency act, fiscal year 1930, for payment to the Loyal Shawnee Indians in settlement of their claims arising under the twelfth article of the treaty with said Indians proclaimed October 14, 1886 (15 Stat., p. 513) as authorized by and in accordance with the act of March 4, 1929, is hereby continued available until June 30, 1933.

Mr. DODD. The disposal of this fund depends upon the determination of the heirs of some 145 individual claimants. An examiner of inheritance was detailed for this purpose; but before he had completed any great amount of work and before the Secretary had determined any of the heirs, a suit was filed in the District of Columbia Supreme Court which involved the question of the right of the Secretary to determine heirs of Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes. As these are largely incorporated with the Cherokee Nation, work on the determination of heirs was suspended pending disposal of the case. The case has been dismissed, and hearings for the determination of the heirs have been renewed. But little of this money has been paid out, and the balance should be continued available for use in 1933.

The next matter that the Senator speaks of is referred to on page 281 of the House hearings:

Mr. DODD. The first appropriation for definitely assisting in obtaining employment for Indians was available in 1929, under which two Indians were engaged to make contacts with industrial concerns away from reservations and endeavor to place Indians in permanent employment. The first separate appropriation for the purpose was in the sum of $50,000 in the 1931 act. Of that sum, $39,635 was expended in employment of nine permanent and several temporary employees. Included in the nine permanent employees were the so-called outing matrons formerly paid from educational funds. It was definitely understood, and so stated, by us at the time this item was under consideration two years ago that employees devoting all of their time to this or kindred work would be paid from this appropriation. The approved estimate for 1932 was $75,000. Because of inability to fill all positions authorized and the prospect of a considerable unexpended balance, the estimate was reduced by Congress to $60,000 and the unexpended balance of 1931 money was made available for use this year. Instead of having $15,000 to carry over we have only $10,365.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator now is giving the precise information which I sought to get.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is any other information that the Senator wants, I think all these matters are covered in the House hearings.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It seems to me there should be a comprehensive, detailed statement of unexpended balances, so that we will have a picture of what the departments propose to spend. They now propose to spend, in the face of the report submitted by the Senator in behalf of his committee, $54,000,000 plus certain unexpended balances.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, how in the world can the department do it where there is a contract for a building and the contractors are to be paid on an estimate at the end of every month? There are cases here in which the work is in progress right now, some of it being one-quarter completed, some of it half completed, some of it three-quarters completed. We know that the contract has been let. We know that this money is going to be needed. Therefore we have done in this case just as we have always done ever since appropriations were made. There is not the least change in policy; and the House has hearings upon every one of the items. If there is any item that the Senator desires further information about, I will turn to it and tell him just exactly what the unexpended balance is and what the appropriation is for.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, referring to page 23, beginning with line 9, will he tell us the amount of the unexpended balance of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1932?

For reimbursing Indians for livestock destroyed on account of being infected with dourine, and for expenses in connection with the work of eradicating and preventing such disease.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I desire to say that these old appropriations, like this one of 1932, run up to July 1 of this year. It would be impossible for the department or anyone else to estimate how much will be left over on July 1 next.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then, I wonder how the committee could arrive at the figure appropriating $9,000 more, if they did not know how much money the department has that is unexpended.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Precisely.

Mr. FRAZIER. They estimated it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Upon what facts could they base an estimate if they did not know how much money the department has which is unexpended?

Mr. SMOOT. The department knows exactly the amount of money that has already been paid out, and it knows the balance that the contract calls for. If there is a deficit there, the matter comes to the House of Representatives, and that deficit is placed in the bill just the same as it has been placed in every bill that was ever passed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Understand, I do not question the fact that the $9,000 may be necessary; but I do think we should have a statement of the amount remaining unexpended of this appropriation, so that all of us may know whether the $9,000 is or is not needed.

Mr. SMOOT. There never has been a bill stating that; but the information is contained in the House hearings. The hearings begin in the House of Representatives, and in those hearings there is a statement as to the precise condition of the unexpended balance, just as I have stated it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, can the Senator tell me the amount of the unexpended balance on that item?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me make a suggestion, if the Senator will yield. If the Senator from Utah will simply take the 29 items that have been pointed out, and get the information from the department, and if the department can make an estimate that is practically correct, we can have these items before us. That is the only way we can know the facts beyond a doubt.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senate of the United States wants that information, we can get it very easily; but it is going to take time, and I suppose perhaps that is what the Senator wants.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, it will not take long.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether or not the Senator was present at the time, but I stated a little while ago that every single one of these facts is in the House hearings. They state exactly the amount of the unexpended balance. They tell the story as a whole; but if the Senator wants the information presented in a concise statement, we will try to get it for him.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the junior Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the House hearings contain that information, why would it not be a simple matter in a half hour to go through the House hearings and put it all in a comprehensive form, so that we can see it? As it is now, no one knows whether the $9,000 is necessary to be expended or not necessary, because we do not know the amount of the unexpended balance. Therefore, we are called upon to vote for an appropriation without any knowledge at all of the amount of money remaining in the hands of the department.

Mr. SMOOT. We know that we have appropriated the amount that the estimates called for. The House did that; and in that amount that was appropriated all of the unexpended balances were taken into consideration.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not doubt that the appropriation may be needed; but how much is the unexpended balance?

Mr. SMOOT. It has never been asked for before. I will try to get it for the Senator. This bill follows the form of every bill that has been presented since the first one was introduced in Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is a bad precedent.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. If anybody wants to know the amount of the unexpended balances, we have the hearings here that will show every penny of it and what it is to be used for.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the junior Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the senior Senator from Utah how much was appropriated last year for this purpose?

Mr. SMOOT. Which item does the Senator refer to? We have been talking about three items.

Mr. SMITH. The one which reads:

For reimbursing Indians for livestock destroyed on account of being infected with dourine, and for expenses in connection with the work of eradicating and preventing such disease, $9,000, together with the unexpended balance.

Mr. SMOOT. The estimate was $10,000, with an unexpended balance of $1,000.

Mr. SMITH. That was last year.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the estimate for the coming year.

Mr. SMITH. It was $10,000 last year?

Mr. SMOOT. It was $10,000 last year.

Mr. SMITH. One thousand dollars was left over, and now it is supplemented with $9,000?

Mr. SMOOT. With $9,000.

I desire to say now to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and also to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] that if they will be in the Chamber in about one hour from now, I will give them all of the information they have asked for, in detail.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is fine.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Michigan is usually in the Chamber.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this morning I received a telegram from one of the Indians residing in Montana. I shall read this in view of the resolution which was offered by the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee a day or two ago, in which he asked the Indian Bureau to cooperate with the Agricultural Department for the purpose of preserving—if it is not too late—the sheep of a large number of Indians in New Mexico and Arizona.

The telegram is as follows:

Intense cold, 20° below zero. Snowstorm reports indicate much unnecessary suffering among Fort Peck Indians. This is caused mostly by indifference and dereliction on the part of Indian Bureau officials.

(Signed) MEAD STEELE.

I will ask the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] whether the condition in his State with respect to the destruction of the sheep of the Navajos is the same as was indicated in his address a few days ago?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, Mr. President. I think it was last Friday that I spoke for a few moments respecting the severe storms which had decimated, practically, some of the herds of the Indians occupying northern Arizona and northern New Mexico. I have not the figures at hand; but, for instance, the Jicarillas lost probably 40 or 50 per cent of their sheep, and, as I stated on the occasion when I spoke before, the prime industry of the Navajos, Zunis, and other tribes in northern Arizona and northern New Mexico is the raising of sheep and goats. They make blankets from the wool and hair of the sheep and goats, and that is their principal source of income.

I have believed that the Indian Bureau should and would take measures looking toward restoring those herds and flocks of sheep and goats. These Indians are self-supporting. They number over 50,000, and I am very sufficiently convinced that it is the duty of the Government, as it may—it could not do so at once—to come to the rescue of these Indians, and either make an advance to them from the General Treasury in a reimbursable form or in some other way refinance them.

Mr. President, it is not a part of my duty to defend any branch of this Government, even the legislative branch, and a vast deal has been said that was in the nature of criticism of the Indian Bureau respecting its action or lack of action regarding the storm which burst upon the Indians on the 21st of last November. Whatever may be the derelictions of the bureau—and I am not discussing other subjects—I must say that respecting looking toward relief of Indians in the storm-swept area, the bureau, the superintendents in the field, and the workmen in the various superintendencies moved with commendable energy. In the field men were in snowstorm and in the frost and cold for many days at a time, certainly many hours, without sleep or food, and not within my knowledge have men and women made such sacrifices as were made by the employees of the Indian superintendencies on the various reservations in Arizona and New Mexico during that storm period, which lasted for many weeks.

I do not believe that in all fairness the Indian Bureau is subject to criticism with respect to its activities in the storm-stricken area. They were guilty of no remissness, so far as I am able to see. I realize, however, that many Senators, and not a few disinterested citizens who have always had the best interests of the Indian at heart, have believed that the bureau should make more rapid progress looking toward restoring the herds. But the herds can not be restored all at once. They will have to wait until the spring grass comes up and begins to grow before they can talk about restoring the herds. So, with all deference to those who take an opposite position, I fail to perceive how as a practical proposition the bureau can move at this particular juncture looking toward restoring the herds. In the latter part of April, or the early part of May, it may be done, and I think should be done, and I hope the bureau will do it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have heard no suggestion, until the one just offered by the Senator from Arizona, that the Government should replace the sheep that have perished during the winter. The only criticism that has come to my attention was that steps were not being taken with sufficient celerity to prevent the complete destruction of the sheep of many of the Indians. I had in mind, when I propounded the inquiry to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who is chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the fact that the Department of Agriculture has a fund available from which loans may be made to those engaged in the stock business and that its officials have indicated that they are willing to make loans to Indians who have sheep, in order that they may obtain hay and grain to save the remaining herds, but have been prevented by lack of cooperation——

Mr. ASHURST. I understand.

Mr. KING. From the Department of the Interior, because it did not want to surrender to the Department of Agriculture some of the administrative duties involved in the transactions.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I again declare that I am not defending the Indian Bureau. Indeed, only this morning I was in, what is unusual for me, quite a savage temper before our committee because of a certain action the bureau had taken respecting a bill they had caused to be introduced without knowledge of any member of the Arizona delegation. But that does not preclude me from trying to be fair on another point.

The Senators from New Mexico and the Senators from Arizona signed a joint letter to the bureau some 10 days ago setting forth the nature of the relief which we believe might be practical; and we urged, with respect, of course, that the bureau take our view.

I have come to the conclusion that it is practically impossible to get speedy action from our Government. Under our Constitution, and under the procedure in Congress, we are geared to slow movement. It is almost impossible to speed up the machinery.

I do not know particularly to what the junior Senator from Utah refers, but I assert that on the question of furnishing food to storm-stricken Indians, and furnishing feed to the herds and flocks of sheep and goats and other livestock of the storm-stricken Indians, the bureau is exempt from criticism. They moved with commendable and unusual alacrity. The employees made great sacrifices, I repeat, and I hope and believe that within the next few weeks the bureau will take action toward restoring the herds and flocks of these Indians, because upon their herds and flocks of sheep and goats depends their existence as a people.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is fair to say that if the information I have received is accurate, the sheepmen in Montana, Idaho, Utah, and Nevada have suffered a greater percentage of losses than those in Arizona. Of course, as my colleague knows, such a winter as we have had has never been known before. We have had more snow in Utah this year than we have had in the five years just past combined. It has been very severe upon the sheep.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I repeat what I said, that I intended no criticism of the Indian Bureau when I propounded the question, unless it developed that the Interior Department refused to cooperate with the Department of Agriculture if and when the latter indicated its willingness to make loans to the Indians for the purpose of saving their cattle and sheep, because of the latter's insistence that it should handle the entire matter.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me there, I myself am somewhat concerned and fearful that, after the Washington habit, in a contest as to which of the two, the Department of the Interior or the Department of Agriculture, shall have the jurisdiction, the question might be lost sight of and dropped out altogether. So that it is a very natural apprehension which the junior Senator from Utah has on that point.

I hope that between the two, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior, or by one of them, action will be taken looking toward restoring these herds, because I say, in conclusion, that these Indians are self-supporting, they send their products to all parts of America and to foreign countries, particularly their blankets. They derive a revenue from them. They have their chapter house, which is analogous to a legislature; they have their policemen; they have their judges.

The Indians of northern Arizona and northern New Mexico are people of an ancient and respectable culture. They embrace various kinds of culture; and it would be a great pity if, through any remissness on the part of Congress or the bureaus, those Indians were no longer to be self-supporting.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the junior Senator from Utah yield to his colleague?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I call attention to the fact that the President of the United States recognized the situation down there and sent to Congress on February 27 a supplemental estimate of $135,000 to take care of the situation. The President said:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 27, 1932.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1932, in the amount of $135,000, for the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The details of the estimate, the necessity therefor, and the reasons for its transmission at this time are set forth in the letter of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget transmitted herewith, with whose comments and observations thereon I concur.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I want to ask the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] whether the Committee on Appropriations has included that item in this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It was put in at the last moment. The letter has just come to our attention. Senators will note that the bill contains the following item:

For an additional amount for support of Indians and administration of Indian property, including pay of employees, $135,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until June 30, 1932: Provided, That the limitation of $160,000 for relief, contained in the Interior Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932, is hereby increased to $570,000: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for the employment of Indian labor on any necessary project or activity.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that is gratifying, and I now express the hope that the bureau will avail itself of part of this money, although that would not be enough, to look toward restoring these herds and flocks of sheep and goats.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have been concerned, in view of the facts that have come to our attention, because of the losses which have been sustained by the Indians not only in Arizona and New Mexico, but in other States. More than 200,000 sheep owned by the Navajo Indians have died this winter from cold and lack of food. It is claimed that 50 per cent of the herds of many of the Navajos—and they depend upon those herds for their living—have died from starvation and because of the severity of the storms.

I am informed that in the Jicarilla Reservation in New Mexico more than 50 per cent of all of the herds of sheep and goats have been destroyed, and that the Indians there, as well as the Indians in the Navajo Reservation, are today suffering for lack of food and clothing.

I hope that steps will be taken to prevent a calamity becoming a catastrophe. It would be inexcusable if Indians under the protection of the Government were permitted to die for want of food and shelter, and the Indian Bureau would be subject to just criticism if it failed to aid the Indians in their efforts to protect their sheep and cattle from destruction. However, I indulge the belief that the bureau will employ all means at its command to assist the wards of the Government in this grave situation.

Mr. President, the Indian question is not a new one. It has been with us from the foundation of the Government. I have had occasion to state at various times in the Senate that the Government has failed to discharge a solemn duty resting upon it and that the American people have been indifferent to the responsibilities resting upon them. Lands occupied by the Indians were invaded by white settlers and the former were driven by military forces from their ancestral homes. In many cases no compensation was paid to those who were robbed of their possessions, and where payments were made they were wholly inadequate and represented but a moiety of the value of the lands of which they were deprived.

Before I came to the Senate I endeavored to aid the Indians, and since I have been a Member of this body I have endeavored to protect them and secure legislation that would contribute to their welfare. I urged an investigation by the Senate not for the purpose of condemning the Bureau of Indian Affairs for what many believe were its unwise policies, its failure to understand the fundamentals involved in a proper solution of the Indian question, but in order that facts might be brought to light which would enable Congress and the country to inaugurate and execute a plan that would be conducive to the welfare, development, and civilization of the Indians.

That we have failed to fully discharge our obligations to the Indians, I believe will be conceded by those who have acquainted themselves with the history and condition of the Indians and with the treatment to which they have been subjected at the hands of the Government and the American people.

I had occasion to inquire into the condition of the Indians across the line in Canada in order that I might learn whether that country had acted more justly toward the Indians than had the United States. Among the sources of information consulted were reports of the Dominion Government and a book written by an American who is a friend of the Indians.

From every point of view, it would be supposed that the United States would have acted in a more humane manner toward the Indians than Canada and would have been more successful in civilizing the Indians than our northern neighbor.

In my opinion the Canadian Government has dealt with its Indian inhabitants and wards in a more humane manner than has the United States. The system existing there and its effects are in great contrast to the system prevailing in the United States and the results which we have obtained.

The Indians of Canada number more than 104,000, and are directly under the guardianship of the Dominion Government. There are some Indians, as I am advised, who are not under the guardianship of the Dominion Government; and, I might add in passing, there are thousands of Indians in the United States who are not under the guardianship of the United States, although some of them should be.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] has inquired concerning the status of the Indians in Florida and has sought to learn whether they are outside the cognizance of the Federal Government. He was informed that they were not considered as being under the jurisdiction of the Indian Bureau. The Interior Department and the Bureau of Indian Affairs deny any liability or responsibility for the education, care, or maintenance of those Indians, and that may be said to be true of thousands of other Indians in various parts of the United States. This statement is not intended as any criticism of the Indian Bureau. It may be there is no obligation upon the part of the United States to care for these Indians. It may be the fault of Congress; but, whether there has been a default in the past, it would seem that some plan should be adopted to properly care for all Indians in our country. Indians whose property has been taken from them, Indians who have been despoiled of their homes and driven by the bayonet and by the sword from the lands which they inherited from their ancestors, should not be left to starve or to be wanderers and outcasts.

But to return to the situation in Canada. As I have stated, there are more than 104,000 Indians in Canada. We are familiar with the fact that there are many intermarriages in the United States between the whites and the Indians, and that is true of Canada.

Canada located its Indians by treaty, as a rule, on small reservations. These have been perfectly safeguarded against white entry. I may say in passing—and I shall advert to it before the discussion in regard to this bill is concluded—that upon many of the reservations in the United States, particularly where irrigation projects have been inaugurated or are in process of development, the Indians are being crowded out, the lands are passing into the hands of the whites, and the millions of dollars expended for reclamation projects, ostensibly for the benefit of the Indians, are in reality for the benefit of the whites, while the Indians, or most of them at least, are deriving little if any benefit from the enormous appropriations charged as a rule against their tribal funds.

In 1914 there were several hundred reservations in Canada of compact bodies of Indian lands totaling over 5,000,000 acres. In that year the per capita cost in Canada was $20, while in the United States it has run all the way from $40 up to $200 and $300, as I shall show before we conclude the consideration of this bill. The value of Indian lands, improvements, livestock, and personal property in Canada in 1928 aggregated many millions of dollars. In 1928 the income of Indians on those reservations was nearly $10,000,000. This included earned wages of $2,500,000. The income and wages have greatly increased since 1914. The income figures are much superior to those in the United States. The showing made, as revealed by these figures, is superior to the record in the United States. There are no Canadian Indians with large unearned incomes, such as the Osages and some others in Oklahoma and the Klamath Indians.

The statistics of income in Canada are accurate and detailed. That can not be said of statistics supplied by the Indian Bureau in this country. I believe that it is within the bounds of accuracy to state that the income of bona fide Canadian Indians derived from labor and production is twice that of the Indians in the United States. Canada, as Senators know, is sparsely settled and the opportunities for employment are not as great, or at least presumably are not as great, as they are in the United States. Climatic conditions are not as favorable in Canada as in the United States, and this places the Canadian Indians at a disadvantage.

The expenditures in Canada on these 104,000 Indians was about $5,000,000 in the year 1927–28, a per capita of approximately $40. The per capita expenditures in the United States in behalf of Indians under the control of the Bureau of Indian Affairs is more than $100, excluding expenditures from tribal funds and all other per capita payments.

The Canadian policy toward Indian lands is in sharp contrast with the policy pursued in the United States. Practically, the Canadian policy leaves it for the Indians themselves, tribe by tribe, to decide whether surplus land shall be sold to the Crown; while as for the individual his land is entailed permanently. In the United States it has been a controversial question as to whether the Indians should be permitted to alienate or encumber their lands. We are met constantly with the pitiful sight of "blanket Indians," who have been dispossessed of their inheritance, lands which were allotted to them. When the period was ended and title finally passed to them, and when they were able to dispose of their lands without restriction from the Government, many of them mortgaged or sold their lands to white settlers, who took possession of the same. In many instances this resulted in the dispossessed Indians becoming objects of charity. This condition is not found in Canada.

Tribal funds in Canada have been derived from the sale of surplus lands to the Crown, supplemented by various forms of communal incomes. The principal of the tribal fund can be disbursed only with the consent of the Indians and of the Governor General of Canada. The Canadian Bureau of Indian Affairs has no power to disburse any tribal principal. In addition, the discretion of the tribe and the Governor General is restricted by law, and the tribal capital can only be disbursed for the purchase of land, cattle, and so forth, and in the creation of permanent improvements. The tribal income may be used by the tribe for the support of its needy, aged and infirm, orphans, and so forth, and for industrial purposes.

Tribal funds in the United States are reported shrinking year by year, having diminished from more than $44,000,000 in 1917 to $25,226,000 in 1928, and my recollection is there has been a diminution in the tribal funds since 1928. This has taken place in spite of constant replenishment from oil and mineral leases, wasteful timber cutting, and grazing leases. I shall have something to say later about the unwise and unjust method employed by the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Indian Affairs in the leasing of the lands of the Indians to white cattle and sheep men. The result has been that in some reservations, where the Indians formerly had cattle and sheep, they now have no livestock and the lands which were grazed by their own sheep and cattle are now under control of white lessees, who profit by grazing their cattle and sheep on Indian lands.

I shall show later that in one reservation the stockmen are owing banks large sums, and the banks and many white people in surrounding communities are the strongest advocates of a continued leasing policy of Indian lands to the whites.

A few years ago upon some reservations in the United States when there were fine herds of cattle and sheep owned by the Indians, there are now none. Lands have been grazed and overgrazed by the whites under the unwise and unjust policy which has been put into operation by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

In the Navajo Reservation, however, the Indian Bureau has not deprived the Indians of the control of their lands. The Indians there, as I said a few moments ago in my colloquy with a number of other Senators, owned large herds of sheep which were grazed on their reservation; but because of the severity of the winter, the Indians of the Navajo Reservation have lost perhaps more than 200,000 of their sheep.

I again challenge the attention of the Senate to the fact that the tribal funds of the Indians, notwithstanding their replenishment from the sale of oil and from minerals and from grazing fees, were reduced between 1917 and 1928 from more than $44,000,000 to $25,000,000; and I have evidence here, Mr. President, mountain high that it is the view of responsible men who are familiar with the conditions in the Indian Bureau that, under the practices and policies now prevailing, within 25 or 50 years substantially all of the tribal funds of the Indians in the United States will have been exhausted. What the condition of the Indians then will be it is not difficult to conjecture, if the present policies of the Indian Bureau are maintained. Many of the Indians now living on their own lands, which have been allotted to them in severalty, will have parted with the same under the crushing, driving, irresistible forces around them, and they will be blanket Indians, without homes, without support, and objects of charity.

In contrast with this pitiful picture which I have so imperfectly sketched of the Indians in the United States the Canadian Indian tribal funds do not diminish from year to year but, upon the contrary, increase. The Canadian tribal funds on March 21, 1927, were $12,860,953. The tribes expended in the following year out of this fund $1,262,300, but at the end of the year the fund totaled $13,203,366. The fund has been augmented from interest, and from sale of lands to the Crown, timber income, and so forth, and, of course, by the thrift and work and earnings of the Indians themselves.

The Canadian policy toward Indian tribal self-government is the opposite of that which obtains in the United States. Canada has systematically preserved tribal organizations and has thrown on them—that is, on these organizations—the maximum of authority and responsibility—quite the reverse, Mr. President, of the policy pursued in the United States. Our policy has atrophied the Indians; it has produced a spirit of lassitude; it has demoralized them and taken from them their courage, their power of resistance, their independence.

Attempts have been made, as will be shown when we discuss the Hagerman case, to disorganize the tribes, to destroy their tribal relations, their tribal governments, and to compel them, by coercive policies, to abdicate their own authority and to confer the crown of power and authority upon Mr. Hagerman or upon the Indian Bureau or upon representatives of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. President, much will be said before this bill receives the pontifical blessing of the Senate about the Indian school system in the United States and its imperfections. There is a contrast between the schools in the United States and those in Canada to the distinct disadvantage of our Indian school system. The Canadian school policy is again in contrast with that of the United States. Canada's schools number more than 350 at the present time. Of those more than 251 are day schools, 77 are residential schools, and 12 are combined white and Indian day schools. I might add, Mr. President, that this information is not current and the conditions now would be more favorable, not only as to earnings but as to tribal funds and as to the number of schools and pupils.

In Canada the residential schools are boarding schools, but they are different from the boarding schools which we find on the reservations of the United States and outside of the reservations. They are small, homelike institutions with an average attendance of about 78 children per school. This is in contrast with the system prevailing in the United States where some of the schools have a thousand children, and many have from 300 to 600 pupils.

The Canadian effort is to locate the school in the environment where the child will live. We drag children away from their homes hundreds and, in some instances, thousands of miles; and for years we have had a system of kidnaping which I brought to the attention of the Senate more than a year ago, where little children were hounded and arrested by officials of the Indian Bureau and dragged from their homes and from the arms of their mothers and fathers and taken hundreds of miles away. After the exposé in the Senate when the last Indian appropriation bill was under consideration, be it said to the credit of the head of the Indian Bureau, that atrocious, cruel, and indefensible policy of kidnaping little children was abandoned; but I have received information within the past two weeks that on one reservation the practice still persists.

In Canada scholarships are furnished to the Indian child who wants to go farther than the Indian schools and who desires what might be called a professional education. These are gratuitous. The use of tribal funds even for educational work was terminated in 1927, all educational work being put over into the gratuitous expenditure class.

The Canadian system of health work, which interlocks with the Canadian system of welfare work, could be advantageously followed in the United States. The fundamental premise in Canada is that the sick Indian shall have the best medical aid in the Province. If that best aid be an Indian Bureau doctor, that will be satisfactory; otherwise, the needed specialist or hospital is used and paid. Wherever practicable, use is made of hospitals, sanitoria, public-health officers, nurses, and doctors who serve the local community, Indian and white alike. Thus the Canadian medical system is cheaper than ours by virtue of using local facilities to the limit, while at the same time the Canadian Government is able truthfully to say, as it does in the report for 1928, which I have here—

> No appeal for medical treatment from a Canadian Indian goes unheeded, and no expense is spared to give the sick Indians the benefit of the best medical and hospital care available.

My information is, and the reports which I have examined indicate, that the Indians in Canada are happy, increasingly prosperous, well served with social services and medical attention. They are not robbed, and they do not think they have been robbed. There are not the resentments, the heartburnings, the sullenness, indeed the hatred, which we too often find among the Indians in the United States. Their languages are respected and preserved; their tribal systems are preserved and utilized; their religious liberties are respected; their land holdings are kept intact; their tribal funds are safeguarded and increased; and agricultural credit is extended to them on a modern basis. South of the Canadian line these conditions are not to be found.

In 1914 the secretary of the Board of Indian Commissioners, United States, made an investigation throughout Canada, and reported thereon in a public volume, which is before me, called "The Administration of Indian Affairs in Canada," by Frederick H. Abbott. He went with complete freedom everywhere, interviewed many of the leaders of the Indians, as well as the Indians themselves, and was able to report that not one Indian had made a complaint. What a contrast that is to conditions here. We have complaints everywhere. Perhaps I have received more than some Senators.

I hope I will be pardoned for stating that the reason why I have received so many complaints not only in writing but from Indians who have visited me here and elsewhere grows out of the fact that for 10 or 12 years I have insisted upon fair treatment for the Indians and have endeavored to secure a complete and comprehensive investigation of conditions affecting them in order, as I said at the outset, that a constructive program might be adopted that would lead to the advancement of civilization and prosperity of all the Indians in the United States.

Mr. President, I commend to the officials of our Government the course of the Dominion Government. When the present administration came to power, glowing reports were published by the Interior Department and officials in the Indian Bureau concerning the important reforms that were to be wrought in the Indian Bureau.

In my opinion, the promised reforms have not appeared, and the condition of the Indians is as unsatisfactory now as at any time during the past decade.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is compelled to leave the city to-day, and he desires to speak upon the bill before leaving. I therefore yield the floor, but shall later discuss some of the provisions of the pending bill. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOWELL in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I intend to consume only a short time in addressing myself to this bill. At the outset I desire to say that I have absolutely no interest in this subject excepting to try to do something for the welfare of the Indians.

About two years ago—perhaps longer—the Senate authorized the Committee on Indian Affairs to make an investigation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs of the Interior Department. As a matter of fact I was appointed on the subcommittee over my protest, because of the fact that I realized the tremendous amount of time it would take to complete the investigation as it should be made of the various Indian reservations throughout the country.

Whenever a session of Congress has ended we have attempted to visit some of the Indian reservations. It has meant a great deal of hardship on members of the committee, because of the fact that many of the reservations are in out-of-the-way places, because of the tremendous number of Indian witnesses who wanted to be heard, and because of the fact that many times we had to travel by night and by day, and to be up at all times of the day and night, in order to keep our different engagements.

During the course of this investigation, at least every time when I have been a member of the subcommittee, we have had the Indian agent present at the hearing. We have had present all of the witnesses that the Government wanted to call, so that they could answer questions and be heard. We expressly asked the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to go with the committee, so that he himself could be present and hear the testimony that was adduced at the various hearings. On the last trip we took through the Southwest the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs went with the committee, attended every hearing that was held, and was with the committee constantly until it finally broke up after about a two months' trip through the Southwest and through Arizona and New Mexico.

So there could not be any claim that the investigation was a one-sided affair. The department was represented there. When an Indian testified as to something that he felt was wrong with reference to the department, we immediately called upon the Indian agent, or those of his men who were present, to testify right then and there as to the truth or the falsity of the statements that were made by the Indian.

I am not one of those who believe that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Rhoads, or the Assistant Commissioner, Mr. Scattergood, is not in sympathy with the Indian. My own judgment of those two men is that they are both honest, that they are both sincere, and that they both want to do what they believe to be right by the Indian. The thing I complain about is not the particular individual in the department so much as the system of bureaucracy that has grown up down there.

Whenever the Congress creates a department or a commission or a bureau here in Washington, immediately that body strives to enlarge the sphere of its influence and the number of its employees. If one traces the Indian Bureau from its inception, he will find that that bureau has constantly come to the Congress of the United States and received increased appropriations, not always for the benefit of the Indians but, under the guise of the benefit of the Indians, for the purpose of building up a tremendous bureau with a tremendous number of commissioners and subcommissioners of Indian Affairs; and then they built up a forestry department, and an educational department, and an agricultural department, and a dozen other different departments and heads, until to-day we have a tremendous overhead expense down here, most of it, or a great deal of it, coming out of the Indians.

As long as the Indians had money belonging to them, as long as they had oil, as long as they had timber, if we examine the figures of the appropriations that have been made, we will find, for instance, in the forestry department, that the officials spent their money lavishly. They appropriated the Indians' money and spent it lavishly, as on the Klamath Reservation, where the Indians are paying practically all the expenses.

It will be found that where the Indians had no money, where they were poverty stricken, very little money was spent for their welfare. But where they had money the bureau reached into the coffers of those Indians and spent the money, as they did upon the Klamath Reservation.

There are upon the Klamath Reservation, according to the figures which I have, approximately 1,079 Indians. That includes men, women, and children. The agency pay roll is $136,000, or more than $126 taken from each man, woman, and child of the Indians to pay Indian Bureau officials. I know that is not very interesting to the Senator from Utah, but, nevertheless, it is extremely interesting to those Indians out there, who see their timber being cut off year after year, year after year, and see all their assets being practically wasted by a tremendous bureau established here in Washington over which they have no control whatsoever.

They have come here, as I pointed out yesterday, and complained, first to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, then to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and then to the Committee on Appropriations of both the House and the Senate; but notwithstanding that, gradually, gradually these appropriations have been increased, until practically their whole national resources, their great timber, their great forests, the finest left in the United States to-day, are being used up by a lot of bureaucrats.

The work in the forests is not given to the Indians; the Indians are not being taught to do their timber work—the lumbering that is necessary to be done out there; they are not even given the menial jobs on the reservation; the work is all going to white men, to the civil-service employees.

Finally, after the Committee on Indian Affairs had complained to the department on numerous occasions, they changed the superintendent on the Klamath Reservation, a man who built up a tremendous bureau at great expense to the Indians out there. But what did they do with him? They brought him here to Washington and put him in the bureau, kept him on the pay roll at an increased salary, I understand. I may be wrong about that, but my information is that he got an increase of salary. At least they gave him a much more important job than the one he had had theretofore.

On many of the Indian reservations we have come across absolutely worthless employees in the Government service, men who could not earn a salary, could hardly make a living for themselves if they were out in the ordinary walks of life, but are holding jobs and are supposed to be educating the Indians, when, as a matter of fact, in some of these places I would much rather have the uneducated Indian or the Indian who had a little education than some of these incompetent employees.

On the Klamath Reservation there are about 600 adult Indians, which means that there is on that reservation 1 Indian Bureau employee for every 13 adult Indians. Just stop and think of that. There is 1 bureau employee for every 13 Indians on the Klamath Reservation, and when those Indians complained about it, when they said, "We want to conserve our resources," when they said, "We want to conserve our wealth, we want to conserve our timber," was their complaint given any heed? Not at all. Some little fellow can come from the bureau before the Committee on Appropriations and the Senator from Utah says, "I would believe him before I would believe the Indians out there." The Indians were asking for economy in the conduct of their affairs, and they could not get it, and they have not got it. I say that it is an outrage upon these Indians who are asking the Government of the United States to save their property and to cut down expenses and to economize for them that the Government of the United States should not pay some attention to them when they come here.

Let me again call attention to the fact that on the Mescalero Apache Reservation there are 680 Apaches. In the fiscal year 1930 the Indian Bureau spent $208,438, or $360 for each Indian. The bureau took from each Indian $103. The entire tribal income year by year of those Indians is being consumed by the Indian Bureau for its employees. The entire tribal fund, I repeat, of the Mescalero Apache Indians is being consumed every year by the bureau for its employees. That is the way we are educating these Indians. That is the way the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has taken the word of these Indian bureaucrats.

How little service is given to the Mescaleros is told in the report of the committee dated December 21, 1931. We made a complete survey. We visited that reservation, and, as I said a moment ago, we did not take ex parte testimony. The Indians gathered there. We heard their story, and then, when they made a complaint, we turned to the superintendent or we turned to the doctor or we turned to the employees and said, "What about this, Mr. Officer? Is this true or is this false?" In many cases the Indian was wrong in his complaint. In many instances he was right in his complaint, and the superintendent, when he was faced with that Indian, had to admit that he was wrong.

The trouble in the past has been that some Indian would send in a complaint to Washington, it would go before the Committee on Indian Affairs, or it would go before the Committee on Appropriations, and some person in the bureau would say, "That is not true; that is not correct," and, as the Senator from Utah says, he would take the word of the person in the bureau; but when they were face to face with those Indians out there upon the reservation, then it was quite a different story. They either had to have the facts, and substantiate those facts, or they had to admit that the Indian was telling the truth about it.

Let me say to the Senate that the Committee on Indian Affairs has filed reports, we have called the attention of the department to the facts, but, generally speaking, the recommendations of the committee have been ignored.

There is one thing which should be done; that is, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the United States Senate, so that he himself could follow these appropriations when they are made up, because the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has visited practically all of these reservations. He can tell, if he is on the Committee on Appropriations, whether the money should be expended or whether it should not be expended, and we would not have to take just the word of the Indian Bureau as to whether they needed the money or did not need the money.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I had supposed that the practice was to put on the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations the chairmen of the important standing committees.

Mr. WHEELER. That is not the case.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to be on the subcommittee which frames this bill, if not on the general Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WHEELER. I thoroughly agree with the Senator; that is what ought to be done. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to be on the subcommittee which hears the officials of the department with reference to Indian appropriations. Every year the same thing happens. They come here and get appropriations, and the recommendations of the Committee on Indian Affairs with reference to expenditures of money are entirely ignored.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of this official report with reference to the Mescalero Apache Indians be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 25, Seventy-second Congress, first session]

SURVEY OF CONDITIONS OF THE INDIANS IN THE UNITED STATES—INDIAN TRIBAL AND TRUST FUNDS, MESCALERO APACHE RESERVATION, N. MEX.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following partial report (pursuant to Senate Resolutions 79 and 308, Seventieth Congress, and Senate Resolutions 263 and 416, Seventy-first Congress):

Pursuant to the above-mentioned resolutions and within the limits of its authority the subcommittee has conducted hearings on many Indian reservations situated in various States.

The subcommittee reports herewith on the Mescalero Apache Reservation of New Mexico, primarily with the object of calling to the immediate attention of the Senate the abuses of Indian tribal trust funds. A more exhaustive report on Indian trust funds will follow.

On a previous occasion, when reporting on the Klamath Agency of Oregon, the subcommittee pointed out that the tribal estate of many of the Indians, turned into cash through the sale of natural resources, is being rapidly exhausted by the Indian Bureau.

The Mescalero Apache Reservation of 472,200 acres is occupied by 696 Apache Indians. Its chief values are its timber and its grazing range. At the time of the subcommittee's hearings (May 4, 1931) a meager ration was being supplied to 31 of their aged and infirm Indians. The Indian Bureau provides schooling on the reservation for 107 Apache children and an additional 17 attend public schools; 38 children from the reservation are at distant boarding schools. A hospital is maintained by the Indian Bureau with an average attendance, as stated to the subcommittee at the hearings, of 12 to 14, but, in addition to his duties at the hospital, the doctor answers sick calls from the Indians.

The Indian agency's activities in the matter of Mescalero Apache property have to do (a) with the timber, and (b) with the livestock, particularly the tribal herd which has dwindled from 7,500 in 1928 (House appropriation hearings for 1930, p. 1205) to 3,000 in 1931. The timber income and tribal-herd income alike are absorbed by the expenses of the agency. In addition, $10,000 from the tribal fund was spent for water development in 1930 and $10,000 in 1931. The income from the sale of timber has been, through each successive year, used up by the Indian Bureau for administration. The income from leases of tribal lands have been similarly used. The income from the rapidly diminishing tribal heard likewise has been used for Indian-agency maintenance. The whole tribal estate, in practical effect, with the exception of the area used for grazing 1,000 head of cattle, 18,000 sheep, and 10,000 goats, is treated as belonging to the Indian agency, not to the Indians, and its yield of income and principal is being consumed in agency salaries and other Indian agency costs.

The reservation superintendent, Mr. P. W. Danielson, when testifying before the subcommittee on May 4, 1931, repeatedly affirmed that the total of tribal funds annually used by the agency was $55,000. Reference, however, to the Indian Bureau's detailed reports of expenditures established that the bureau's draft against the Mescalero tribal fund has fluctuated between $70,000 and in excess of $110,000 through successive years. (House appropriation hearings, Interior Department appropriation bill, p. 704.) In addition, the bureau has obtained from Congress a gratuity appropriation for this reservation of $64,309 for 1928, $76,186 for 1929, $97,661 for 1930, and $87,390 for 1931. In the fiscal year 1930, the total expenditure at the Mescalero Apache Reservation was $208,436.22. The tribal funds used by the Indian Bureau in 1930 totaled $110,774. (House appropriation hearings, Interior Department bill, fiscal year 1932, p. 704.) The per capita expenditure, nominally in behalf of each Indian then resident on the reservation, was $306. Out of the tribal fund there was contributed for each Indian $163 to the maintenance of the Indian agency, and the Government, through gratuities, contributed an additional sum of $143 per capita. Indian agency salaries, as distinct from irregular labor, totaled $70,280, or $103 for each Indian, according to the tabulation of expenditures for 1931, which was made a part of the subcommittee's hearings at the Mescalero Agency.

Indians have been led to believe that they are tax exempt, but the Mescalero Apaches are not tax exempt in the sense that their tribal funds are used for the purpose of the agency administration. If the American people as a whole paid an average per capita tax equal to the per capita contribution of the Mescaleros to reservation costs in 1930, the tax fund would total more than $20,000,000,000 a year. If Government in all its branches, national and local, were supported as lavishly, on a per capita basis, as is the Indian agency on the Mescalero Reservation, the tax fund would total more than $36,000,000,000 or more than a third of the aggregate national income.

It has been stated above that the Mescalero Apaches received, in return for their heavy contribution, supplemented by the Government's heavy contribution, but little of tangible service from the Indian Bureau. More than three quarters of a million dollars of Mescalero Apache trust money has been used by the Indian Bureau in 10 years. There are fewer than 700 Indians. The large expenditures, as explained above, do not represent per capita or other cash payments made to the Mescalero Indians, except that in 1930 $22,013.12 of tribal funds was loaned to individual Indians and applied on their store debts, hence it can not be asserted that the Apaches have squandered their money. As one example of conditions on the reservation, the subcommittee found, within a quarter mile of the agency headquarters, an Apache woman more than 80 years old. This old woman was one of the 31 receiving, twice each week, a small ration paid for from the tribal fund. Her home was a set of poles with a canvas around the poles, and when it rained the rain came in. The place was not ditched, and for weeks before the subcommittee's arrival this old woman had been living in a sea of mud and water. The bureau's field matron, under questioning, admitted that she had not visited the place or sought to help.

The subcommittee points out that it does not favor uncontrolled per capita payments from tribal income, but that the tribe's income should be used for the industrial advancement of the tribe's members instead of being used for the support of the Indian agency in unproductive ways.

The evidence adduced at the hearings at Mescalero through Indian and Indian Bureau testimony alike showed that the Indians are practically denied the use of most of their reservation and denied the advantages of their reservation's income; are burdened with impossible debts, part of them for improvements needed by the general community of whites; and are forced to carry an immense burden of Indian agency salaried employees. The agency witnesses testified that for the tribal herd of 3,000 head, the agency was employing a supervisor and seven other salaried employees. The evidence further disclosed that for overseeing the timber, although no timber operations were in progress, and specifically for supervising the sale of timber, although the sale of timber had ceased the preceding year, the agency was employing a forest supervisor, a senior ranger, a forest ranger, and two timber scalers on an all-the-year basis. An Indian agency pay roll of $70,280 for salaries as distinct from irregular was being maintained in 1931. The committee believes that the work of this agency as well as every other agency visited could be conducted with fewer employees. This is particularly true of the forestry department of the Indian Bureau where the overhead expense to the Indians is far beyond what it should be. The Indians' timber is being squandered on a lot of high-priced employees while the Indians are going without sufficient food and clothing. Every Indian on a reservation that has a timber reserve should be encouraged to build himself a good home and should be furnished lumber and advice and help in building it.

Generally speaking there are too many subagents and too many farmers, too many foresters, too many scalers, and too many so-called experts, and too little good for the Indian has been accomplished. The Indian Bureau is a good example of bureaucracy gone mad.

The subcommittee has dwelt at some length on the Mescalero Apache tribal fund and agency financial records because in its essentials this record typifies the situation at reservations where the Indian Bureau uses Indian trust moneys.

The use of Indian tribal funds for Indian Bureau maintenance, and without regard to Indian wishes or to the duty of conserving the Indian property and building it up, is causing the rapid impoverishment of the Indian tribes without even, in the typical and more numerous cases, saving money to the United States. This conclusion becomes evident as soon as the Indian Bureau's expenditures at reservations with large tribal funds or tribal incomes is compared with its expenditures at reservations without large tribal funds or tribal incomes, where expenditures must be made from gratuities which are effectually controlled by Congress. From the tabulation of the expenditures of 13 reservations, appended to this report, the following facts are pointed out as examples:

The New Mexico Pueblos are administered through gratuities. They receive, according to the subcommittee's observations, when compared (for example) with the Mescalero Reservation and the Klamath Reservation previously reported on, an intensive and efficient human service, and their properties for several years past have been reasonably safeguarded by the Government. Omitting reimbursables, the Pueblo cost per capita in 1930 was $38.40—$36.70 gratuities and $0.70 tribal. The Navajo and Hopi Reservations are administered principally through gratuities. The total per capita in 1930 was $47.70—$42.70 gratuitous and $5 tribal. The California Mission Indians receive a comparatively intensive service, educational, medical, and social. Their per capita cost in 1930 was $50.40, of which all except $0.40 was gratuitous. For the whole of California, outside Yuma (18,509 of the 19,197 Indians) the total per capita expenditure in 1930 was $24.55, of which $24 was gratuitous. For the Pimas, numbering 4,449, the total per capita was $42.50, of which $39 was gratuitous.

In striking contrast are the reservations having substantial tribal funds or tribal incomes. At Mescalero, as already pointed out, the gratuitous expenditure per capita was $143 in 1930, and to this gratuitous amount, so large in comparison with the above examples, there was added a tribal fund expenditure of $163 per capita. At Jicarilla, to a gratuitous per capita of $131 there was added a tribal fund per capita of $102. For the Colorado Utes, to a gratuitous per capita of $92 there was added a tribal fund per capita of $94. Exceptions, as noted in the appended tabulation, are the Osages, the Klamaths' and Menominees, where the heavy per capita expenditure is levied chiefly against tribal funds.

The subcommittee has stated above that at the Mescalera Apache Reservation it found not a superior, not a more generous, service to the Indians, as a result of the very large expenditures, but instead, that it found a meager and deficient service. Previously, the same state of affairs at the Klamath Reservation has been described by the subcommittee. The subcommittee in its many hearings on the reservations has found it to be almost uniformly true that the Indians who are surrendering tens, even hundreds, of thousands a year from their tribal funds in payment for agency services and in whose name large gratuities also are being spent, are no more served, and no better served, that those living on reservations dependent on gratuities.

In sum: The subcommittee finds that the past and continuing use of tribal funds by the Indian Bureau is of little benefit to the Indians. It means, if continued as at present, the ultimate dissipation of the Indian estate, with no human gains to the Indians and not even a saving of expense to the United States. That the policy of to-day is not different from that of earlier days is shown by a comparison of the totals of tribal funds from the four Apache Reservations, asked for and secured in the fiscal year 1930 and the fiscal year 1932, for "general support and administration." (As explained above, the actual expenditures from tribal funds have been larger.)

The comparison follows:

	1930	1932
San Carlos Apache	$89,300	$107,500
Fort Apache	135,300	143,900
Mescalero Apache	55,000	55,000
Jicarilla Apache	60,000	60,000
Total	339,600	366,400

The showing is in fact more serious than the above comparison on its face would indicate. Since 1930 the chief source of replenishment of the funds of three of the four Apache reservations has diminished or stopped altogether, with the decline of the lumber market. At the Jicarilla Reservation the stoppage is permanent, all the timber having been now cut over; there will be no new timber income for 50 years or longer, according to the testimony of the superintendent of this reservation given at the subcommittee's hearings at the Jicarilla Reservation. The present policy, if it continues, means the complete destruction of many of the tribal funds at a very early date. It is a situation which as a whole calls for the immediate attention of Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. WHEELER. Let us take the Jicarillo-Apache Reservation. On that reservation there is no timber to care for, hence the excuse for expending the money is absent. Yet the per capita expenditure by the bureau in 1930 was $233, of which $102 came out of the tribal fund. The Jicarillo-Apache Indians have had timber, but it is now cut, entirely gone. They have lost their timber. Yet the department still maintains a tremendous bureau there for the purpose of looking after the timberlands and other interests of the Indians.

Superintendent Graves, of that reservation, testified before the committee last May that there could be no more cutting of timber on that reservation for a period of 50 years. Yet the bureau of forestry has built up down there and still has a great organization.

The tabulation at the end of the Mescalero report shows that wherever tribal funds exist, there the Indian Bureau spends lavishly. It spends economically only where there are no tribal funds.

For instance, I would like to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to this fact, that the Papago Indians of Arizona have no tribal fund, and their per capita is only $16.21. The Senator says in an aside that they have sheep. That is true, but you have not loaded them down with a tremendous number of bureaucrats as you have the Mescaleros, or any of the rest of the reservations.

Where the Indians have not tribal funds, the bureau has let them alone. Let me say that you have given less attention to the Papagos, you have given less attention to the Navajo Indians in Arizona than you have to almost any other Indians in the United States who have come under the bureau, and the Navajos and the Papagos, as a matter of fact, are in better shape than practically any other Indians in the United States to-day.

Sixteen dollars for the Papagos, and $126 spent on each Indian upon the Klamath Reservation.

Sixteen dollars for the Papagos, and $306 for the Mescalero Apache Indians.

One tribe has money, the other has to come to Washington and get it from the bureau.

Yet the Senator from Utah tells me that he would believe a bureau official quicker than any of these Indians who come here and ask for economy in their appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator has made that statement three or four times.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. SMOOT. I did say that I would take the word of the bureau as quickly as I would that of the representative to whom I referred at the time I was speaking, or quicker.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator referred to one of the Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but there is more than one Indian in the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. The trouble with the Senator from Utah is that he has been taking the word of the bureaucrats all the time rather than listening to some of the Indians fighting to conserve their natural resources.

Mr. SMOOT. The Indians in Arizona of whom the Senator speaks have never been here to complain. Their situation is entirely different from that of any other Indians in the United States, and the Senator knows it just as well as I do.

Mr. WHEELER. Has the Senator ever visited their reservation? No; he has not.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not visited their reservation, but I do not think it would make a particle of difference.

Mr. WHEELER. No. Of course, the Senator can get much more information by sitting in his office here in Washington and taking the word of the bureaucrats than he can by going out and visiting some of the reservations.

Mr. SMOOT. If any representative of the tribe of Indians in Arizona wanted to be heard, he would be heard; but none wanted to be heard. I called attention to an estimate for an appropriation of $135,000 which has been sent in here within a few days for the Indians of Arizona.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; that is because of the unusual conditions resulting from the storm that took place there and the nation-wide publicity that has been given to their condition.

Mr. SMOOT. We have a Senator from New Mexico on the Appropriations Committee and a Senator from Arizona, too, on the Appropriations Committee. I am sure those Senators will look well after the welfare of those Indians.

Mr. WHEELER. I have not the slightest doubt of it, but what I am trying to say to the Senator is that when those Indians have money in their coffers then the Bureau of Indian Affairs has taken out of it $126 to $163 for each Indian, but when they have not any money in their coffers then the Senator from Utah would spend only $16 upon each of them.

Mr. SMOOT. If they have not any money in their coffers, somebody has to take care of them. That has been the policy not only for this year but for years before ever the Senator came into the Senate of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I realize the fact that the bureau has been exploiting these Indians for years, but I am pointing out to the Senator the fact that if he would visit those Indians he would learn that as a matter of fact where he has recommended that there be only $16 spent on them when the Government had to put up the money, yet if the Indians themselves have their own funds the bureau is vastly more generous with its recommendations and is now proposing to appropriate $136,000 a year out of the Indians' own funds to take care of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I do not want to take the Senator's time, but the Senator knows why there was only $16 per capita.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, and I have just told the Senator why.

Mr. SMOOT. The income from their property is a different matter. The nature of the property itself is quite different. It is standing timber. The reservation has nothing on it but standing timber. The Senator speaks of the Indians in Arizona. They are self-sustaining, or just as near self-sustaining as it is possible for them to be. They live just as well as a great percentage of the white people of that country.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not like to disagree with the Senator, but when he says those Indians live as well as a great majority of the white people of the country, that statement is incorrect and it can not be justified from the record. The Senator has not provided for schools on that reservation. There are places on the Navajo Reservation where there are no schools for the Indians to attend at all. The Senator stands in his place with a smile on his face, but that is the fact. It is the indisputable fact.

If he will call the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, he will find there are places down there in New Mexico, where they have no funds that the bureau could get hold of, where they have not a school, and yet there are thousands of Indian children who are not going to school to-day, because the Senator has not given them any funds with which to build schools or furnish teachers for them. But let those Indians have a little money of their own in their treasury, or let them sell some timber or some oil, and then the Senator will immediately furnish them with good school buildings, with plenty of school-teachers, with roads that crisscross the reservation, and with much more than the Indians really need for their welfare.

Mr. SMOOT. In the first place, I want to say that the Senator from Utah did not state that those Indians live better "than a majority of the people." That is what the Senator from Montana said. I did not say it.

Mr. WHEELER. What did the Senator say?

Mr. SMOOT. I said many of the white people in that territory.

Mr. WHEELER. I disagree with that statement, too.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator would.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, I would, because I have been there, and the Senator from Utah has not been there.

Mr. SMOOT. But I know something about the country.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator from Utah has merely talked with the bureaucrats up here, and they have told him that, and the Senator in his usual way believes everything they tell him with reference to what is taking place on those reservations.

Mr. SMOOT. I would just as quickly believe anything the Commissioner of Indian Affairs would say to the committee as I would Mr. Crawford, who, the Senator thinks, is as perfect a man as God ever made.

Mr. WHEELER. No, I do not think anything of the kind, but I do say when a man comes here from those Indians, the Senate ought at least to listen to his protests in behalf of the majority of the Indians on that reservation. They have protested, and not alone through Mr. Crawford. He has been elected by a majority of the Indians upon the reservation to come here to Congress and present their wishes.

Mr. SMOOT. He has a perfect right to do it.

Mr. WHEELER. I say that the Senator from Utah and the Appropriations Committee and the Bureau of Indian Affairs, notwithstanding the continuous progress for the last five years that I know of, are still maintaining this tremendously expensive bureau and doing it when the Senator and the administration are talking about economizing in every other way, but they will not economize when they come to spending the funds of the Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Montana must remember that this bill is written in the House of Representatives. They pass upon these items first. There is no reduction by the committee in this body. We have increased the appropriation over and above what the House provided. The Senator must understand that it is not this body which acts originally upon the bill, but the original recommendations are made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to call the Senator's attention also to the California Indians just outside of Yuma. There the bureau spends $24.58 per capita. There the bureau spends $24.58 per capita, but on the other reservation it spends over $163.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to another fact with reference to the investigation made by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] has introduced an amendment to the bill asking that the salary which is being paid to one Mr. Hagerman shall be stricken from the bill or that no part of the appropriation shall be used for that purpose. Mr. Hagerman is only one of a large number of incompetent employees in the service of the Indian Bureau. He is just one of a number that we have suggested to the Commissioner on Indian Affairs ought to be dispensed with because of the fact that it is not only a burden upon the Indians, but it is a burden upon the Government to maintain such incompetent employees.

Mr. Hagerman was appointed by Secretary Fall and was given general supervision over each of the superintendencies located on the Navajo Reservation, and general supervision and administration of the affairs of the Navajo Tribe. About a year ago, I think it was, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] offered an amendment to an appropriation bill providing that no part of the fund should be used to pay Mr. Hagerman, charging at that time that Mr. Hagerman was incompetent. The amendment was adopted. But notwithstanding that fact, when the bill went to conference, the item was reinstated in the bill. The department kept Mr. Hagerman on in the same capacity in which he had been serving. They got out a tremendous lot of publicity to the effect that Mr. Hagerman was competent and should be retained.

Charges were filed against Mr. Hagerman by certain Indians to the effect that he had been entirely too favorable to the oil interests in leasing some of their property. I am not at all satisfied that there was any evidence sustaining the charge that Mr. Hagerman was guilty of any corruption in connection with the oil leases. Neither am I convinced at all that there was any evidence of any corruption of any kind or character against Mr. Hagerman. But I invite the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that we have a Commissioner of Indian Affairs here in Washington. Then we have an Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs here in Washington. We have a head of the forestry division and a head of the agricultural division of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington, as well as the head of the educational division. Then they found a place for Mr. Hagerman and said, "You are to be a commissioner over the heads of all the agents down in the Navajo country." If an agent wanted to write a letter complaining about a situation on a reservation or if he wanted an appropriation or wanted this or that, he was compelled to take it up with Mr. Hagerman. Then when he took it up with Mr. Hagerman, Mr. Hagerman would take it up with the bureau here in Washington, and at some subsequent date perhaps the complaint of the Indians or the complaint of some of the officials on the agency would finally reach Washington.

We first heard Mr. Hagerman's story here in Washington. I challenge anybody in the Senate or elsewhere to read Mr. Hagerman's testimony given before the Committee on Indian Affairs, to read his answers to the questions propounded, and then tell the Senate what policy he pursued as superintendent over all of those agencies. I challenge anybody to read his testimony and tell the Senate what policy he adopted as a member of the Pueblo Lands Board where he was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. Every time that he testified before that committee he told a different story. It is impossible to read his testimony and say that Mr. Hagerman knew what he was talking about when he first came before the committee or at any subsequent time excepting that the last time he came there this year, just a short time ago, he did have an outline of a policy which he alleged had been pursued. As a member of the land board he adopted one policy. That was followed for a short time and then it was changed. He and every member of that land board as a matter of fact testified differently as to what was the policy of the land board.

But the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior have repeatedly said, "Oh, we must keep Mr. Hagerman because he is of such tremendous importance and he is such a great man for the Bureau of Indian Affairs." They said, "He is familiar with all the Indian reservations down through the Southwest. He knows the Indian situation, he knows the wants of the Indians, he has visited all the Indians, and they all have confidence in him.

However, when the committee visited these reservations, where we had been told he had done such important work, we found that Mr. Hagerman had visited one reservation, but had been there only about 10 minutes. It was stated that he drove up in a fine automobile; that he never got out of his automobile; that he talked to the Indians for a few moments and then went on his way. So far as knowing what the conditions were on the various reservations, this man, who had general supervision over all these Indian agencies, had scarcely visited many of them, or, if he had visited them, he had spent only a very few minutes there at any one time; he had never consulted to any extent with the Indians in many places which he visited, and, as a result, all of the Indians down there had lost confidence in him, as had likewise many of the people who were working in the Indian Service.

Mr. President, Mr. Hagerman, who was appointed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, exercised the powers to which I have called attention until 1928, when he was removed, as I understand, by Secretary Work on a joint showing made by a representative of the Department of Justice and a high official in the Indian Bureau to the effect that Hagerman was incompetent or inactive in the Navajo matters and also insufficiently active in the Pueblo Lands Board matters. In July, 1928, however, Mr. Hagerman was restored to the office of which Secretary Work had deprived him and was given wider power, covering all jurisdictions in the four States of Arizona, Utah, New Mexico, and Colorado. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss the activities of Mr. Hagerman in connection with the lands board, except to say, as the two Senators from New Mexico are here, that they know what his activities were; they know likewise how the board has failed to carry out the law as enacted by the Congress of the United States; and they likewise know how this board has spent a tremendous amount of money and accomplished practically nothing, either so far as the white settlers are concerned or so far as the Indians are concerned.

Mr. President, after testimony was adduced before the Committee on Indians Affairs, in the first instance, by Mr. Hagerman, and after he had sent statements to the press seeking to try to discredit a member of the committee, it was suggested that we should go to New Mexico. We went to New Mexico, but during the time we were there Mr. Hagerman never appeared before the committee. Notwithstanding the fact that we repeatedly asked him to come there, he did not do so, because, as it was stated, he was ill. However, it is a strange coincidence that the very day on which the committee visited Winslow, Ariz., Mr. Hagerman was in that town that very morning; and although we repeatedly called upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and asked him to have Mr. Hagerman present at the hearing, he neglected and failed to appear.

However, a lawyer was employed to appear before the committee, I think, at Santa Fe, although as to the place I can not be sure at the moment; but it is certainly true that the charge against Mr. Hagerman to the effect that he was incompetent, to the effect that he had neglected the affairs of the Indians, to the effect that it is an unnecessary expense to the Government of the United States to keep him in his present position, was overwhelmingly sustained by the evidence adduced before the committee. His usefulness, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, in trying to bring about a settlement between the whites and the Indians I am sure is at an end. As I said a moment ago, and I repeat now, from the testimony adduced at the various reservations which we visited, scarcely anyone among the Indians had ever come in contact with Mr. Hagerman or with his work upon the reservation, work which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs states is so valuable and so necessary for the benefit of the department and of the Indians as well.

So I hope when the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] offers his amendment to eliminate Mr. Hagerman from the pay roll of the Government that it will be adopted. Not only should that be done with reference to Mr. Hagerman but there are a number of other employees on the pay roll of the Bureau of Indian Affairs whose services should likewise be dispensed with. The farmers who are employed on the reservation to instruct the Indians in the science of agriculture ought to be removed and their pay stopped; and furthermore, the number of employees on every single one of the reservations ought to be reduced by one-third to one-half.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Sentator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Approximately how much will be saved if the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota shall be adopted?

Mr. WHEELER. In sums of money it will be very little, but the important thing about it is that there is being kept on the pay roll a man in whom the Indians have no confidence and in whom many of the whites have no confidence, and the Indians have petitioned time and again, saying they did not want him to represent them upon the land board or anywhere else. The Senator from Colorado will understand that Mr. Hagerman was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, supposedly to represent the Indians in the Navajo country, and supposedly to look after their interests. He holds two offices, one as commissioner general of all the Navajo Indians, or he did hold that office quite recently, unless there has been a change, and also the office of commissioner of all the Indian reservations down there, having supervision of the reservations. He also holds a further position by virtue of which he is a member of the board called the Pueblo Land Board.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Has the committee of which the able Senator from Montana is a member submitted a report to the Senate on this subject?

Mr. WHEELER. We submitted one report, in which we recommended that Mr. Hagerman be discharged, and last year the Senate of the United States went on record on the subject and by a vote inserted in the appropriation bill then pending a provision to the effect that no part of the appropriation should be used for paying his salary; but, notwithstanding the fact that the Senate of the United States thus went on record and notwithstanding the fact that the Committee on Indian Affairs went on record to the effect that Mr. Hagerman should be discharged, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior insisted upon keeping him upon the pay roll, although practically all the Navajo and the Pueblo Indians are against him and do not want him to represent them on this board and have protested against it to the committee. The Department of the Interior flaunts not only the United States Senate in the face but it flaunts the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the face, and it flaunts the wishes of the Indians themselves in the face, by keeping this man upon the pay roll to handle the affairs of the Indians.

In the first place, there should not be any position such as the one that has been outlined and which is now held by Mr. Hagerman. There are Indian agents in charge of each and every one of the Indian reservations, and if those agents are not competent to handle the work they ought to be discharged.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I have read most of the testimony taken by the Committee on Indian Affairs that has been investigating the Indian situation, including the testimony regarding Mr. Hagerman. Will the Senator elaborate his statement concerning Mr. Hagerman's activities in connection with the New Mexico Indians?

As I recall, there was a controversy between the white settlers and the Indians. After the Senator from New Mexico came to the Senate he aided in working out a plan for the settlement of that controversy. The settlers claimed that they had occupied for many years land the title to which was claimed by the Indians; that they had made valuable improvements thereon; and that to deprive them of the land would be a grave injustice.

A board was created, as I recall, in order to determine what should be paid by the Government to the Indians by way of compensation for the lands which would be retained by the whites. This board, after making a comprehensive examination, found the value of the Indians' holdings—that is, the land occupied by the white settlers—and recommended payment of $2,000,000 to the Indians.

Mr. Hagerman was presumed to represent the Indians, to be their guardian, charged with the duty to protect their interests. Notwithstanding the findings of the board, Mr. Hagerman so dominated it that the award was reduced from $2,000,000 to $600,000. A bill has been introduced, as I understand, by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] and his colleague for the purpose of rectifying, in part at least, the wrong which had been committed, and to pay to the Indians a million dollars. Do not the facts show that Mr. Hagerman was not loyal to the Indians and, as some Indians believe, betrayed them in that controversy?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know that I would want to go as far as the Indians referred to by the Senator from Utah and say that he betrayed them; but I will say this, and this is the fact:

This board went out and appointed appraisers to appraise the Indians' lands and their water rights. In the first case, after the appraisement was made, as I recall the testimony—the Senator from New Mexico will correct me if I am wrong—they accepted the amount that had been found by their own appraisers as the value of the Indians' water rights and their land, and paid the Indians that amount. In subsequent dealings with the Indians' lands and water rights, however, they appointed appraisers who went out and, as the testimony shows, made a very careful appraisement of the Indians' property, of their water rights, and of their lands; and then, after that appraisement was made by their own appraisers, by men who they said were competent, by men in whom they admitted they had confidence, they simply cut the appraisement to a very much lower amount. I have forgotten the exact figure.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. In the first case, the one to which the Senator referred, the awards by the board were on the basis of $100 per acre. Thereafter the board adopted an arbitrary rule fixing $35 per acre as the maximum figure, and all awards made subsequently were governed by that rule. Thirty-five dollars per acre was the extreme limit; and with the kindness of the Senator from Montana, I may say in that connection that there is no substantial difference between the value of the lands in the first case and the value of the lands in the subsequent cases.

I do not agree with the action of the board in fixing that arbitrary figure. I think it was a mistake of judgment, against the interest of the Indians; and the purpose of the bill which is now pending on the calendar is to correct that mistake and to do justice toward the Indians.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I ask my friend the Senator from New Mexico if it was not the understanding of the Indians that Mr. Hagerman had been appointed as Assistant Secretary, or assistant to the Secretary and assistant to the Indian Bureau, for the purpose of looking after and protecting the rights of the Indians, including those involved in this controversy?

Mr. BRATTON. Of course Governor Hagerman held the two positions at the same time. His first position was that of special assistant to the commissioner, and as such he had supervisory control of the several Indian agencies in that section of the country. The other position was that of a member of the Pueblo Lands Board. It may be asserted that his duties in one respect did not conflict with his duties in the other respect, but at the same time I think the fact that he held both positions might well have led the Indians to believe that he would resolve every doubt in their favor. I think that is a reasonable assumption under the facts.

Mr. KING. Did not he insist upon this arbitrary figure, which reduced the appraisement of $2,000,000 to $600,000?

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator's figures are slightly in error. As I recall the facts, the $2,000,000 to which the Senator referred includes what is called the Taos claim that the Indians surrendered with the understanding that they were to be given in lieu thereof what is called the "Blue Lake area." With that eliminated, the figures total about $1,300,000. That represents in substance the appraisements made by the appraisers appointed by the board. The awards total about $600,000. Thus, the difference is approximately $700,000 between the total appraised values and the total awards. Those are the figures as I recall them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the Senator from New Mexico made up his mind as to the value per acre of the land involved?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Was the land worth $100 an acre?

Mr. BRATTON. Oh, yes; Mr. President. A great deal of that land, with water rights, is worth more than $100 per acre. One hundred dollars per acre is not an excessive figure. Thirty-five dollars per acre is a grossly inadequate figure. I have no hesitancy in saying that.

Mr. SMOOT. I knew the Senator's position on the matter, because he had stated it to the committee. That is the reason why I wanted to bring out that fact at this particular time.

When the land was first appraised at $100 an acre there was no development there of a water system, was there?

Mr. BRATTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I mean, to cover the whole land?

Mr. BRATTON. I think as much so in that pueblo as in any of the others. I do not think there is any substantial difference in the degree of development of water.

Mr. SMOOT. What I wanted was to get the picture just as it was. I may be wrong in my recollection about it, but it is that when the first appraisal was made of the lands it was made with no developed water rights or the use of water upon the land at that time. Was that universal on the land that was valued at $100 an acre?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes. As I recall, the first case, that is to say, the pueblo where they fixed the figure of $100 per acre, was the Tesuque Pueblo, which is located a few miles out of the city of Santa Fe. In that pueblo they fixed the value at $100 per acre for the land, plus the appurtenant water right. My memory now is that the Nambe Pueblo was the second one, and it was in connection with that pueblo that they established and first declared the $35 per acre maximum.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I remember.

Mr. BRATTON. I think there is no substantial difference in the degree of development of water between the two pueblos.

As I understand, Governor Hagerman now says that the reason for the reduction was that the board undertook to divide the water rights into two parts, denominating one primary water rights and the other secondary water rights, and that they intended to compensate the Indians in the Nambe and all subsequent pueblos for only the secondary water rights, reserving to them the primary water rights.

I may say to the Senator from Utah that although I have spent a great deal of my time in New Mexico, and was more or less familiar with the work of the Pueblo Lands Board, I never heard that theory advanced until two or three weeks ago, when the committee was considering the bill which is now on the calendar. Then, for the first time, I heard it stated that such reduction was due to the fact that they had intended to compensate the Indians only for the secondary water rights, and reserved to them the primary water rights.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understood it.

Mr. BRATTON. But let me say to the Senator before we leave that subject——

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has a bill, and it is now on the calendar, as I understand, to correct that very thing.

Mr. BRATTON. Exactly. It is on the calendar now, with a unanimously favorable report from the Committee on Indian Affairs, designed to correct that mistake, do justice by the Indians, and settle, in the best way we can devise, a very complicated situation. I am hopeful that at an early date we may pass that bill and do substantial justice by those Indians. It is long overdue. It is a grave injustice to those Indians, and should be corrected.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

I am not going to go further into the Hagerman matter, except to say that the testimony taken before the committee showed conclusively that at the outset the board had no plan; that they appointed their appraisers, men who they testified were competent; but after appointing them they arbitrarily disregarded all of the appraisers' work, all of their recommendations, and arbitrarily fixed, as the Senator from New Mexico says, the figure of $35 per acre; and they did it in violation of both the letter and spirit of the law.

Now, Mr. President, I am going once more——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that subject, will he permit an interruption?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KING. It seems to me the Senator ought to put into the RECORD as a part of his remarks, if he does not object to it—or, if he prefers, I will put it in at the close—the special report made by the committee of which he was a member dealing with the Hagerman matter. With the Senator's permission, I will read it at this point.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well.

Mr. KING. The report is as follows:

[Sen. Rept. No. 25, pt. 3, 72d Cong., 1st sess.]

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following partial report (pursuant to S. Res. 79 and 308, 70th Cong., and S. Res. 263 and 416, 71st Cong.):

Pursuant to said resolutions and within the limits of its authority the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs has conducted its survey and investigations generally among the various Indian tribes of the United States, and in pursuance of such investigation the subcommittee has held numerous hearings in Washington and within the States of New Mexico and Arizona inquiring into the charges of neglect of duty and misconduct of one Herbert J. Hagerman, special commissioner to negotiate with Indians in New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, and Colorado, and formerly a member of the Pueblo Lands Board. At the numerous and exhaustive hearings which were held in Washington, Mr. Hagerman was present, but in New Mexico and Arizona he failed to appear.

The printed testimony is found in parts 11, 17, 18, 19, and 20, hearings of the subcommittee.

The subcommittee finds that said Hagerman in his said capacity as a member of the Pueblo Lands Board failed, neglected, and refused to comply with the mandate of Congress (act of June 7, 1924, 43 Stat. 636) creating and controlling that board, in that he failed, neglected, and refused to find the fair market value and to award fair compensation to the pueblos when ownership of land and water rights were extinguished through the actions of the board in violation of section 6 of said act of June 7, 1924.

And by reason of such failure, neglect, and refusal to comply with the provisions of the act the Government has been put to great expense, while the board has not disposed of the claims and counterclaims of the Indians and white settlers as was intended by Congress and provided for in the act, but on the contrary has beclouded the situation, has complicated the issues by trying to read into the act and the judicial decisions an arbitrary and fantastic theory, has practically forced the Indians to institute independent suits of wholesale character, and has brought about a situation forcing Congress to legislate anew in order to accomplish the results plainly intended by the said act of June 7, 1924.

The subcommittee further finds that he has in numerous particulars neglected his duties as such special commissioner to negotiate with Indians in New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, and Utah, with resultant serious injury to the property and the tribal interests of the Indians, and has completely lost the confidence of the vast majority of the Indians of the Southwest, who have petitioned the subcommittee that he shall no longer represent them or act in the capacity of such commissioner, and the committee is of the opinion that he is unfitted for the position assigned to him by the Secretary of the Interior.

The subcommittee further finds that the said office of special commissioner to negotiate with Indians, etc., is an unnecessary extravagance on the part of the Government. It is the belief of the subcommittee that the superintendents upon the various reservations should be held responsible for the management of the affairs of the reservations to which they are assigned and should make their reports directly to the Indian Bureau rather than through some intermediary, and that if there are superintendents or agents incapable of managing the affairs of a reservation or unable to maintain the confidence and respect of the Indians, they should be replaced by men who have the necessary qualifications to handle the business and social problems involved. The present system of having superintendents report to Commissioner Hagerman makes for delay and inefficiency, stifles the enterprise of competent superintendents, and serves as a barrier behind which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs escapes responsibility.

The subcommittee's conclusions are supported by records, complaints, allegations, and admissions contained in the printed hearings, and in records, documents, and files of the subcommittee.

Wherefore the subcommittee recommends that Mr. Hagerman's position be abolished, that there be no future appropriation for his salary and expenses, and that he be removed from the Government service.

Respectfully submitted.

LYNN J. FRAZIER, Chairman.
B. K. WHEELER.
ELMER THOMAS.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, a moment ago I was looking for a list of the employees upon the Klamath Reservation. I did not have it at hand then. For the edification of the Senate, I want to have you listen to these salaries and to the names of these people.

C. M. Blair, the superintendent, receives a salary of $4,800.

H. L. Shilling, of the day school, receives a salary of $1,860.

E. E. Patterson, physician, receives a salary of $3,000.

C. A. Gossett, principal clerk, receives a salary of $2,700.

Mildred D. Neave, clerk, receives a salary of $1,920.

Milton L. Smith, clerk, receives a salary of $1,820.

Vera T. Lamb, clerk, receives a salary of $1,680.

Burney O. Wilson, clerk, receives a salary of $1,620.

John R. Lynn, clerk, receives a salary of $2,300.

Dorothy K. Dillstrom, clerk, receives a salary of $1,800.

Clara L. Allen, clerk, receives a salary of $1,500.

Florence J. Edwardeson, clerk, receives a salary of $1,620.

Those are all clerks in the office, and the total number of Indians, as I read a moment ago, is five or six hundred adults. There is a superintendent and there are nine clerks in the office on that reservation.

There is John W. Libby, ranger, receiving $2,000.

There is Louis C. Mueller, special officer, $2,300.

There is William A. Bonrell, carpenter, $1,800.

Those Indians have been under our tutelage for the past 25 years, and we have done so much for them, in the opinion of the Senator from Utah, and why should they not hire an Indian to do the carpentry work upon that reservation? We have had them under our tutelage for all this period of time, and yet the bureau can not find an Indian who is competent to be a carpenter out there.

There is Floyd Lovelace, stockman, drawing $1,740.

Why is it that they can not find an Indian to do the work and receive the salary of a stockman on that reservation? We have had them under our tutelage. We have been spending money for farmers, we have been spending money for stockmen, we have been spending money for schools, but they can not find an Indian, they tell us, competent to do the work of a stockman to look after the stock.

There is Bertha D. Wallace, field matron, $1,680.

David Chacktoot, private, $540. He is an Indian. I can tell that by the salary he receives.

Warren B. MacMillan, forest examiner, $2,750.

Silas O. Davis, ranger, $2,000.

Edward W. Weave, ranger, $2,100.

Edwin Wessen, junior forester, $2,000.

Arlie W. Toole, forest assistant, $2,300.

Harold Weaver, forest assistant, $2,500.

Floyd H. Phillips, forest assistant, $2,300.

Marion J. Gober, forest guard, $1,860.

Are there not any Indians on that reservation competent to be forest guards? Are there not any Indians, born and raised there and educated by the department, who are competent to be forest rangers or even forest guards?

Clarence A. Middlebusher, scaler, $1,980.

Opie K. Place, scaler, $1,920.

George C. Hepwarth, scaler, $1,920.

Frank C. Maness, scaler, $2,040.

Then we have some more rangers.

Robert D. Holtz, ranger, $2,000.

Allen E. Space, ranger, $2,300.

Then we have another forest guard—James L. Andrews, $1,740.

Then we have a supervisor—Frederick R. Moffat, forest supervisor, $3,300.

Then we have some more scalers.

Phillip J. Duffy, scaler, $1,920.

Roy Rice, scaler, $1,860.

Clyde W. Flinn, scaler, $1,980.

Floyd E. Lamb, scaler, $1,920.

Then we have senior forest ranger—Stanley J. Johnson, $2,400.

Earl L. Silver, senior forest ranger, $2,400.

Nicholas Welter, senior forest ranger, $2,300.

Just stop and think of what that means, and how that is coming out of the pockets of these Indians.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 192 of the Senate hearings the Senator will find that the salaries have all been raised since last year for all these people, because the salaries are stated here on page 192, and each one is very considerably less than the salaries the Senator has just been reading.

Mr. WHEELER. This is as of November 30, 1931.

Inez Rucker, head nurse; Florence Miller, nurse; Pearl I. Clark, nurse; Mattie L. Middlebusher, nurse; Anna Foust, laborer; Charles L. Mick, scaler.

Albert Christy—it does not say what his work is, but he draws $1,860.

Harry G. France, $1,860.

"Which is aside," as is pointed out in this letter furnished me, "from the agency personnel; that is, paid from the $75,000 item. As the Interior bill was reported out, $176,000 of tribal funds would be appropriated, made up as follows," and so forth.

The Indian says:

> We estimate our income during the fiscal year 1933 to be $250,000 or less under present market conditions. This would leave $74,000 to be placed to the credit of the tribe.

He said further:

> I also want to point out that if the $66,420 will be spent it is approximately 20 per cent of the annual income for forestry work, of which the department should only have 8 per cent, according to their rules and regulations.

Mr. President, I serve notice here that unless there is a reduction, unless these Indians are given some of this work on these various reservations, unless they are employed as forest guards, unless they are employed as scalers, unless they are taken and taught how to use their own property and how to safeguard their own property, I propose to stand here and fight on every single Indian bill that ever comes here. It is an outrage upon the Indians, because of the fact that their money is being spent, their assets are being dissipated, and the Indians are getting no good out of it.

We have had these Indians under our control for 25 years or more, and fine articles are written in some of the magazines by some of the publicists for the Indian Bureau telling of the wonderful work they have done. They pick out some one single individual Indian and hold her up as a great example of what they are doing. But do they ever go to the records and say, "You have here a pay roll of thousands upon thousands of dollars for Indian guards and scalers"?

As I said on the floor yesterday, any Senator who is at all familiar with the lumber business knows that it does not take an expert, a graduate from a forestry school, to be a scaler. What do they take up in Michigan? What do they take in Utah? What do they take in Montana? They go out and find some man who has lived in the forest, who has been around the woods, a man scarcely able to write his own name, but he goes out and scales timber, and he is used in the courts of the States and the Nation as an expert witness to tell about how much timber is scaled. But when it comes to scaling the Indians' land, the bureau must go to some forestry school and pay men $1,800 to $2,500 or $4,000 a year as expert scalers. But you must not discharge them, no matter whether your timber operations are closed down or not; you must keep them on at the Indians' expense, in order to keep a white man's organization together at the expense of the Indians.

Let one of these Indians come here and complain about the superintendent, let him come here and complain against the Indian Bureau, and what do they do to him? They go out on the reservation and dig up every little, petty thing that Indian has ever done in his whole life. If he has ever brought a bottle of liquor onto the reservation—and they find it out—he is prosecuted, he is thrown into jail, he is intimidated. The record is full of the cases of Indians being persecuted because of the fact that they had the temerity to come to Congress to testify. If an Indian ever steps aside in the slightest degree, that man is shown up by the Indian Bureau, which wants to preserve jobs for its employees at the expense of the Indians.

It is no pleasure for me to go about these various Indian reservations and hold hearings and work night and day, it is not a pleasant thing, but it is a duty which somebody has to perform if the Indians are to get any kind of fair treatment from the Government of the United States at all.

The Indian Bureau can not justify these appropriations, the Committees on Appropriations of the House and of the Senate can not justify these appropriations. After 25 or 30 years of control of the Indians of the United States we find them to-day with their lands mortgaged, we find them with their oil resources gone, we find them with their timber gone, we find them poverty stricken, uneducated, and worse off than when the Government took control of them 25 or 30 years ago. They are sent out into the world with incomplete educations, unqualified even to take jobs as forest guards, to protect their own property. We find them, after 25 years of education under the Bureau of Indian Affairs, incompetent to hold jobs as nurses in their own reservations, incompetent to hold jobs as teachers under their own bureau, incompetent to hold jobs as scalers, incompetent to do anything excepting the most menial work, and then, if there is a white man upon the reservation, he generally gets the job, instead of the Indian whose money they are expending.

I would not be appealing for the Indian here if it were not for the fact that the Government is spending his money, and it has no right to do it.

The Indian is the ward of the Government, and I say without fear of contradiction that the way we have handled the Indians of the United States is a shame and a disgrace to this Government of ours, and there should be a change.

FOREIGN LOANS IN THE CHEMICAL INDUSTRY

During the delivery of Mr. WHEELER's speech,

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me, in order that I may make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be inserted in the RECORD a pamphlet issued by the Chemical Foundation of America, incorporating a letter addressed to Hon. REED SMOOT on December 31, 1931, and signed by Francis P. Garvan. It touches the question of loans of American capital to foreign interest to promote the production of foreign products to be sold in competition with our own products and to the destruction of American interests.

It is a very remarkable pamphlet and well worth reading and study.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AMERICAN SAVERS' MONEY LOANED TO WORLD CHEMICAL CARTEL OR ITS ALLIES FOR THE PURPOSE OF CUTTING THE THROAT OF THE CHEMICAL DEVELOPMENT OF AMERICA ESSENTIAL TO ITS NATIONAL DEFENSE, NATIONAL HEALTH, NATIONAL INDUSTRY, NATIONAL AGRICULTURE, AND NATIONAL CULTURE

[Letter received in evidence by the United States Senate Committee on Finance, January 7, 1932]

THE CHEMICAL FOUNDATION (INC.),
654 Madison Avenue, New York City, December 31, 1931.

[Chartered for the advancement of chemical and allied science and industry in the United States without financial profit to itself. Francis P. Garvan, president; George J. Corbett, vice president; William W. Buffum, treasurer and general manager; Paul Smith, secretary; Joseph H. Choate, jr., general counsel; B. Howell Griswold, jr., William G. Mahaffy, and Bradley W. Palmer, trustees]

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Senate Finance Committee,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMOOT: As president of the Chemical Foundation, instituted by the United States Government to encourage chemical industry and research for the protection of the people of the United States in their national defense, in their public health, and in the improvement of their standard of living, it becomes my duty in reference to the subject matter now before your committee to call your attention to certain foreign loans which have been made by our bankers in direct hostility to those interests.

In the first place, the American chemical industry has been under the particular protection of this committee since the days in 1914 when the war forced upon us all the realization that we were indeed "dependent America"—dependent for our dyes, for our drugs, for our fertilizers, for our explosives, etc., etc. It is needless to refer back to Bernstorff's telegram to his home office directing the shutting off of dyes, and thus throwing 4,000,000 men in America out of work; to refer back to Hossenfelder's report that the cries of the hospitals here were growing ever louder and louder and urging upon Germany to continue her policy of shutting off drugs, such as salvarsan for our 10,000,000 syphilitics, luminal for our epileptics, etc., etc. Those days are past—one after another these powers of blackmail by foreign nations have been removed by the persistent development of our chemical industries until to-day we can safely say that our chemists have successfully conquered fertilizers (nitrates from the air, potash, etc.), drugs (100 per cent independent), dyes (94 per cent independent), iodine, artificial silk, plastics, and now, at last, rubber, leaving only coffee and tin in the hands of any foreign nation for the exertion of pressure upon the freedom of this Congress and this people.

When we state that this great national independence has been achieved by the American chemical industry, we mean with the full cooperation of this committee and of Congress, of all the administrations from President Wilson on, of all the colleges and schools in the country, and of all the people in general, with the exception of these international bankers who have never cooperated with American chemistry, but who, on the contrary, have been persistently borrowing the savings of the American people and, for the bribe of huge commissions, have been loaning these savings to the international chemical cartel, or its constituent companies or allies, the cartel whose success is necessarily based upon the destruction of our industry and our independence.

Irrespective of the present investigation, I earnestly request your committee to make a careful investigation of this great cartel, with its branches even in our own country, which is being built up and nourished by American money, handed to them by so-called American bankers.

As your committee has so well understood in reference to these foreign loans in general, the evil has been—

First. The loss forever of a great part of the $15,000,000,000 loaned abroad.

Second. The loss, during this period of great strain, of the basis of credit which this $15,000,000,000 would have constituted had it been kept at home. Economists estimate this as at least the loss of seventy-five billions of credit, or five times the base, for which this country is now suffering.

Third. The loaning of the $15,000,000,000 to foreign competitors of our own manufacturing.

Fourth. Providing the foreign competitors with credit equal to five times the loans, based on the loans.

All these evils can be seen in their intensified form in the international bankers' loans to foreign competing chemical industries. Our chemical industry is faced, not only in our own country but throughout the world, with competitors whose pockets are filled with American savers' money, and with the ability to extend long-time credit based thereon—competitors who either never intend to repay their loans or who intend to buy them up in a depreciated market or 10 or 20 cents on the dollar.

The only defense these bankers have been able to suggest for themselves is that they were encouraging foreign trade. Your Commerce Department will expose this fallacy in detail to you, but the whole fallacy appears in the fact that Germany's export trade to-day, with her natural resources and only 60,000,000 people, has been built up under these foreign loans until it equals our own export trade, with our natural resources and our 120,000,000 people—she, the borrower, and we, the lender. The truth is the world borrows in our market and buys in the cheapest market, or in the case of a monopoly, in the only market.

The following is a list of a few of the loans which I have been able to learn about with my meager facilities. I ask your committee to exert its full powers of subpœna and cross-examination to expose this menace to our people. If not exposed and checked, it threatens our national defense, our public health, and our standard of living. In addition to these loans, full examination should be made into short-term loans, direct loans upon their own securities, and every other form of subterfuge under which our own money is being used to cut our own throats:

NITRATE COMPANIES COMPETING WITH AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS WHICH HAVE BEEN FINANCED BY AMERICAN MONEY

Anglo-Chilean Consolidated Nitrate Corporation

Sixteen million five hundred thousand dollars, 20-year 7 per cent sinking fund debenture bonds.
Issue price, $100.
Present market price, $7.
Issued November 1, 1925.
Due November 1, 1945.
Issued by Lehman Bros., Blair & Co. (Inc.), and Goldman, Sachs & Co.

The Lautaro Nitrate Co. (Ltd.)

Thirty-two million dollars, first-mortgage 6 per cent convertible gold bonds, due 1954.
Issue price, $99.
Present market price, $9.
Issued July 1, 1929.
Due July 1, 1954.
Issued by the National City Co., Bankers Co. of New York, Brown Bros. & Co., Lehman Bros., and Continental Illinois Co.

Norwegian Hydroelectric Nitrogen Corporation

Twenty million dollars, refunding and improvement gold bonds, series A 5½ per cent.
Issue price, $95.
Present market price, $52.50.
Issued November 1, 1927.
Due November 1, 1957.
Issued by the National City Co.

NOTE.—Since 1907 the company has been manufacturing nitrates and fertilizers by the electric-arc process and has recently arranged with the I. G. Farbenindustrie for the adoption of the Haber-Bosch ammonia process, now in successful use in Germany, which will permit the company to increase its capacity to an equivalent of 535,000 tons of nitrate of lime a year, or over two and one-half times its present production capacity.

Ruhr Chemical Corporation (Germany)

Four-million-dollar sinking fund mortgage, 6 per cent, series A, due April 1, 1948.
Issue price, $92¼.
Present price, $20 to $25.
Issued April 1, 1928.
Due April 1, 1948.
Issued by Dillon, Read & Co., International Acceptance Bank (Inc.), and J. Henry Schroeder Banking Corporation.

Also a private loan of $34,000,000, issued by the National City Co. to the recently organized Chilean Nitrate Co., known as "Cosach," which is capitalized at $375,000,000. Twenty million dollars of this sum, according to newspaper statements attached, were sold in this country.

The Ruhr Chemical Corporation is engaged in the manufacture of ammonia, nitric acid, and fertilizer. The use of American capital to develop this company is of interest at the present time in view of an agreement recently entered into between France and Germany for the purchase of fertilizer of German manufacture. The Ruhr Chemical Corporation is a member of the German nitrogen cartel.

Before the Great War we were entirely dependent upon Chile for the nitrogen that went into our high explosives and a large part of the nitrogen which was used for fertilizers. To-day, thanks to the efforts of our chemists, we are independent of Chile or any other country for the nitrogen so necessary in either peace or war.

The effectiveness of our own production upon our imports of Chilean nitrate is disclosed by the fact that in 1928 we imported 1,032,918 long tons of Chilean nitrate of soda; in 1930 the importation had dropped to 567,894 long tons, with the outlook for the year 1931 of an even greater diminution. The production of synthetic nitrate of soda in this country has also had a tremendous effect on the price of this fertilizer to the farmer. In December, 1928, the price per hundred pounds of sodium nitrate in this country was $2.07½ per hundred pounds; now the price is $1.67 per hundred pounds.

The fixation of atmospheric nitrogen in the United States grew slowly from the close of the war until 1926, when private enterprise fixed about 13,000 tons of nitrogen. Then production began to expand. By 1928 it had risen to 26,000 tons of nitrogen. In 1929 to 84,000 tons, and in 1930 to 140,000 tons.

The figures given above are production figures. The growth of capacity is even more striking. In 1926 capacity had risen to 30,000 tons, in 1929 to 135,000 tons, and in 1930 to 175,000 tons. New plants and new units of existing plants have given us a capacity in the year 1931 of approximately 300,000 tons of pure nitrogen. This is the equivalent of more than 1,800,000 tons of nitrate of soda.

If the United States should become involved in a war of major proportions, it would require for military explosives a maximum of less than 140,000 tons of nitrogen annually. The situation in event of war, therefore, is briefly as follows:

	Tons
Needed for agriculture	350,000
Needed for military purposes	150,000
Needed for industry	100,000
Total	600,000

To meet these needs we shall have the following capacities by the close of this year:

	Tons
By-product	200,000
Synthetic	300,000
Organic	50,000
Total	550,000

In other words, there will be a shortage of only 50,000 tons, which can readily be covered by increasing the capacity of our synthetic and by-product plants. As they are readily susceptible of a 10 to 20 per cent increase, our practical independence for peace and war needs combined is assured.

The United States also has been dependent upon Chile for its supply of iodine, an indispensable antiseptic. American chemists have found a way of producing iodine in this country, and in case of an emergency could produce the amount sufficient to meet the needs of our country.

American I. G. Chemical Corporation

Thirty million dollars, 5½ per cent convertible debentures guaranteed by German I. G.
Issue price, $95.
Present market price, $59.
Issued May 1, 1929. Due May 1, 1949.
Issued by the National City Co.; International Manhattan Co.; Lee, Higginson & Co.; Harris, Forbes & Co.; Brown Bros. & Co.; Bankers Co. of New York; the Equitable Trust Co. of New York; and Continental Illinois Co.

The bonds of the American I. G. are convertible into common "A" stock. Perhaps for the first time in the history of financial issues in America the company is given the right to redeem these common "A" shares, in all or in part, in cash, at a price to be fixed by its market value, irrespective of its actual value. In other words, the German I. G. has within its power to always take back the 100 per cent ownership of the common stock of this corporation upon terms which can be manipulated by itself.

The international dye cartel until recently was composed of Germany, France, and Switzerland, but now includes England. Your committee will note that England and France, our largest foreign debtors, have joined hands with Germany in an agreement to divide the markets of the world for the sale of dyestuffs in direct competition with our American manufacturers.

Reports of this international cartel say that the agreement for a world dye cartel is designed primarily for an exchange of information and discoveries, as well as the control of competition approximately within the lines of the present division of world markets among the major companies. German chemical-trade circles believe that the reaching of this agreement is especially noteworthy, because the British interests adhered to it before the present Government had reached a decision on the future trade policy of Great Britain. The new world agreement in synthetic dyestuffs does not include the American market. The reason for this is obvious.

The inclusion of Great Britain in the international dye cartel is due to the efforts of Dr. Carl Bosch, chairman of the executive committee of the I. G. Farbenindustrie, a great German chemical monopoly. Doctor Bosch is also chairman of the board of directors of the American I. G. Chemical Corporation, which he caused to be formed in this country in 1929. This latter company is owned and controlled by the German company. Soon after its organization, a syndicate headed by the National City Co. floated the loan of $300,000,000 of 5½ per cent convertible debentures guaranteed by the German I. G.

The full board of directors of the American I. G. is as follows:

Prof. Dr. Carl Bosch, chairman of the executive committee, I. G. Farbenindustrie.

Mr. Walter Teagle, president Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey.

Mr. Charles S. Mitchell, chairman the National City Bank of New York.

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, president Ford Motor Co.

Mr. Paul M. Warburg, chairman International Acceptance Bank, Inc.

Mr. Adolf Kuttroff.

Mr. H. A. Metz, president General Aniline Works (Inc.).

Mr. W. E. Weiss, vice president Drug, Inc.

Dr. Herman Schmitz, member executive committee, I. G. Farbenindustrie.

Dr. Wilfrid Greif, member executive committee, I. G. Farbenindustrie.

According to the book American Loans to Germany, by Robert R. Kuczynski, in conjunction with the Institute of Economics, of Washington, D. C., the following private short-term loans were made to German industries in direct competition with American industries:

Date	Borrower	Creditor country	Managing banks	Nominal capital	Maturity	Interest rate

Very truly yours,

FRANCIS P. GARVAN.

CHILEAN NITRATE LOAN COMBATED BY GARVAN—CHEMICAL FOUNDATION PRESIDENT CALLS ON BANKS NOT TO JEOPARDIZE THE UNITED STATES

Financial institutions in the United States are being urged by Francis P. Garvan, president of the Chemical Foundation, this city, to refuse to participate in the proposed financing of the Chilean nitrate of soda combine. Mr. Garvan declares that the unification and development scheme of the Chilean nitrate producers, by reason of the understandings existing between them and the German producers of synthetic nitrogen fertilizers, is nothing other than a step toward the strengthening of foreign competition against the nitrogen industry of the United States.

In a telegram sent December 22 to 5,000 banks in all parts of the United States, Mr. Garvan said:

"Information reached United States banks of country about to be asked to loan one hundred millions of money of their awards and depositors to Chilean Government and Chilean-German nitrate cartel. Request you not to foster this attempt to send our funds to aid German and Chilean interests in destroying our nitrate industry which is backbone of our national defense and agricultural progress. It is question of banking morality and patrotism. Will send you complete analysis of situation immediately offering is announced."

With a view of interesting Congress and administration officials in the national-welfare aspect—as he sees it—of the proposed Chilean financing, Mr. Garvan sent, December 23, to the Members of Congress and to a number of high Government officials the following telegram:

"In this hour of national distress certain financiers are contemplating the loan of one hundred million dollars of the savings of the American people to the German-Chilean nitrate cartel. Any examination of this loan, no matter what its disguise, will quickly show it to be in the interest of the world-wide German-Anglo-Chilean nitrogen combination and will also show that the success of that combination will be measured by the extent of its destruction of our own chemical industries, which are now able to produce the present consumption and by the summer of next year will be equal to the normal consumption of this country. This means that our agricultural independence and our national defense is threatened by this combine, and to draw on our own people's savings to our national hurt, I maintain, calls for your resistance in every possible way at your command. All essential facts are within the knowledge of the proper departments of the Government, and you can seek governmental advice if my assertions are a question."

CHILE NITRATE AGREEMENT ON NEW BASIS NOW SEEN—FINANCE MINISTER RUIZ EXPRESSES CONFIDENCE IN OUTCOME OF CONFERENCES HERE—DELEGATES REARRANGING CAPITAL STRUCTURE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF COMPLETE PLANS IS EXPECTED IN THE NEAR FUTURE

(Special cable to the Journal of Commerce)

SANTIAGO, CHILE, January 14.—Carlos Castro Ruiz, newly appointed Finance Minister of Chile, said in his first public speech to-day that negotiations for the financing of the Cosach, or National Nitrate Co. of Chile, were nearing completion in New York and that an announcement of the revised plan could be expected in the near future. He said he was extremely confident of the success of the negotiations, which only needed approval by all parties of certain minor changes in the capital structure of the company.

The Cosach is the combine of 28 nitrate-producing companies, which, with the Government as partners, is expected to return the Chilean industry to a stable and paying basis and to strengthen its competitive position in the world markets.

FINANCIAL BASIS CHANGED

Changes are being effected in the financial arrangements underlying the development of the Cosach, it was learned in informed quarters yesterday. One of the matters receiving attention at the current conferences between delegates of the Chilean Government and representatives of the companies and the banking groups here is believed to be the reallocation of the stock of the national company, to be distributed among the 28 nitrate-producing units in the Cosach, it was said.

The plan for the financing of the combine, as announced in July by Pablo Ramirez, representative of the Chilean Government, placed the authorized capital stock of the company at the equivalent of $375,000,000. This was to be divided into two classes of equal size, one of which was to be assigned to the Government and the other to be used in acquisition by the national company of the individual producing corporations. Each class was to be of 15,000,000 shares of stock of the par value of 100 pesos. The class B stock, that to be used by the company, might be divided into 5,000,000 shares of 7 per cent preference stock and 10,000,000 ordinary shares, the plan showed.

[From the New York Times, March 19, 1931]

LOAN OF $34,000,000 FOR NITRATE DEAL—NATIONAL COMPANY OF CHILE VIRTUALLY COMPLETES PLAN FOR SALE OF BONDS—PART WILL GO TO EUROPE—LUMP-SUM PAYMENTS TO THE GOVERNMENT ARRANGED IN LIEU OF EXPORT TAX

The National Nitrate Co. of Chile has practically completed arrangements for the sale of $34,000,000, seven per cent bonds to an international banking syndicate, it was learned yesterday. It is understood that $50,000,000 of these bonds will be authorized, but that not all of them will be sold publicly. The proceeds of $26,000,000 of the issue are to go to the Chilean Government as the installment due it for 1931 in return for the cancellation of the export tax. The remainder will probably be used for working capital and additional construction.

It is believed that a substantial amount of the issue will find a market in Europe. While present plans call for the sale of one half the bonds here and the other half in England, it is understood that if the participation of French and other continental bankers is obtained the proportion allotted to the American market will be reduced to about $10,000,000.

Under the terms of the agreement with the Chilean Government through which the National Nitrate Co. of Chile was formed, the Government will receive $22,500,000 this year, $20,000,000 in 1932, and $17,500,000 in 1933 in lieu of the export tax formerly levied on nitrate and iodine. These sums represent an approximation of the revenues the Government would have received from the export tax.

The bond issue will have a sinking-fund obligation, it is said. To take care of this and other charges in connection with the issuance of the bonds, it is understood that the company will segregate a certain sum on each ton of nitrate exported.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if I had known that the Senator from Mississippi was going to be so cruel to the Senator from Utah in calling the whole Senate's attention to these loans that have been made, I doubt that I would have yielded for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Montana need not be worried about the Senator from Utah. The Senator from Mississippi referred to foreign loans?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the document touches the subject matter which the Committee on Finance investigated.

Mr. SMOOT. That is perfectly all right. I want to say to the Senator from Montana that I do not know whether he would like to have those loans canceled or not. The Senator from Utah, however, is not in favor of their cancellation.

Mr. WHEELER. I am glad to know that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Montana ought to have that information for I have made the statement publicly many times.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KING. The investigation did not relate at all to the indebtedness due the United States from foreign countries who were associated with the United States during the World War. The investigation conducted under the resolution submitted by the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] related to loans which had been made largely through the banks of New York without due regard to the American people or to those upon whom they unloaded the securities of foreign countries. That is what this letter refers to and not the loans made by the United States to its allies during the World War. I have never heard such a statement, until my colleague just mentioned it, that there should be a cancellation of the loans made by the banks to foreign municipalities and foreign countries and to their nationals. The evidence before the committee was elicited under the resolution of the Senator from California.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the senior Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I have received many letters in relation to the cancellation of foreign debts, and the request of the Senator from Mississippi that this letter be inserted in the RECORD I thought had reference to the cancellation of those debts.

So far as the other loans are concerned, they never entered my mind; and if that is what this letter relates to, I will say I can not even recall the letter, although, no doubt, it has been received, for I receive many, many such letters.

After the conclusion of Mr. WHEELER's speech,

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8397) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. At the request of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] for an itemized statement of the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the items in the pending bill I have the information in detail.

The total is $3,596,577. The unexpended balance in the Virgin Islands item is $101,000; Office of Education, $5,000; Indian Bureau, $1,512,500; National Park Service, $16,000; Bureau of Reclamation, $1,962,077.

I shall put the statement into the RECORD, giving the unexpended balance in each of the items.

The statement is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 9, 1932.

Virgin Islands approximate unexpended balance $101,000 at the end of fiscal year 1932, for use on projects already authorized and that will be started during the present fiscal year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Before the Senator passes his memorandum to the desk, may I ask for the detail of the expenses of the Geological Survey with respect to the unexpended balance for topographic service? Is that item available in the Senator's information? The bill reserves $150,000 of the unexpended balance. I am anxious to know what the unexpended balance is.

Mr. SMOOT. That $150,000, from the testimony that was given, will not be needed, although they expect to have $100,000 that will be expended this year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has not caught my question. As the language reads, there is an additional balance which is to be closed into the Treasury above and beyond $150,000, and I am wondering whether that fact is available.

Mr. SMOOT. The appropriation is to be matched by the States. Some of the States have virtually intimated that they could not match the money. The estimate would be $100,000 for that purpose. If all the States should come in, it would take $150,000, but if not, of course, it would take less than that amount.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have received a statement or petition from a number of Indians which I think should receive the attention of Senators.

I shall read from this statement, which bears date February 26, 1932, and is signed by a number of Indians and approved by a number of white men and women, who are friends of the Indians:

To the Members of Congress and to Friends of the Indians Everywhere:

We are Indians, spokesmen of various Indian tribes. We appeal to you because our Indian people are in a state of desperation. We know the truth about the conditions of our people.

May I say that the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who has just addressed the Senate, has depicted a situation upon the Indian reservations that challenges, or should challenge, the attention of the American people and result in a demand for material changes in the policies obtaining in the Indian Bureau. Statements of the character which I am about to read corroborate the position taken by the Senator from Montana. His statements are in harmony with many of the statements found in this petition.

I read:

We do not care anything about officeholders or politics, and yet we are compelled to name the officials at whose hands the Indians are suffering from old wrongs being continued and new wrongs being imposed. We have to be specific, because otherwise we would not be listened to.

Every statement which we here make is supported by records which are conclusive. None of the statements can be successfully disputed.

When Secretary Wilbur and Commissioners Rhoads and Scattergood took office in 1929 we were led to feel a wonderful hope. They announced great programs and made great promises. We assert that they have forsaken their programs. They have broken their promises. They have set up new evils of far-reaching kinds—evils which their predecessors did not sponsor.

We know that the public has been led to think differently from the statement we are making. Secretary Wilbur and Commissioners Rhoads and Scattergood for more than two years have given out throughout the press and radio speeches and otherwise misleading and misinforming propaganda. They have depended on this propaganda instead of depending on action for Indian welfare. We solemnly affirm that conditions among the Indians to-day from Oklahoma to the State of Washington and from Minnesota to Arizona, New Mexico and California are more deplorable than they have been at any time since the United States became guardian over the Indians.

We make the following charges, and we would add to the list, but we want to keep this statement as brief as we can.

THE PROMISES THEY ARE BREAKING

1. Promises were made to reorganize the Indian Bureau; officials publicly acknowledged, in 1929, that important reform legislation was needed; they pledged themselves to Congress in five long communications dated December 11 and December 17, 1929. They have abandoned the pledges contained in these December 11 and December 17, 1929, communications. They have not supported the legislation which was promptly introduced to make effective their own undertakings. On the contrary, they have fought against that legislation, in some cases openly and in other cases by procrastination and obstruction. Their action is continuing and is growing more wholesale and more intense.

The specific pledges which they have broken, which we here refer to, were as follows:

(a) To work for legislation giving to Indian tribes the largest possible voice, under new statutes, in the management of their tribal business.

(b) To work for legislation permitting the incorporation of Indian tribes.

May I say that earlier in the day I invited attention to the policy pursued in Canada by the Dominion Government in dealing with the Indians of Canada? Their tribal relations were recognized. Each tribe constituted a sort of corporate entity to manage its own affairs and had a democratic form of government or administration that was conducive to initiative and individual development, and to the progress, civilization, and moral development of the Indians. We could well emulate the example of the Dominion Government in its Indian policy.

(c) To work for legislation bringing to an end the disinheritance of Indians through the sale of their heirship lands by the Government when the allotted Indian dies.

(d) To work for legislation doing justice to the Indian tribes in their claims against the Government and promptly settling these claims.

(e) To work for comprehensive amendments of the allotment law, which law they then acknowledged to be one of the chief means of destroying Indian life.

(f) To radically reorganize the Indian irrigation and reclamation service; specifically, according to Secretary Wilbur's undertaking, to transfer most of the Indian reclamation work to the general Reclamation Service under Dr. Elwood Mead.

May I say, Mr. President, that a number of years ago Doctor Work, when Secretary of the Interior, appointed a committee to make an intensive study of the irrigation projects which had been inaugurated upon the reservations? The report of this committee was suppressed or rather was not published by the Indian Bureau after it was made. It seems to have been put into the musty archives of the Indian Bureau and was only dragged to light by the efficient and able committee of which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is chairman.

That report, known as the Preston-Engle report, condemned much of the irrigation work and many of the reclamation projects of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and recommended that a number of them be transferred to the Reclamation Service. Senators are familiar with the fact that the Reclamation Service has charge of a large number of governmental projects in the public land States. It is absurd to have two Federal organizations dealing with reclamation projects. There is duplication which should be avoided. The reclamation projects under the control of the Reclamation Service are in the same States as a rule where are found these so-called reclamation projects under the control of the Indian Bureau.

RECLAMATION UNDERTAKING ABANDONED

The Preston-Engle report condemned the waste, incompetency, and inexcusable negligence of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in the handling of some of its reclamation projects and, as I have said, recommended that a number of them be transferred to the Reclamation Service. Secretary Wilbur, as I recall, in one of his statements soon after his appointment, indicated that that policy would be pursued, but it has been abandoned or forgotten. That is one of the complaints found in the address, from which I continue to read:

The record of the abandonment of these undertakings by Secretary Wilbur and Commissioners Rhoads and Scattergood is complete and is known to each of the Indian committees of Congress and to the Senate Indian investigation committee, as well as to all tribal delegations in Washington.

The address continues by stating that in abandoning their legislative undertakings and contending against efforts at legislative reform, Secretary Wilbur and Commissioners Rhoads and Scattergood have ignored some of the most important features of existing law designed by Congress to safeguard the Indians against wrongful exploitation, and proceeds:

OUR TRIBAL LANDS SEIZED AND ALLOTMENT RIGHTS VIOLATED

2. Through regulations of June 4, 1931, the officials practically have seized Indian tribal lands totaling thousands of square miles. These lands, under the new regulations, are to be leased to whites, principally to white sheep owners, in open violation of the laws of Congress requiring tribal consent for the leasing of tribal lands. The officials have stood by this violation of our Indian rights and of the statutes, in the face of detailed exposures and analyses of the facts and the laws before the Senate Indian investigation committee in recent weeks.

3. Through these same regulations of June 4, 1931, the officials are proceeding virtually to coerce the allotted Indians to sign over to the Indian agents powers of attorney, under which powers of attorney the Indian agents are to proceed to lease these allotted lands to whites. The action evades the laws of Congress and reduces the individual Indians to mere shadows, so far as the leasing of their own lands is concerned.

I might add that considerable testimony appears in the recent hearings conducted by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, of which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is chairman, in regard to these matters.

OUR TRIBAL MONEYS DIVERTED TO BUREAU SALARIES

These officials are continuing the use of Indian tribal and trust moneys and of tribal income for the payment of salaries to Indian Bureau employees, including a great many useless employees. In a large number of cases their action diverts all or substantially all our Indian money to Indian Bureau support. Through the years these officials have refused to change their course in spite of the announcement repeatedly made by the Senate Indian investigation committee that their action is bringing about the rapid exhaustion of our tribal resources.

The Senate committee's most recent protest and report about the misuse of our tribal funds exhibited a deplorable condition on the Mescalero Apache Reservation, and was dated December 21, 1931. One of its earlier reports, dated January 6, 1930, described a bad state of affairs at the Klamath Reservation in Oregon, and obtained no result except that Commissioner Rhoads promoted the discredited Klamath Superintendent to be assistant chief forester, at Washington, with increased power over the Klamath Tribe; and thereafter, under pressure of its forestry division, the department adopted the law-breaking regulations about the leasing of Indian lands which we have specified above.

CONGRESS IS BAFFLED, AND WE ARE HELPLESS ABOUT OUR MONEYS

5. The attempt to secure legislation bringing the financial operations of the Indian Bureau into the light of day has been opposed and blocked by Secretary Wilbur and Commissioners Rhoads and Scattergood. Specifically, the Frazier bill (S. 3417), directing the Comptroller General to devise and enforce a businesslike system of accounting for Indian Bureau moneys, was blocked * * * on May 2, 1930, the facts being of record in the Senate. The Secretary and his commissioners have perpetuated that system of Indian Bureau budgeting which conceals the uses made of Indian tribal funds and practically defeats the effort of Congress to protect our Indian-owned moneys, while leaving the Indians themselves helpless and in the dark.

THE UNLAWFUL DEBTS WHICH ARE CRUSHING US ARE BEING INCREASED

6. Though admitting on December 11, 1929, that we Indians were being crushed under a debt of more than $25,000,000, and though admitting that a large part of this debt is probably unconstitutional and has been, in any event, imposed in violation of the guarantees of the allotment law and of our trust patents, the officials referred to have taken practically no steps to cancel the wrongful debt or to stop the continued increase of the debt through grants which they have continued to obtain from Congress for unjustifiable expenditures by that Indian Irrigation Service which they have refused to reorganize. They have given out propaganda concerning one solitary action which they did take, remitting approximately one twenty-fifth of the wrongful debt. * * *

The preceding administration had been justly criticized in the matter of our reimbursable debt, yet it remitted two and one-half times as much as the present administration has remitted. Meantime, their propaganda is silent about their actions in increasing the wrongful debt in many times the small sums which they have remitted while continuing to do practically nothing, either through the courts or through an appeal to Congress, to secure cancellation of the illegal millions of debt which are crushing us down.

THE BOARDING SCHOOL SYSTEM STRENGTHENED AND CONTINUED

7. The bureau has given nation-wide advertising to alleged program of cutting down boarding schools and substituting modern day school opportunities for our children. But the actual facts are these: That in three years they have closed three boarding schools with a capacity of just 2.2 per cent of the total boarding-school capacity. When they have closed two additional schools whose closing has been forecast (Hoopa and Lac du Flambeau) they will have closed 3.23 per cent of the total boarding-school capacity. The boarding schools in 1932 are receiving a more overwhelming proportion of the money spent on Indian education than they received in 1929. In 1932 the boarding schools are more crowded, beyond their stated physical capacity, than they were in 1929. And the officials have made requests for appropriations for the year 1933 which insure that the hurtful dominance of the boarding school will be maintained to the end of the present administration. Our children continue to be denied the kind of schooling which is both modern and American, and continue to be made victims, physically and morally, of the discredited boarding-school system.

We think that Dr. J. Carson Ryan, director of Indian education, is doing the best he can, but we state the facts which show that his hands have been tied in the most important part of his task.

* * * * * * *

I may say that the report refers to the leasing of a power site on the Flathead Reservation in Montana and expresses opposition to the course pursued, and also refers to the employment of Mr. Cramton who, it is alleged, has been brought into the Interior Department and has had much to do with the Indian Bureau. The petition proceeds:

HAGERMAN

10. Secretary Wilbur and Commissioners Rhoads and Scattergood have restored to high office * * * H. J. Hagerman, and are supporting him without limit in the face of the demand by the Senate Indian investigation committee that he be removed from the Government pay roll. They have placed him in charge of the fate of the Indians in four States—Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, and Utah. They have left him in charge of Navajo oil leasing and land matters, in the face of the public record, now completed, that he, holding the power of attorney of that tribe, was chiefly instrumental in selling the Rattlesnake structure to men who are his personal friends for a $1,000 bonus paid to the tribe; and in less than one year a half interest in one-twentieth of said Rattlesnake structure was sold for $300,000, and in less than three years a half interest in the total structure was resold for $3,600,000. The forcing of H. J. Hagerman upon the Indians as their representative holding their power of attorney, in the face of the record now made, is not only a material injury, it is an insult flaunted in the face of all Indians. * * *

THE PUEBLOS BEING RUINOUSLY WRONGED

11. The officials referred to are to-day using their full power to defeat the efforts of Congress to meet its legal and moral obligation to the long-suffering Pueblo Indian Tribes by granting long-deferred compensation for lands and waters lost through derelictions of the Government. Their action appears as a sacrifice of Indian welfare and of public obligation to their determination to "save the face" of * * * Hagerman * * *. As a final blow in this matter, Commissioner Rhoads on February 19 proposed to the House Committee on Indian Affairs that Congress should immediately make payments to the whites for damages due from the Government, while referring back to the * * * Hagerman Pueblo Lands Board the subject of payment to the Indians, this proposal being plainly designed to drive a wedge between the Indians and the whites and to deprive the Indians of the support of the New Mexico delegation. We believe and are assured that the * * * course proposed by the commissioner will not be accepted by the New Mexico delegation or by the white citizens of New Mexico.

THE NAVAJOS' BITTER NEED IS BEING EVADED

12. These officials have refused, or fatally postponed, in the face of a petition (February 10) from the four Senators from Arizona and New Mexico, to submit to Congress a program for saving the Navajo livestock or, as an alternative, to enlist the help of the American Red Cross. Through inaction or willful procrastination, they are letting the sheep asset of the Navajo Indian Tribe perish, with the result, known to all, that large purchases of badly adapted sheep must hereafter be made from white sheepmen, while in the meantime the pauperized Navajos will stand in a bread line or "howl," to again quote Secretary Wilbur's words, while they try to live on some "pickle" to be handed them by the Indian Office. We are hoping the Department of Agriculture may come to the Navajos' rescue.

STARVATION IN MANY OF OUR TRIBES

13. Finally, we urge and plead that Congress and the general public shall know of the terrible physical distress among Indians in practically every part of the country. Secretary Wilbur and Commissioners Rhoads and Scattergood know the facts. * * * We are reliably informed that their own files, if Congress would subpœna them, would reveal an appalling condition of Indian distress and starvation, made known to these officials by their own superintendents and largely ignored by them.

But we do not want to place exclusive stress on the fact that 100,000 or more of our people are being damaged through starvation. We know that millions of people in the United States are now suffering hunger. * * * But our main plea is that the destruction of our citizenship rights and the destruction of such legal protections as exist for our property, be not permitted to continue, and that Congress shall energetically take hold of Indian affairs * * * and proceed to correct it through legislation enacted at the present session.

OUR STATEMENTS ARE ALL OF PROVED RECORD

We have not stated one fact that is not of proved record. There are responsible Members of Congress familiar with every fact we have stated. Congress does have the power to help us.

We believe that if there existed in Canada or in Mexico a state of affairs, in the Indian service of those countries, remotely approaching the shame and hurt which is now going on under Secretary Wilbur and Commissioners Rhoads and Scattergood, the parliaments of those countries would be in a state of uproar. We hope that some attention can now be given to our plight by Congress and by the people of the United States.

Respectfully, in the name of all Indians,

Meade Steele, delegate, Fort Peck Indians, Montana; John M. Green, delegate, Santee Sioux Indians, Nebraska; Henry A. Johnson, councilman, Pima Tribe, Arizona; Memicio Montoya, governor pueblo of San Juan, N. Mex.; Otto Lomavtiu, president Hopi Council of Orabi, Arizona; Robert J. Hamilton, delegate, Blackfeet Tribe, Montana; Alvino Lujan, governor pueblo of Taos, N. Mex. (and the Pueblo Council); José Padilla, governor, Diego Abeita, secretary pueblo of Isleta, N. Mex.; Sotero Ortiz, chairman Council of All the New Mexico Pueblos (signature is personal until the Council of All the New Mexico Pueblos meets); Adam Castillo, president Mission Indian Federation of California ("have visited reservations of southern California and send unanimous indorsement of the Mission Indian Federation to the petition"); Ralph White and William Guyton, Standing Rock Reservation, N. Dak.; Caville Dupuis, chairman Tribal Council of the Flathead Tribe, Montana; Charles Kie, Laguna Indians at Gallup, N. Mex.

To the petition is appended the following statement:

The undersigned white friends of the Indians have carefully read the petition of the Indian tribes dated February 26, 1932. We are familiar with the situation through the report of the Institute for Government Research, the many volumes of printed testimony and the reports of the Senate Indian investigation committee, and through other literature available to any citizen. We believe that the statements in the Indians' petition are accurate as fact and just and moderate as opinion. We desire to add our plea to the plea of the Indians, that Congress and the entire public shall come to the Indians' rescue at this time.

PROPOSED ANTI-INJUNCTION LEGISLATION

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that we take up H. R. 5315, now on the Vice President's desk, an act to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes, and that it be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the bill passed by the Senate on the same subject, S. 935.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. If it leads to no discussion, I have no objection. I should not want the bill to displace the appropriation bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think it will lead to any discussion. The course I suggest is so manifestly fair that, so far as I know, no one is objecting.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator explain what would be done by his suggestion?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I shall be very glad to do that.

The Senate, as we all know, passed the other day the anti-injunction bill. It went to the House, and was left on the Speaker's table. It is there yet. The House proceeded to consider a House bill on the same subject, which was practically the same bill, and passed with a very few amendments—only one or two of any importance—a bill identical with the Senate bill, ignoring the Senate bill entirely, and has sent the House bill over here.

Of course, everybody acquainted with the fundamental principles of parliamentary law knows that that was not a right way to legislate. The House ought to have sent back the Senate bill. In a parliamentary sense, the Senate is in exactly the same position that it would be in if we had done nothing; but it is universally conceded that we do not want to go all over that ground again, as we would have to do if this bill went to a committee and were reported again.

My proposal is, by unanimous consent, to take up the House bill, to strike out all of the text—and that is included in my unanimous-consent request—except the title and the number, so that it will still be a House bill, and to insert in lieu of the House bill the Senate bill that we passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it will go to conference.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, if that is agreed to, I am going to move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HEBERT. If that procedure is to be followed, as I understand, the amendments to the House bill, which in its original state was not unlike the bill as it came to the Senate, would not be considered by the Senate under any circumstances. In other words, we would not have before us in the Senate the amendments to the bill adopted by the House.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the entire matter would then go to conference. It would be just the same.

Suppose the House had proceeded as it ought to have proceeded and had taken up the Senate bill, struck out all after the enacting clause, and inserted a new bill, the same one that is here now, except that it would be under a Senate title instead of a House title, then it would have been in order for me to move, and I would have moved, that the Senate disagree to the House amendments and ask for a conference with the House; so that the same parliamentary situation would have arisen then that will arise if this request is agreed to.

Mr. HEBERT. But let me say to the Senator that in the contingency to which he refers the Senate would have before it the amendments that have been adopted by the House.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HEBERT. In the proposal now made by the Senator the Senate will not have before it the amendments that were adopted by the House.

Mr. NORRIS. It has the House bill before it now.

Mr. HEBERT. Yes; but the proposal of the Senator is to disregard the House bill and substitute the Senate bill for it.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEBERT. So that the amendments adopted by the House will not be before the Senate for consideration at any time. Is that true?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think that is true, but in a technical sense that would have been true if the regular course had been followed.

Mr. HEBERT. But if the House had followed the regular course the Senate would have had before it the amendments adopted by the House to the Senate bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HEBERT. In following the course now suggested by the Senator we shall not have before us the amendments adopted by the House to the House bill.

Mr. NORRIS. In a technical sense we do have. If the House had passed our bill and amended it, when I made the motion to disagree to the House amendments it would have been in order to debate everything there was in the bill; and in a technical sense, a parliamentary sense, it is in order now, if this matter is taken up, to debate the entire House bill. The debate would be unlimited in either case.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that almost identically this thing occurred in reference to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill. The House passed a bill and sent it over here after we had passed our bill; and we struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted the Senate bill, so that the two would then be in conference.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Every provision in the House bill will be in conference if we strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the Senate bill. In other words, the conferees then will have before them both the Senate bill and the House bill; and under the rules governing conferences they can adopt a part of a provision in the House bill and a part of a provision in the Senate bill, if that is the final agreement of the conferees.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. So that the whole matter will be in conference.

Mr. HEBERT. There is this about it, if I may interrupt the Senator——

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEBERT. I am not informed as to the exact effect of the House amendments. I do not know what they are. Would the Senator be willing to let this matter go over until to-morrow in order to give me an opportunity to study the House amendments?

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that, excepting that the Senator will be in the same position to-morrow that he is in to-day.

Let me call the Senator's attention to what will happen, as I understand the rules of the Senate, in case objection is made to this request. Let me preface that by saying that I do not suppose there is a Member of the Senate who desires to take up the anti-injunction bill again and go through with it as we did before. I do not believe anybody wants to do that. We have had a fair test on it, we have debated everything, and we have reached a conclusion.

If this request is objected to, my understanding of the rules is that the House bill will go to the calendar, and it will be on the calendar like any other bill, and of course I will make a motion to take it up, and it may be debated and discussed just the same as we debated and discussed the Senate bill. Another week will be devoted to that debate, all of which it seems to me all of the Senators want to avoid. Unless we do something of this kind, however, we can not avoid it.

I am just as sorry as anyone can be that the bill is in this parliamentary situation; but, of course, the Senator realizes that I am entirely helpless, as the Senate is, and in no way responsible for the way the House has treated the Senate in taking up this bill and passing a new bill.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator that I have no disposition to have the bill brought before the Senate for discussion again, but having taken some part in the debate and having given some consideration to the measure, I should like very much to acquaint myself with the changes that have been made in the House bill before agreeing to the request to substitute the Senate bill for the House measure. If the Senator will let his motion go over until to-morrow——

Mr. NORRIS. Would not the Senator be willing to let me state—I think I have the matter correctly—what I believe to be the only two differences of any importance whatever between the two Houses?

Mr. HEBERT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Sections 11 and 12, as we had them here, together provided for a jury trial in all cases of contempt, regardless of the kind of a case in which the contempt arose. Section 12 applied particularly to persons making a charge against the judge, making it outside the court. We referred to it usually as the newspaper part of the bill. Although it applied to everybody, yet as a matter of practice it probably never would occur—so far as I know, it never has occurred so far—in any case except that of a newspaper that made a comment upon the trial, upon the character or the methods of the judge in conducting the trial. In that case, under the Senate bill, the editor or the person making this charge who was arrested for contempt would be entitled to two things: He could have a jury trial on the contempt, and if he made the right kind of an affidavit the judge could not proceed any further, but another judge would have to be called in to try the contempt proceeding. Under the House provision he would not be entitled to a jury trial, as I understand the House amendment. He could still secure the change in judges that is provided, however.

In section 11 the Senate bill provided that anyone charged with a contempt would be entitled to a jury trial, regardless of the kind of a case in which it arose, whether it was a labor case or any other kind of a case. Under the House amendment he would not be entitled to a jury trial in anything except cases arising under this bill.

I think I have correctly stated those amendments, and they are, as far as I know, the only material amendments in the bill. I believe there is one other material matter. We put in an amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] which had relation to mandatory injunctions. The House has nothing on that subject in its bill.

The House started with the same bill that we did. The Member of the House who introduced the bill there got his copy from me and introduced it in the House. The only thing that brought about this difficulty is that the House has ignored the Senate bill and passed a House bill; and, of course, unless somebody gives up and surrenders and submits to the humiliation involved, if there be humiliation involved in it, neither the House nor the Senate will get any legislation.

If my request for unanimous consent is not agreed to, this bill will go to the calendar. Just as soon as under the rules that can be done—the bill would have to be there one day before it would be subject to that motion—I am going to move to take it up, of course; and I shall expect then, if the Senate votes in favor of taking up the bill, to take it up in the same way that we originally took up the other bill and go through with it and eventually dispose of it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator's request is denied, the Senate will be left to take up the House bill and either adopt its provisions or amend it and send it back?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator's request is granted, he will move to strike out of the House bill all after the enacting clause and insert the Senate bill, and it will immediately go to conference?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is the whole thing.

Mr. FESS. That would seem to me to be the logical course.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, I am asking the Senate in this case to do nothing except what it has already done, as a matter of fact. It does not occur often that this kind of a parliamentary predicament arises, but it always does occur where one House disregards the action of the other House. Something of this kind must be done or we never will get legislation, as every parliamentarian knows.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator has explained the amendment proposed by the House to the provision for a jury trial. Would it be fair to ask the Senator if he would favor such an amendment if that bill were before the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. If I am a member of the conference committee, I will, of course, stand by the Senate bill; but I will say frankly that I would not consider it my duty, unless some definite instruction to that effect were given me by the Senate, to stand by that and prevent legislation if I could not have my way. I realize, as the Senator does, that in order to accomplish anything in a conference both sides must be willing to surrender some of the things they want; and, whether I wanted it or not, if I were a Senate conferee, I should try to secure in the conference report provisions that would conform to the action of the Senate.

I do not think it probable, I will say to the Senator, if this goes to conference, that I will be able to bring back the bill which passed the Senate, because I am going into the conference, if I go at all, with an open mind, and with the understanding that, in order to get any legislation, everybody must be willing to compromise; and I apply that to myself.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I take it, then, the Senator concedes that if a jury trial in contempt cases is to be afforded to those engaged in labor disputes, it should be afforded to every other citizen?

Mr. NORRIS. That is my belief; yes.

Mr. HEBERT. With that understanding, I do not object.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator will remember that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] took a leading part in the discussion of the bill, as being one who was more familiar with it than most of us. Would the Senator from Nebraska yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum, in order that the Senator from Pennsylvania might be present?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BINGHAM. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Cutting	Kean	Schall
Bailey	Dale	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Davis	Keyes	Shipstead
Barbour	Dickinson	King	Shortridge
Barkley	Dill	La Follette	Smith
Bingham	Fess	Lewis	Smoot

Carey	Hawes	Oddie	Watson
Connally	Hayden	Patterson	White
Coolidge	Hebert	Pittman
Copeland	Howell	Reed

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Nebraska would explain his request again. A good many Senators have come in since he preferred it previously.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Connecticut, and perhaps to the annoyance of Senators who were present before, I will go over the matter again.

The Senate the other day passed Senate bill 935, the so-called anti-injunction bill; it went to the House and is on the Speaker's desk in the House at this moment. The House has never taken the Senate bill up and has never considered it. The House of Representatives, however, passed a House bill on the same subject. With a few exceptions, it is word for word the same as the Senate bill. They sent the House bill to the Senate as it was passed in the House.

I have asked unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill; and if that is agreed to, I will move that everything after the enacting clause be stricken out and that the bill which passed the Senate be inserted in lieu of the part stricken out. If the bill is passed in that form, I will move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to the House bill, ask for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The bill as it passed the Senate is now dead, and my request is that we proceed to the consideration of the House bill. The Senate bill is on the Speaker's desk and will probably stay there. The House bill on the same subject, with a few exceptions, is word for word the same as the bill which passed the Senate, and it is the bill which passed the House that I have asked we now consider.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I notice that the bill which passed the House contains provisions which, when we were considering the Senate bill, everyone agreed should be amended; for example, the provision in section 7 requiring that all public officers whose duty it is to protect property be notified. Of course, as we made plain when the matter was discussed during the consideration of the Senate bill, that meant that if, for instance, the Industrial Workers of the World were fomenting an attack upon the property of the Western Union Telegraph Co., every constable, every duty sheriff, and every policeman in the United States would have to be notified before the Western Union Telegraph Co. could enjoin the head of the Industrial Workers of the World.

I trust that when the Senator moves that we insist upon the Senate amendment, he means that very literally.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator came into the Chamber, prior to the roll call, I was asked a question, not about that particular amendment, but about others. The Senator from Pennsylvania has been on conference committees himself and knows how legislation is brought about, and he realizes that it would not be proper for me to say now that I would never agree to a conference report unless this or that were agreed to.

Mr. REED. Of course.

Mr. NORRIS. I have said that if I am a member of the conference committee, I will do the best I can to bring back the bill which passed the Senate; but, at the same time, I realize that in order to get an agreement I will have to be just as reasonable as I expect others to be, and will very likely have to recede on this thing or that thing.

Mr. REED. That is the situation.

Mr. NORRIS. I should think there would be no trouble about the amendment to which the Senator refers. I had not mentioned it before, but I am glad the Senator called attention to it. I have regarded it as a fact that the Senate provision is far superior to the House provision in that particular respect.

Mr. REED. Of course, what the Senator said about the attitude of the conferees toward the coming conference is absolutely correct. The Senator can not promise that he will never yield in conference; if so, there would be no use of having a conference. But that same obligation does not extend to those of us who are not on the conference committee, and for what it is worth I shall have to say that unless these matters are corrected in the House text by the conferees I shall feel it my duty to fight the conference report just as long and as hard as is within me the power to do.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to have the Senator make his statement thus publicly, because we will be able to show from the RECORD just what the Senator said when we get into conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska proposes a unanimous-consent request, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the bill (H. R. 5315) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes, be regarded as having been read twice; that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and the engrossed text of Senate bill 935, to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes, be inserted in lieu thereof; that the amendment be engrossed, and the bill as amended read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] conferees on the part of the Senate.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8397) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the pending committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 20, line 12, the committee proposes to strike out "$382,000" and insert "$407,000," so as to read:

For the purpose of developing agriculture and stock raising among the Indians, including necessary personnel, traveling and other expenses, and purchase of supplies and equipment, $407,000, of which not to exceed $15,000 may be used to conduct agricultural experiments and demonstrations on Indian school or agency farms and to maintain a supply of suitable plants or seed for issue to Indians.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the pending amendment is on page 20, line 12, where the committee proposes to increase the appropriation $25,000 for the purpose of employing some so-called expert agriculturists in the Indian Service. The advisability of such an appropriation and the appointment of men of that kind depend largely upon circumstances and upon the kind of men that will be appointed. There have been some of these agriculturists appointed who have made some very good reports, while there have been some other reports that were not favorable at all. The Indians have protested against the appointment of some of the men and against the attitude they have taken.

In view of the present depressed situation and the lack of money for various branches of the Indian Service, especially where they have had such hard times during the present winter, it seems to me the additional money might a great deal better be spent for additional livestock for the Indians where they have lost so heavily as the Navajos and some other tribes have during the present winter, and for food and care for Indians who are practically on a starvation diet at the present time. Therefore I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was about to observe in behalf of the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who, perhaps, aside from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. FRAZIER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and one or two others who live in the States where there are many Indians, knows as much as or more about Indian affairs than most of us, that he was compelled to leave the Chamber and to leave the city for a few days. He is opposed to this increase; and I was authorized to state in his behalf that he hopes it will not be made.

Speaking for myself, I concur in the view just expressed by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. FRAZIER]. It will be observed that only $15,000 of the appropriation is to be used for conducting agricultural experiments and demonstrations on Indian lands. If the bill is examined from beginning to end, it will be found that there are very large appropriations carried in other provisions of the bill for agricultural work and for experiments and for farm activities. This is merely a pretext under sort of a glittering title to get more money for the bureau. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Blaine	Carey	Dale
Bailey	Brookhart	Connally	Davis
Bankhead	Broussard	Coolidge	Dickinson
Barbour	Bulow	Copeland	Dill
Bingham	Byrnes	Costigan	Fess
Black	Capper	Couzens	Fletcher
Frazier	Jones	Norbeck	Thomas, Idaho
George	Kean	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Glass	Kendrick	Nye	Townsend
Glenn	Keyes	Oddie	Trammell
Goldsborough	King	Pittman	Vandenberg
Gore	La Follette	Reed	Wagner
Hale	Lewis	Robinson, Ind.	Walcott
Harrison	Logan	Schall	Walsh, Mont.
Hastings	McGill	Sheppard	Watson
Hayden	McKellar	Shipstead	White
Hebert	McNary	Smith
Howell	Metcalf	Smoot
Johnson	Moses	Steiwer

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Utah has demanded the yeas and nays. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the pending amendment which is about to be voted on is to be found on page 20 of the bill and is for the purpose of increasing the development of agriculture and stock raising among the Indians. It proposes to increase the item from $382,000 to $407,000. This has been the policy since the first appropriation of $25,000 was made. Since that time there has been $25,000 appropriated in excess of the previous amount for the purpose I have already named. If reports are true, there is no money spent to better advantage than that provided for in this particular item. I was not aware there was any objection to it at all.

Mr. KING. Oh, yes, indeed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, can the Senator refer me to the Senate hearings where this particular item was discussed?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will find it on page 83 of the committee hearings. Here is what the department said about the proposed increase:

Five years ago we obtained an initial appropriation of $25,000 for the purpose of obtaining agricultural employees of the extension type to do work on Indian reservations. Successive increases of $25,000 have been granted, and we have proceeded on the assumption that these increases would be requested each successive year until such time as we have an agricultural extension agent on each Indian reservation where conditions warrant such employment or in the case of two or more small reservations, one agent for the combined work. Large expenditures are being made in carrying forward the educational and health programs among the Indians, but the program for development of the Indian in the home has not until the last two or three years received any special attention. We are frequently called upon to provide subsistence supplies for able-bodied Indians who have allotments of land but make no effort to produce even subsistence crops therefrom. Until such time as we educate the Indians to utilize their allotments for the purpose of raising subsistence in quantities sufficient to supply the needs of their families, the charge against the Federal Treasury for aid to Indians is going to be heavy. The reduction in this item postpones the placing of extension agents on other reservations where they are sorely needed at this time and likewise delays the time when Indians of these reservations will begin to utilize their own lands to better advantage. We urgently recommend that this $25,000 be restored.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. I am glad that the Bureau of Indian Affairs have taken a different view of what they call "Indian education." We all remember the time when it was the general opinion that if an Indian could be taught geometry and Latin grammar he was equipped as well as white men and therefore ought to get along all right. We are now beginning to recognize the fact that he has got to start just as the white man started; he has got to find a way to earn his living. We have taken his living away from him, and we have sent him out on the land and said, "You have got to cultivate it like the white man." He does not know how. The purpose of this item is to help him get started to earn a living, to educate him in the work of providing his own food, and to relieve the Government from this burden. It is probably the most important item in the whole bill. That is my view of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I find on page 83 of the hearings there appears to be the only reason given for this additional appropriation. I quote from the testimony of Mr. Dodd:

AGRICULTURE AND STOCK-RAISING DEVELOPMENT

Mr. DODD. The next item is on page 20.

That has to do with the development of agriculture and stock raising among the Indians.

From this appropriation we pay our farmers and stockmen and agriculture extension agents.

We ask for an increase of $25,000 in this appropriation to provide for the salaries and expenses of six additional agricultural extension agents for Indian reservations.

This appropriation was initiated about five years ago, when we had an appropriation of $25,000 for the employment of the first six of these extension people. Successive increases of $25,000 have been granted each year to extend this activity. We have reports from the supervisor of extension, Mr. Cooley, indicating that where these employees are stationed there has been a tremendous increase in the interest of Indians in utilizing their own lands. We are simply asking that this $25,000 allowed by the Budget be restored, because until such time as we get some of the Indians who have lands interested in raising gardens which will provide them with subsistence for themselves the Government is going to be called upon to appropriate money to provide subsistence and supplies for them.

It is hoped that this will be allowed.

Senator THOMAS. On that point, Mr. Dodd, does this bill carry any item for relief of needy, hungry, naked Indians?

Mr. DODD. It carries $175,000 in the general-support appropriation.

Senator THOMAS. Set aside for that particular use?

Mr. DODD. Set aside for that particular use.

Senator THOMAS. There is carried an item in this bill for $160,000?

Mr. DODD. $175,000 is carried in this bill, Senator. Congress has already passed the deficiency bill, carrying $275,000 for emergency relief of Indians, and we have under consideration at this time an additional estimate of a minimum of $255,000 more which is required.

Senator THOMAS. You are giving that similar item consideration?

Mr. DODD. Yes, sir.

Senator SMOOT. That is about $555,000?

Mr. DODD. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. How much was the entire item; $275,000?

Mr. DODD. $255,000 is our present estimate on the additional amount required for the remainder of this year.

I now turn to page 152 of the hearings for the purpose of showing the attitude of this particular official in reference to the Indians. He was asking for a fund for the Klamath Reservation when I interrupted him. I quote as follows:

Senator McKELLAR. Where are we going to get all of this money?

I asked that question this morning. I will ask Senators to listen to his reply to the question:

Where are we going to get all of this money?

Here is what this man said:

Mr. DODD. This money does not come from the Treasury, Senator; it is a part of the fund derived from their timber sales.

Senator McKELLAR. Of course; it comes out of the Treasury itself.

Mr. DODD. This comes from funds of the tribe; this is not a Treasury item.

Mr. President, I just want to say that I have not any confidence in any official of the Indian Bureau who talks that way about where these funds come from. Of course, he was right about it. The funds do come from the Indians themselves; they come from the income of the Indians derived from the property which they own; but I say that Mr. Dodd and every other Indian Bureau official ought to be more careful about expenditures when they come from funds of the Indians themselves than when they come from the Federal Government. The idea I got from Mr. Dodd as to his attitude while I was questioning him was this: "Oh, Senator, it does not make any difference about this appropriation because the Government does not have really to provide the money; it comes out of the Indian funds; it is their money, and there ought not to be any objection to the item."

So when I find that the Indian Bureau wants an increase, as shown in the item on page 20, for farm-extension agents, I do not think we ought to grant the additional amount.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator first read from testimony that had reference to the pending item, and then he turned a number of pages and read from testimony that has nothing at all to do with this item.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has this to do with it——

Mr. SMOOT. It has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment. It has this to do with it, namely, it shows the attitude of this official; it shows the attitude of the Indian Bureau generally. We found upon examination, as shown by the record on pages 152 and following, a most remarkable situation in regard to the Klamath Indians. We found that some of the employees on that reservation, such as measurers of timber, were receiving salaries of $2,000 a year and more, the highest official getting as high as $5,000, all coming out of the Indian funds. Not only that, but we found that the Indian Bureau's agents and employees out there, almost every one of them, had automobiles. Scalers, clerks, and other white employees on this reservation were not only receiving salaries, but they had automobiles which were bought out of the Indian funds. In addition to that, the upkeep of the automobiles, the gasoline for their operation, the oil for them, came out of the Indian funds. The record further shows that when such employees went from one portion of the reservation to another they got a per diem for food. Yet it seems to be thought that Congress ought not to interfere with such activities, because the funds to provide for them come out of the Indians. I do not think our Government agents have a particle of right to despoil the Indians of what has been given to them, and I am not going to vote for any increase of appropriations to be put in the hands of these agents. I hope the Senate will defeat this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely want to say that the item now under consideration has not a single solitary thing to do with the Klamath Indians. It does not refer to them in any shape or form. What the Senator has said refers to appropriations made under the provision which has to do with the Klamath Indians, which provision is in another part of the bill entirely.

Mr. NORBECK. And it deals with the management of a forest on the Klamath Reservation, from which there is derived very large revenue. The men who supervise the work have to have automobiles in order properly to perform their duties. It is a profitable undertaking, and not a burden on the Indians. But the Klamath item is, so to speak, a thousand miles removed from the item about which we are now talking.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, but I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the Klamath Indians make a million dollars out of their timber sales in an ordinary year.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator where the money for the appropriation comes from? Does it come out of the Indian funds or out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. These particular funds come out of the Treasury. They are appropriated in pursuance of a policy which was started years ago in an effort to educate the Indian so that he might farm his land, in order to enable him to raise food with which to sustain himself and his family. More good has been derived from this appropriation than from almost any other appropriation in the bill. If we are going to educate the Indians along this line, let us do it. Let us teach them how to take care of themselves and not compel the Government to continue doing so longer than is necessary. That is what this appropriation is for. It is designed to carry out what I think is the best policy the Government ever pursued toward the Indian, a policy which is intended to educate them, to show them how they can cultivate their lands and how they may become independent.

The Klamath Indians have the greatest timberlands there are in the United States. The timber cut from those lands is the best that is cut anywhere in this country. Their lands are timberlands and not agricultural lands. What we are trying to do is to create irrigation systems in sections where irrigation is absolutely necessary; we are trying to teach the Indians how to cultivate their land and to put them in a position where they will at least be partially independent of appropriations from the Treasury of the United States, such as have been necessary in the past.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Utah if these so-called "expert agriculturalists" do not also include in their work supervision of stock raising?

Mr. SMOOT. Wherever there is stock upon the reservation they may do so.

Mr. FRAZIER. I think they do; and on the Klamath Reservation, where there is not so very much agricultural land, there is some stock raising.

Mr. SMOOT. There is very little, not sufficient to enable the Indians to take care of themselves.

Mr. FRAZIER. There is enough so that there was undertaken an irrigation project, which was kept going for years, although it lost money every year.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator was not in favor of it in the first place.

Mr. FRAZIER. No; I was not in favor of it. Furthermore, they have a good deal of grazing land and considerable numbers of cattle and sheep. At the present time the executive council of the Klamath Indians object—and their position is supported by a petition signed by a large majority of the adult Indians on that reservation—to their grazing lands being leased to white sheepmen and cattlemen, especially to sheepmen. They presented their objection to the committee and to the department. They wanted the sheepmen kept off in order that the grass might come back so that they, themselves, might engage more extensively in the sheep and cattle business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. In reference to the Klamath Indians, I will cite another reason why we should not grant this additional money to the Indian Bureau for the purposes named. I read from the report submitted by the Committee on Indian Affairs, signed by LYNN J. FRAZIER, W. B. PINE, B. K. WHEELER, ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., and ELMER THOMAS, dated February 7, 1930, as follows:

> From the evidence taken the subcommittee is convinced that there has been a decided lack of cooperation on the part of Superintendent Arnold and Financial Clerk Wheat with the Indians; that these officials have ignored the wishes and regards of the Indians; that they have been extravagant with the money and wasteful of the property intrusted in their supervision; that the great majority of the Klamath Indians have lost all confidence in their officials, thus making it impossible to have anything like a satisfactory situation.

I understood that this man, Superintendent Arnold, has not only been retained in the service, contrary to the recommendation of the Indian Affairs Committee of the Senate, but that he has absolutely been promoted and is one of the managers of the bureau at this time. If such is the case, surely we ought not to pay any attention to the recommendation of bureau officials who take that view about the Indians. We are trustees for the Indians, and we ought to discharge that trust honestly and faithfully and see to it that they are properly taken care of.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, on practically every Indian reservation in the United States, at least where there is any agricultural land, there are what are termed "farmers—boss farmers." There are several on each of the large reservations. In each district there is one of these so-called farmers. The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] made the statement yesterday that the investigating subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs had not found any instance where these farmers were approved by the Indians, or where they were doing anything for the Indians. I think his statement was a little bit strong. We have found a few such cases.

I remember that a couple of years ago, when a delegation of Indians were down here from the State of South Dakota, one question I put to that delegation was whether or not the farmers that they had were of any benefit to the Indians, and whether they were doing anything for them. The sentiment of all those Indians—and they came from the various reservations of South Dakota—was that, generally speaking, these farmers did not do anything to help the Indians; that they merely acted as clerks or subagents; but that there was one exception in South Dakota, and that was a man who was an Indian himself. They said he was a farmer there who had been doing mighty good work; that he called upon the farmers and helped them, and explained to them how they should do certain things—how they should raise gardens, how they should care for livestock, how they should put in crops, and so forth—and was doing mighty good work.

Since that time, however, a number of protests have come from various reservations in South Dakota against the farmers there, asking for their removal. There are reservations in North and South Dakota and Montana and other States where for years the Indians themselves have protested against these farmers, and up to date have failed to have them removed from the service.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from North Dakota is chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator think this additional appropriation is not essential?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Ohio, I will say that in normal times, if conditions were as they were a few years ago, I should approve of an appropriation of this kind; but not when conditions are as they are now, when we are short of money, when there is a deficit in the Treasury, when the Indians in many reservations are on the verge of starvation at the present time, when over 2,000 sheep have starved to death out on the Navajo Reservation, and more will starve to death. It is estimated that as high as 50 per cent of the sheep owned by some of those bands of Navajos will die undoubtedly because they are not being taken care of, because the Indians can not get the money necessary to take care of those sheep, to feed them, to keep them going until grass comes.

Mr. FESS. May I put the question in this form: From the standpoint of the Indians, does the Senator think this amount is essential?

Mr. FRAZIER. At the present time I do not think it is. I think the money could be much better spent to feed Indians who are practically starving to death than to hire so-called agricultural experts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is not Indian money at all. This is a direct appropriation of money.

Mr. FRAZIER. Well, we need some direct appropriations to take care of the Indians to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what we think, and that is what we put this provision in there for. They ought to be taken care of.

Mr. FRAZIER. Before they can be taught to farm they have to have enough food at least to live upon, to keep body and soul together.

Mr. SMOOT. That has nothing to do with this proposition. This proposition is to appropriate $25,000 more in order to prepare the Indian so that he can raise his own food.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I stated before, we have had these farmers for years and years, and under the present law they must be graduates of an agricultural school.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so far as that is concerned, the Senator does not deny that the result of making these appropriations for teaching the Indians how to farm has been a splendid one, does he?

Mr. FRAZIER. In cases where they have been taught properly, and under certain conditions, the result has been very good. Out on some of the western reservations, where they have irrigation, they have gotten along very well.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, a part of this money is to be used to furnish the Indians seed.

Mr. FRAZIER. No; not this money.

Mr. NORBECK. The language is:

> And to maintain a supply of suitable plants or seed for issue to Indians.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is $15,000 for that purpose. That is not this increased appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. Not to exceed $15,000 of the appropriation we are talking about is for that purpose.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Utah stated yesterday emphatically that this $25,000 additional was for expert agriculturists. That does not mean seed.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say that was all it was for.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; that was all that the $25,000 could be used for.

Mr. SMOOT. The wording of the proposed section is very simple, Mr. President.

Mr. FRAZIER. The wording of the proposed section has nothing to do with this increased appropriation. The wording of the proposed section is to provide $15,000 without this increased appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Dodd testifies as to what is to be done. There can not be any mistake about it. He says:

> That has to do with the development of agriculture and stock raising among the Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then he goes on to say:

> We ask for an increase of $25,000 in this appropriation—

To provide seed, and other things like that, for the Indian farmers? Not at all. He says:

> We ask for an increase of $25,000 in this appropriation to provide for the salaries and expenses of six additional agricultural extension agents for Indian reservations.

No seed; nothing else. What we are doing is adding to the employees of the bureau to look after these Indians, at good salaries.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is reading testimony that refers to another part of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; oh, no! This is agriculture and stock raising development.

Mr. SMOOT. I know; but this is a special appropriation for a special purpose for all the Indians.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then Mr. Dodd is not telling the truth about it, and I see no reason to say he is not telling the truth about it, because the Senator asked him for the next item, and he states:

> The next item is on page 20.

And that is the page we have here, and the only page.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Mr. President! Out of the $407,000, if the amendment is agreed to, it says:

> Of which not to exceed $15,000 may be used to conduct agricultural experiments and demonstrations on Indian school or agency farms and to maintain a supply of suitable plants or seed for issue to Indians.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it applies to the $382,000. That provision was in the House bill. The $15,000 provision was in the House bill; and it refers to the $382,000, and not to the $407,000 at all. The $407,000 is an additional amount to the $25,000, as shown here by Mr. Dodd.

Mr. FRAZIER. The $15,000 is in this paragraph and in this item, regardless of whether this increase is made or not.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is true.

Mr. FRAZIER. Then why try to pass the buck by saying that the $15,000 is included in this amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no passing the buck at all. If it were a decrease, the $15,000 would have been paid, and it would have come out of the total amount; and if it is an increase to $407,000, it comes out of that amount. It makes no difference whether it is an increase or a decrease; $15,000 of the appropriation is to be used for that purpose.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the idea of putting out these so-called district agriculturists is just another case of duplication in the Indian Service. We have farmers on every reservation, whether there is any agricultural land there or not. They are supposed to teach the Indians how to farm. Then the Indian Bureau wants to put in agricultural experts to give these farmers some additional instruction as to how to teach the Indians. It is all unnecessary, in my opinion. If we have the right kind of farmers, if we have the right kind of superintendents, who are honestly interested in the Indians, we will not need these so-called experts to go around and check up on them.

There is altogether too much duplication in the Indian Service. There is altogether too much money spent on the Indians for the benefit the Indians get out of it. What we want is money for the Indians, and not to hire some high-priced white-collar man at a high salary to drive around in a Government car.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 20, line 12. On that amendment the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HASTINGS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR (when the name of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas was called). The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is necessarily detained from the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I do not know how that Senator would vote if present, so I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is necessarily detained from the Senate by illness in his family.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] are detained on official business.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that that Senator would if present vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I am permitted to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON].

Mr. METCALF. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and in his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is absent on official business. He has authorized me to say that if present he would have voted "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—20

Blaine	Dickinson	Kendrick	Smith
Broussard	Hale	Norbeck	Smoot
Bulow	Hayden	Oddie	Wagner
Copeland	Johnson	Reed	Watson
Davis	Jones	Sheppard	White

NAYS—38

Carey	Hull	Robinson, Ind.
Cutting	Keyes	Shortridge

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF NEAL DOW

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, Sunday, March 20, 1932, will be the one hundred and twenty-eighth anniversary of the birth of Gen. Neal Dow, a pioneer champion of prohibition. I desire to insert in the RECORD a letter relating to this subject from Mr. Arthur Charles Jackson, of Portland, Me., president of the Neal Dow Association for World Peace and Prohibition.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PORTLAND, ME., March 9, 1932.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Portland, Me., this year celebrates the tercentenary of its first settlement and the centenary of its city charter.

Portland is known to a million teachers and other millions of young and old as the birthplace of the world's best-loved poet, Longfellow.

It is also the birthplace of the Christian Endeavor Society, which now has more than 4,000,000 members in 80,000 unions.

It is also the birthplace of the father of prohibition, Gen. Neal Dow, who was born March 20, 1804. Sunday, March 20, 1932, is the one hundred and twenty-eighth anniversary of his birth. It will be observed by many of the quarter of a million churches in the United States, which have an aggregate membership of more than 50,000,000, many of whom cherish the memory of Neal Dow as one of the greatest benefactors of the human race.

The Portland Historical Society and the International Longfellow Society have placed a tablet upon the home where he was born.

The Neal Dow Association for World Peace and Prohibition urges all believers in world peace, temperance, and prohibition to actively seek these blessings for every state and nation, to the end that peace and prosperity may become more abundantly the common lot of all.

And, my dear Senator, permit me to join with the multitude of others in heartfelt appreciation of the untiring and successful service you have rendered one of the greatest endeavors in the history of legislation. "The noblest motive is the public good."

Most sincerely,

ARTHUR CHARLES JACKSON,
President Neal Dow Association for World Peace and Prohibition.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate adjourn, the adjournment being until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 10, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 9, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thy love inspires our prayer to Thee as our Father. Thou wilt never abandon Thy children. Every cloud will have its rainbow, and every rock will yield sparkling fountains of refreshment. Oh, let us possess that which is far better than earthly gems—the fruit of the matured graces—and then all duties will be put under contribution to the greatest good and our highest possibilities. In these days—days in which our faith is burdened and we just wonder—may our wisdom and our sympathy work helpful transformations. The good Lord direct the soul of Columbia. May we not lose heart nor allow our great institutions to be made ugly by passion or pessimism. Oh, may our love melt selfishness and our brotherly spirit soften the hardened heart. For the erring, faulty, failing one may we have the outstretched hand. Incline us to help carry the burdens of the weak, the sorrows of the poor, and thus fulfill the divine commandment. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7912. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 28. Concurrent resolution to publish a comparative print of the bill (H. R. 10236) entitled "The revenue bill for 1932," as reported to the House, showing the changes to existing law, as a House document.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 184

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret of the death of John Philip Sousa, late a lieutenant commander in the Navy, who was universally recognized as the world's greatest composer of march music.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to join a similar committee on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

JOHN PHILIP SOUSA

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday of this week in a hotel room in Reading, Pa., Lieut. Commander John Philip Sousa died.

Yesterday, while a mountain storm played a requiem to his memory, a long, snow-covered train brought his remains to this Capital City. Seventy-nine years ago he was born in Washington, D. C., and as we assemble here to-day his body lies in state in the Marine Barracks in this city, two blocks from the spot where he was born. His active career covers a period of 60 years of time, and during that time his musical compositions number over 300. He was the greatest bandmaster, the greatest composer of martial music that ever lived in this world. To-morrow, escorted by a military guard and by a guard from the American Legion, a long procession, composed also of representatives of the Masonic Order and of civic organizations, will conduct his body to its last resting place in this city, while a military band plays in his memory the dirges he himself composed.

Most of us remember a few days ago, on Washington's Birthday, when, apparently in excellent health, he led the massed military bands of the Capital City in front of the Capitol here, while thousands listened to the military music he himself composed.

In his death the world has lost a great musical composer; in his death this country has lost a man whose military music led its armies in the World War.

To-day, all over the world, wherever the American flag floats, on sea or on land, military and naval bands play the marches and the dirges he composed.

I have thought it proper to make this mention in order that the RECORD may show that the House of Representatives appreciates the fact that this country and the world has lost one of its great men. [Applause.]

PROFITS OF WAR

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD recommendations submitted by me for adoption by the committee appointed in compliance with Public Resolution No. 98 for the elimination of profits during war.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether his views appear with the report as minority views?

Mr. COLLINS. My views were so incorporated, but these are views that I submitted to the commission for adoption.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following recommendations submitted by me for adoption by the committee appointed in compliance with Public Resolution No. 98, for the elimination of profits during war:

In compliance with Public Resolution No. 98, I submit for adoption by the commission the following:

(1) The establishment of a National Economic Council.

The commission recommends: (a) That an advisory economic council shall be established. Its functions shall be to study economic and social conditions of the United States and to formulate policies which will tend to promote cooperation among all the participants in agriculture, industry, and business; and a more just and equitable participation in and sharing of the fruits of the Nation's wealth, industry, and economic opportunities by all of the people of the United States. (b) This council shall also cooperate with existing agencies in working out economic policies which may serve to promote peaceful trade relations with other nations. (c) The national economic council shall advise with the economic councils of other nations for the purpose of studying ways and means of carrying on trade and otherwise maintaining international trade relations in the interest of continued peace between nations.

(2) The recommendation to Congress of the passing of a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which reads:

"ARTICLE —

"During a war in which the United States is engaged Congress shall have the power to take private property without compensation therefor."

(3) The recommendation to Congress of the passing of a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which reads:

"ARTICLE —

"The making or renewal of any loan to the Government or national of any nation engaged in armed conflict is prohibited, unless the United States is engaged in such conflict as an ally of such nation.

"Congress shall have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

THE KIDNAPING OF THE LINDBERGH BABY

Mr. KARCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 12 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KARCH. Mr. Speaker, organized society and organized government, lost in a sense of utter impotency, have capitulated completely and abjectly, and, acknowledging a power higher than themselves, now beg on bended knees of underworld lords to do what cities, counties, States, the National Government, and millions of citizens admit they can not do—rescue the Lindbergh baby.

What does this shameful surrender to the alleged powers of the so-called underworld mean?

Why, sir, it is notice to the parents of every child in America who may have money enough to tempt the cupidity of some lawless gangster that our Government can no longer protect them, and that they must hereafter provide at their own expense their own protection for their babies.

Civilization in America, in this year A. D. 1932, has, by a mere handful of desperadoes, been actually hurled back into the cave days when every man had to protect and to fight for his own household—his own offspring. Jungle law will have superseded the law of civilization if this handful of organized criminals can thus set at naught the powers of organized society.

Organized crime has arrogantly raised its hideous insolence and has spewed corruption and terror throughout the body politic, while in our selfishness and our greed, our lust for place and power, we have pandered to this corruption, we have closed our eyes to the hellish danger and the utter ghastliness of this rising claim of power by a few organized terrorists.

We have been so assiduous in pursuing and in prosecuting the possessor of a pint of liquor that we had not time to crush this monster which has blown its unspeakably vile breath of withering crime across the fair face of the boasted "land of the free, and the home of the brave."

Complacent, preoccupied in our mad struggle for gold, we have been utterly heedless of the rising menace of organized crime directed from high places, crushing with fear, buying with part of the loot of the crimes, controlling through corrupt political influences the very law-enforcement agencies we have depended upon to protect us.

Supine and selfish, society has murmured, then lapsed back into indolent repose and self-centered interest in pursuit of gold, while this evil crime trust has grown and fattened. And now in its arrogant contempt for society and the corrupted and weakened law-enforcement agencies this hideous monster reaches its claw into the peaceful, happy nursery of that quiet home among the trees at Hopewell, N. J., and snatches with cruel jeer that child from its cradle.

Into the home of the hero of the Nation—nay, of the world—and his happy wife reached the slimy claw of unrebuked evil, and from the arms of a brave boy whose whole record discloses not a single act of wrong against his fellow man, from the bosom of that inoffensive wife and mother was snatched their only child.

Charles Lindbergh, fearless Lone Eagle, was turned into a heartsick father. His lovely, modest wife, preparing for the advent of another little one, is transformed into a stricken mother, brave though she is.

Every governmental, State, county, municipal, and social agency, at last aroused by this outrage, the audacity of which has left civilization stunned, turned to the task of apprehension to achieve—what?

Why, Mr. Speaker, to achieve abject surrender to a criminal minority, admitted now to be more powerful than organized society and organized government.

On bended knee, with streaming eyes, this Nation beseeches this new oligarchy to bring our baby back.

"Name your price, dictate your terms, demand your immunities for the agony, the shame, the expense you have perpetrated upon us—anything, anything you will, but for God's sake bring our baby back!" cries a whole Nation to those dastardly, unidentified captors of Baby Lindbergh.

Shame be upon us!

Do not misunderstand me, Mr. Speaker. Lindbergh is right. His child—our child—is infinitely more precious than any amount of money. Get the baby back at all costs.

Lindbergh's happiness, his wife's happiness, the unborn child's future, are precious beyond all computation. Get the baby back!

I have no condemnation at this moment for Salvatore Spitale and Irving Bitz for the part they play in this drama. Lords of vice and crime, as they are alleged to be, they are what we permitted them to be, what society, perhaps, has made them.

Indeed, it may be that those two gangsters, touched by the pathetic grief of a hero and his wife, will play a more manly part than some of the law officers in this great American tragedy.

But after Baby Lindbergh is back safely in his parents' arms, after the ransom money is paid, after the agony of the world's hero and his wife is ended, what then?

Is this Nation going once again to settle back into drowsy indifference, accepting the horrible fact that abject surrender, pleas on bended knees, tears, treasure, and immunity for evildoers will always bring back the stolen babies or the abducted men and women?

No. A thousand times no! While we are aroused, while the incredible audacity, horror, ghastliness of this thing still burns and sears us, let this Government, this Congress, turn to and with merciless determination stamp into nothingness this hideous thing called organized crime, this false power that parades as a force greater than law and government; this viper that we have permitted—aye, encouraged—to work its sinuous coils about us until to-day we find this Nation begging: "Name your terms, but do not strangle our baby; bring it back to us unharmed!"

This is war, Mr. Speaker, war between human rights and the forces of good government on the one side, and the boast of corruption, lawlessness, bribery, murder, arson, rapine, abduction, robbery on the other.

On the one hand is the Government and the whole of society aroused. On the other is an exceedingly small but incredibly insolent minority. Are we ready, Mr. Speaker, to say to organized crime, to this handful of lawless characters, "You have won the war; you have successfully attacked that home whose desecration you knew would arouse the greatest storm of public indignation; the power is yours to do what you will, so name your indemnities, tell us your terms, impose your reparations, we surrender!"

Good government has not failed. Justice is not prostrate. This country can not, will not be ruled by a vicious minority! Society has not surrendered to crime. Good has not capitulated to evil in America. A handful of vicious desperadoes can not rule the mass of American manhood and womanhood.

Well, then, what are we to do?

We have a bill pending before this body providing for Federal intervention if the mails are used by kidnapers to demand their ransom. Good, but not enough! The mails can be avoided by gangsters.

We have another bill pending before this body providing for Federal intervention if State lines are crossed by criminals who steal babies. Good, but not enough. We would have to find the baby to prove the Federal violation.

We have another bill pending before this body providing the death penalty for kidnaping. Let us go carefully, lest we make murder of the kidnaped victim and destruction of his body the way to escape for the kidnaper by that measure. Think that over well.

We now know that crime in this country is organized, financed, directed from high places.

We know that the coke-sniffing, opium-ridden, crime-fouled rats of sewer and gutter are only the tools with which these high criminal syndicalists work. When we apprehend the actual kidnaper or murderer we seldom reach the master gangster; we get only the knife or the gun, so to speak, which they used. We put some drug-sodden rat in the electric chair and the real planners and directors of crime, snug and smug, in their luxurious surroundings, safe in their haven of corrupt political and police protection, chuckle at their immunity and turn to new deviltry.

The American crime trust is as surely a trust in restraint of trade, in restraint of human liberties, human life, human happiness, as any trust ever investigated and broken up by the Federal Trade Commission was in contravention to the Sherman Act.

Every line of business is the prey of the organized gangster and racketeer. Nobody—no business is to-day safe from the depredation of the crime trust.

All right, then, the way is pointed out. Let this Congress through its best intellect work out an anticrime trust act that will sweep aside all barriers, all legal quibbling, and strike directly at this appalling menace. Let such a commission as may be necessary be created to investigate and to run down those who plan, who conspire, who direct the crimes which befoul and terrorize our Nation.

Then, having created that commission, let us vote enough money, secure enough experienced specialists to coordinate every law-enforcing agency of this Government into one vast machine of detection and punishment. Let us vote all the millions necessary for the task and annihilate this octopus which has too long terrorized and strangled our society.

This is not an insurmountable task. Crime is not a real force. This is not a great aggregation of powerful men. This is not a supergovernment. It is a slimy and cowardly bluff, using human derelicts as its tools, corruption as its traffic, crime as its avenues of gain, and stealth as its highways.

Mr. Speaker, let us act now.

If we will, if we enact now an anticrime trust statute as broad and powerful as the Sherman Antitrust Act, we will wipe out this foul stain from our land, and, having done that, the agony of our Lone Eagle and his mate will not have been in vain. I verily believe that such power is inherent in this Government, above and outside of our Constitution. [Applause.]

ECONOMY

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by inserting a radio address on economy, delivered March 8.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

The United States is passing through one of the most tragic periods of economic readjustment in its history. There have been in other years so-called depressions and panics, but never before perhaps has the descent from the heights of prosperity, or what we thought to be prosperity, been so sudden, so continuous, and so disastrous. There is not a business, an industry, nor, indeed, an individual, who has not felt the stinging lash of these strenuous times. Many citizens have seen the work and savings of a lifetime wiped out. The cry of the auctioneer and the wail of broken hearts blend with the ceaseless tramp of the vast army of the unemployed. With it all, however, Americans, with their characteristic optimism and courage, are not without hope, and even now a faint gleam appears on the horizon that presages the coming of a brighter day.

Nor has industry, business, and the citizen, in his individual capacity, been the only ones to suffer. Government resources have suffered a sharp decline. City, county, and State governments have been brought up suddenly face to face with the problem of adjusting their expenditures to reduced incomes.

The Federal Government has been no exception. On one hand, we have a prospective deficit in the Public Treasury variously estimated up to $2,000,000,000. On the other hand, we are faced with the necessity of passing relief measures calling for large sums of money in an effort to stimulate business and relieve unemployment. Added to this are the insistent demands from various groups for large appropriations for particular projects. The legislative branch of the National Government is faced with an economic problem that overshadows everything else.

A BALANCED BUDGET

In the affairs of government, as well as individuals, a balanced budget is the keystone in the arch of economic solidarity. The problem of balancing the Federal Budget has presented many difficult and oftentimes unpleasant aspects. The first and major problem confronting the Congress has been to reduce public expenditures to an absolute minimum. If, when that has been done, there is still a deficit, as there will be, then Congress is faced with the unpleasant duty of passing a tax bill that will raise sufficient revenue to substantially meet the expenditures through the coming year.

The Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, of which I have the honor to be a member, immediately upon the convening of Congress set about the task of reducing public expenditures in the annual appropriation bills. Under the able and courageous leadership of the chairman of our Appropriations Committee, Mr. JOSEPH BYRNS, of Tennessee, this committee has worked day and night in an effort to discharge its duty to the public. I am very happy to be able to say that in its deliberations partisan politics have been laid aside, and the membership of this great committee has labored shoulder to shoulder with the single purpose of reducing expenditures to the absolute minimum consistent with the efficient operation of Government.

THE POLICY

In approaching the subject of reduction of expenditures certain fundamental rules have been adhered to. In the first place, the committee has in no instance increased the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget approved by the President. Nor has any new project been added in an appropriation bill that has not been approved and estimated for by the Bureau of the Budget and the President. So far the Appropriations Committee has adhered strictly to these principles.

In the second place, the estimates submitted to Congress by the Bureau of the Budget, with the approval of the President, for the various bureaus, departments, and activities of the Government, are scrutinized carefully and reduced wherever possible, consistent with the public interests.

Third, all projects or proposed expenditures not absolutely necessary are either abandoned or postponed.

Fourth, surplus personnel, not absolutely necessary for the efficient conduct of the public business, is dispensed with. (This is indeed a most unpleasant duty, but there can be no justification for continuing upon the pay roll personnel that can be dispensed with.)

Fifth, the committee has written into each appropriation bill passed so far a provision that during the coming fiscal year there shall be no automatic promotions or increases in the salaries of the Government employees.

FIVE BILLS REPORTED

Following these principles five major appropriation bills have been reported to the Congress by the committee, as follows: The Department of Agriculture, the Interior Department, the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments, the Treasury and Post Office Departments, and the independent offices appropriation bills. The first four of these have passed the House and now await action by the Senate. In these five bills the estimates for the coming fiscal year have been reduced by the Budget $358,088,831.85 less than the appropriations for the same activities during the present fiscal year.

In these five bills the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives made further total reductions (including the first deficiency bill) under Budget estimates of $114,579,052.56, or, to summarize, the total reductions in these five appropriation bills less than the appropriations for the present fiscal year, exclusive of the first deficiency bill, are $458,496,764.41.

The last of these five bills to be reported to the House of Representatives was the independent offices appropriation bill. I have the honor to be chairman of the subcommittee which reported this bill. This legislation provides the appropriations for 30 Government bureaus and departments, including such important activities as the Veterans' Administration, Interstate Commerce Commission, Federal Trade Commission, Federal Tariff Commission, Radio Commission, and others. Our committee, in reporting this bill, made total reductions less than the estimates which had been approved by the Bureau of the Budget and the President of $54,498,535.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES BILL

It might be of interest now to comment briefly on the independent offices bill, which, as I have said, is now before the House for consideration. The subcommittee framing this bill, of which I have the honor to be chairman, conducted long and exhaustive hearings on this legislation. The printed hearings cover more than 700 pages of printed matter. We think it constitutes an exhaustive analysis of these several activities and their requests for appropriations. The total amount of the bill as it came to us from the Bureau of the Budget, with the approval of the President, was $1,041,395,041. From this the committee has made reductions which total $54,948,535. Some drastic cuts have been made, yet the committee does not feel that any needed and useful function of the Government has been crippled.

Time does not permit a detailed examination of these several items, but I shall comment briefly on several of them in passing.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The Interstate Commerce Commission was given a cut of $1,533,321, and $1,483,321 represents a cut because of the opinion of the committee that the commission should suspend work on recapture of excess earnings until the policy of the Government is definitely established with reference to this subject. The committee is of the belief that recapture will be retroactively repealed at this session of the Congress, since the legislation for the repeal has the full indorsement of the Interstate Commerce Commission and there has not developed any substantial opposition to the repeal.

The transportation act of 1920 requires that one-half of all earnings by railroads over 6 per cent on the value of railway property be turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission to be loaned by it to roads that can justify the loan and to build equipment which can be leased to railroads needing it. This recapture money does not go into the general Treasury of the Government, nor can it be returned to shippers to reduce the rate burden.

This provision has been in effect for 12 years. Experience has demonstrated that it is unworkable and it has already cost the Government $37,000,000 and the railroads $136,000,000, a total of $173,000,000, and the principles of valuation have not yet been determined by the United States Supreme Court. The Interstate Commerce Commission has repeatedly advocated its repeal because it is unworkable, provokes litigation, and "hangs like a cloud over the credit of many companies when times are bad."

FARM BOARD

Another of the principal cuts in the bill was a reduction of the appropriation for the Federal Farm Board of $1,880,000. The committee reduced this item to $1,000,000. If we have erred, it has been because the reduction has not been sufficiently drastic. It is not the function of the Appropriations Committee to make fundamental changes in the basic law. Therefore the much-agitated question of whether the Federal Farm Board should be abolished or whether it should be consolidated with the Department of Agriculture was not before our committee for consideration.

We did feel, however, that upon a careful audit of their estimates for expenditures there had been included in their estimates requests for appropriations that were not needed and that could have very well been eliminated without material injury to the primary purpose of the Farm Board, which is twofold: First, to handle the $500,000,000 revolving fund which is loaned to cooperative associations to assist in stabilizing prices and marketing their crops; and, second, in the activities of the Farm Board in assisting cooperatives in perfecting marketing organizations.

The sum of $1,000,000 will be ample for this purpose if it is so used by the Farm Board.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

The other reduction in the appropriations in the sum of $51,161,732 was in the estimates for the Veterans' Administration.

The total amount carried in this bill for the Veterans' Administration, which includes the veterans of all wars, pensions, compensation, hospitalization, and domiciliary care, is $928,387,735. Of this sum approximately $800,000,000 is paid directly to the veterans in cash. On the first day of every month 1,400,000 checks go out of the offices of the Veterans' Administration to beneficiaries aggregating an amount more than $60,500,000 monthly. Since the World War Congress has authorized new hospitals and domiciliary construction for veterans totaling an amount of $127,391,991.85. Of this sum the entire amount has been allocated with the exception of $8,430,000, and when the entire new construction has been completed it will provide for 37,187 beds.

The Veterans' Administration, including its own facilities and the hospital facilities which are provided for in Army, Navy, and Public Health Service hospitals, has an average of 50,000 hospital and domiciliary beds in use. An interesting statement in connection with the veterans' expenditures is that out of the total amount appropriated for the Veterans' Administration only 5 per cent is expended in administrative costs. The remaining 95 per cent goes to the veterans either in direct cash benefits or in hospitalization or domiciliary care and attention.

The committee cuts of $50,000,000 in the estimate for the adjusted-service certificate fund and of $1,161,732 in the administrative appropriation do not involve any reduction either in the amount or quality of benefits to the veterans.

The reduced amounts were agreed upon after a very careful consideration by the subcommittee and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, General Hines, of the actual requirements on the basis of the present situation, which is materially different from that existing six months ago, when the estimates were made up. General Hines asssured the subcommittee that no veteran will suffer any diminution in the amount of loans on their adjusted-service certificates or in the number of available beds or other hospitalization services or in the quality of such services.

There are five major appropriation bills to follow, namely, District of Columbia bill, the legislative bill, the War and Navy Departments, and the second deficiency bill. It is the ambition of the Appropriations Committee that when we shall have finished with these regular appropriation bills savings and reductions under the estimates approved by the Budget and the President will aggregate $200,000,000. While this is a substantial and credible showing, it will not be sufficient to balance the Federal Budget, and there has just been reported to the House of Representatives a tax bill which will shortly come up for consideration and action.

It should be noted at this point that the House of Representatives has given to the Appropriations Committee very splendid and patriotic support in its effort to curtail public expenditures, with one notable exception. On Saturday last the House of Representatives by a vote of 160 to 155 struck out of the Post Office-Treasury appropriation bill the provision against automatic promotion and salary increases for Federal employees during the coming fiscal year.

This action was taken by the House of Representatives over the protest of the Appropriations Committee. Unless this section can be reinstated in this bill when it is considered in the Senate, an important part of the economy program of the Appropriations Committee will be lost. The result will be an added cost of many millions of dollars to the Federal pay roll during the next fiscal year.

This committee views with alarm and disappointment the action of the House of Representative in striking this section from this bill. It had been carried in the other bills so far passed by the House. It should be made clear that it called for no reductions in the salaries of the employees of the Federal Government, and it only provided that during the present crisis the employees of the Government forego the right of automatic promotion and salary increase.

SALARY REDUCTION

Speaking personally, as a Member of Congress, I feel that if this action of the House of Representatives accurately reflects the attitude of the Federal employees that they have failed to show a degree of patriotic interest in the financial recovery of the Government and the welfare of the American people that they might be expected to exhibit. Every line of business and industry and every profession has felt the stinging lash of the present economic distress. County, city, and State government employees and officials have had to take decreases in their salaries, and, in fact, the only group of American citizens who have come through so far without any reduction in their income or loss of time are the employees of the Government.

It now appears to me to be the duty of Congress to immediately pass legislation which will make a proper reduction in the Federal pay roll, during the present emergency, and that this reduction should apply to all employees of the Government from the Cabinet down, Members of Congress of course included. This is not a pleasant thing to contemplate or suggest. So far as I can see, there appears to be no alternative.

As a further means of reducing public expenditures there has been appointed by authority of Congress a Committee on Economy and Reorganization, which is conducting daily hearings with a view to abolishing useless bureaus and departments and making reorganizations and consolidations wherever possible in the interests of economy and efficiency. Undoubtedly this is a fertile field for operation, and it is hoped that before the adjournment of the present session of Congress, this committee will have a constructive report to make to the House of Representatives.

If what I have said presents a pessimistic outlook, it is only because the true facts justify such statements. It is to be sincerely hoped that the individual American citizen and the groups and organizations who are looking to the Federal Treasury for appropriations will bear in mind the present condition of the Federal Treasury and cooperate with the national legislative body to the extent of not insisting upon additional appropriations in the present emergency.

LIMITATION OF INJUNCTIONS

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, the declaration of public policy contained in this bill is a further and more explicit recognition than any yet made that industry is a national matter. More and more are we going to recognize this all-important fact.

This law will be accepted gladly by every just and upright judge. This law will be accepted with thanksgiving by all men and women who labor, and it will not be abused by them.

It is indeed an expression of democracy and justice which has only been too long delayed.

The privilege of voting for this anti-injunction measure is worth all the years I have spent in advocating its enactment.

SPECIAL APPLICATION FEES

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the committees, and when the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was reached,

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8817) to provide for fees for entry of a publication as second-class matter, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically goes into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MAJOR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8817. To provide for fees for entry of a publication as second-class matter, and for other purposes.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half of the time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANDERS]. This is a bill to provide fees for the entry of publications as second-class mail matter; it was recommended by the Postmaster General. In his letter to the committee recommending the legislation he makes these observations:

There are received each year approximately 2,500 applications for entry of publications as second-class matter; 2,000 applications for reentry on account of change in title, frequency of issue, office of publication, and for other reasons; 100 applications for registry as news agents; and 15,000 applications for permits to mail matter without stamps affixed. About 3,900 second-class publications are discontinued each year and about 100 news agents' permits and 3,000 permits to mail without stamps affixed are abandoned each year.

In this proposed legislation we provide that an applicant for second-class mail privileges shall pay a fee of $100, and for a request for reentry a fee of $10.

The Postmaster General estimates that this will add $500,000 to the revenues of the department. The committee reported the bill unanimously.

Mr. HASTINGS. What are the present fees?

Mr. MEAD. There are no fees at present. This is new revenue. The fees are to cover the cost of the work done by the department in connection with these requests.

Mr. HASTINGS. And the report is unanimous?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. What class of publications does this include?

Mr. MEAD. Newspapers and magazines, all second-class mail.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The permit to use mail without affixing stamps is quite a saving, because no cancellation is necessary.

Mr. MEAD. These fees are to cover the proceedings necessary before granting the request.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is no $10 charge now?

Mr. MEAD. No. I understand not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The $100 fee is not credited later on to their account for services?

Mr. MEAD. No. The fee is for the application; and on this class of mail we lose considerable money, according to the ascertainment cost commission report.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have had considerable difficulty in recalling the service for news agents, for which you require a fee of $20?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. At the present time news agents registered in the Post Office Department enter their publications as second-class matter. At the present time no fees are paid for that right. Under this bill when any new attempt is made to secure that right by a news agent there will be a fee charged.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the gentleman to convey the idea that the news agent enters the publication the second time?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. He gets second-class rates on certain publications. They are sent to the news agent by the publisher at the second-class rate.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think I must be rather obtuse, because I have not as yet got a clear idea of just what function these news agents perform for which a fee is required, as far as second-class matter is concerned.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There are eight subclassifications under the second-class rate. One rate schedule is based on zone and is figured for the zone rates. There are eight subclassifications. News agents get their rate on account of being registered in the Post Office Department. They have applied for it and have been given that right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does this pertain to the character of service which was called to my attention when I served on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads nearly 25 years ago, as, for example, where the Curtis Publishing Co. would send the Saturday Evening Post by freight or express, say, to Kansas City, and then deposit it there in the mails for local delivery?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. A number of publications have what is known as an additional office of entry, which they now get without any payment whatever. Under this bill they must pay a fee for each additional office of entry.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I assume that is the character of service the gentleman refers to. A publishing house names some news agent to receive his publications in large quantities, so that that news agent may distribute them locally, within a radius of perhaps 100 miles, whenever it is economical or to their advantage to have them distributed by post.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is done under additional offices of entry.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is that the answer the gentleman wishes to give?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is covered in the next clause on additional offices of entry, which provides a fee for that. These news agents are on a different basis. They now have the second-class rate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman tell us what the news agent does that requires him to be registered and for which he makes an application? Is it the ordinary news agent who sells periodicals or newspapers or is it a large central agency like the Central News Co. that has some privilege connected with the distribution?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is it exactly, the wholesale concerns, these large distributing agents. There are only a few in the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What I can not understand is this. Is it to give the publisher the right to send periodicals or second-class matter in bulk to the agent and stop there, or is it to give the agent the right to distribute from his point on?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. As I understand it, these registered news agents take the publications and magazines and send them out themselves.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a matter of redistribution?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. But in their zone?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. THATCHER. It may have been stated, but I did not catch it. How much revenue will the operation of this law yield annually to the Post Office Department?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Half a million dollars a year. It will not do any injustice to anybody, but in the future those who expect this privilege will be obliged to pay a fee.

Mr. THATCHER. And the bill has the approval of the Post Office Department?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes; and has the unanimous report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter each application for entry of a publication as second-class matter shall be accompanied with a fee of $100; each request for reentry of a publication as second-class matter on account of a change in title, frequency of issue, office of publication, or for other reason, and each request for additional entry of a publication as second-class matter shall be accompanied with a fee of $10; each application for registry of a news agent shall be accompanied with a fee of $20. Each application for a permit to mail matter without stamps affixed as provided by sections 273 and 291, title 39, United States Code, Supplement V, and section 295, title 39, United States Code—

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, strike out "sections 273 and 291, title 39, United States Code, Supplement V, and section 295, title 39, United States Code," and insert: "the act approved June 9, 1930 (46 Stat. 526; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 39, secs. 221a, 273, and 291a), section 6 of the act approved May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. 941; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 39, sec. 291), and section 13 of the act approved May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. 162; U. S. C., title 39, sec. 295), and the regulations made pursuant thereto by the Postmaster General, shall be accompanied with a fee of $10."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. BANKHEAD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MAJOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8817, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TRANSIENT SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8818) to amend section 287 of title 39 of the United States Code, Supplement V.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York calls up the bill H. R. 8818, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think this should be considered in the Committee of the Whole. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8818, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8818, with Mr. GLOVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, this bill (H. R. 8818) has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It merely changes the prevailing rates as applicable to this form of mail matter. The present rate is 1 cent each for 2 ounces of such mail matter, regardless of weight or distance. This law authorizes the users of this class of mail matter to utilize the parcel post and parcel-post rates, which will result in a reduced rate of postage, and, according to information that reaches us from the department, will result in increasing the revenue.

The Postmaster General, in a report on the bill, states:

The purpose of the bill is to modify the rate of postage of 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction of 2 ounces now applicable to second-class matter mailed under the conditions set forth in the bill so that the fourth-class or parcel-post rates will apply when the postage at the latter rates would be lower.

Experience has shown that the present transient second-class rate works to exclude mailings of the heavier weights, and it is believed that the modification proposed would increase the volume of such mailings sufficient to bring in additional revenue of approximately $500,000 annually. Therefore, the bill has the approval of this department, and its enactment into law is recommended.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The class of mail matter that this bill applies to, of course, is transient second class, which consists of publications sent out by others than publishers and registered agents.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The rate at the present time, 1 cent for 2 ounces, means a rather high rate, and has excluded a great deal of mail matter, so that by reducing this rate the Post Office Department estimates additional revenue will be received of $500,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Can it be carried at the reduced rate without loss?

Mr. MEAD. We took the figures given us by the department.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The Postmaster General makes a different argument on another class of mail matter than he makes on this. I agree with him on this contention.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to the reason why Congress some years back provided that a complete newspaper could be sent in the mails at a lower rate than a fractional part of a newspaper?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I can answer the gentleman. That may be possible where this second-class transient rate is higher than the regular publisher rate.

Mr. STAFFORD. When I wish to send any part of a newspaper, after I have purchased it, to some other part of the country I am charged a higher rate than if it is the entire paper. I have no desire to send the advertising supplement, but when I take it to the post office they ask me, "Is it a complete paper or is it but a part of a paper? If it is a complete paper it bears a lower rate than if it is a fractional part." Why that discrimination in rates?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The reason for that is that the paper which is only a part of a paper is third-class matter, which rate is 1½ cents for 2 ounces. The complete paper as received from the publisher is transient second class, which has a rate of 1 cent for 2 ounces. Therefore the one-half cent states the difference to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any member of the committee who is opposed to the bill? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. STAFFORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I merely take the floor for a few moments to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that in the proviso we are seeking to recognize the right to send ad libitum, sample copies of publications. For years certain publishers of advertising sheets have been desirous of securing the privilege of sending through the mails at the pound rate sample copies in excess of the prescribed minimum. I notice the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], who follows this legislation closely when it is brought up on the floor, reading very intently the proviso that I refer to. Will the gentleman explain whether that is the purpose of the proviso?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that now, under the law, there are provisions by which sample copies of a publication may be sent at regular second-class rates. Where it goes over 10 per cent, this rate shall apply.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. That is why I have taken the floor. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether the committee gave any thought to that recommendation of the Post Office Department?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes. I will say that at the present time 10 per cent of the total circulation through the mails may be sent at the regular second-class rates. Under this provision if more than 10 per cent goes through, then we are providing that they may use these rates, which are considerably higher than the second-class rates.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much higher?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Well, it is the difference between 1½ cents a pound in the first and second zones, for instance, and a rate of 7 cents on parcel post for the first zone. So that this rate is much higher than the rate now given the 10 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where will we find the provision that would charge 7 cents for these sample copies over the 10 per cent limit now authorized by law?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This bill does increase the rate—that where it is less than 8 ounces the rate shall be 1 cent per 2 ounces; but where it goes over that the amount, it shall pay the parcel-post rate.

Mr. STAFFORD. One cent for 2 ounces?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is, up to 8 ounces.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think, gentlemen, we have a very serious proposition before us. I remember—and I am merely giving the benefit of the information I gleaned nearly 30 years ago when I served for 8 years on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads—that the so-called advertising-sheet publishers requested us to grant them the free use of the mails. They were willing to pay not only 1 cent a pound, but many times that rate. Now the gentleman is opening the flood gates to these advertising sheets; not to legitimate publications, but to advertising sheets.

He is opening the floodgates so that instead of a limitation of 10 per cent of bona fide subscribers they will be able to send as many publications as they desire to send. At what rate? At a compensatory rate? No. I do not think the rate that is prescribed here, of 1 cent for 2 ounces, is at all compensatory. We know that the second-class mail is paying nothing comparable to the burden of expense imposed upon the Government; that that is where the loss comes; that the first-class mail pays the burden for all this subsidized second-class mail matter.

I see nothing in the report which shows the amount of revenues that would be received by opening the floodgates to these advertising sheets. By this we are permitting the publishers of all newspapers to send through the mail an excess quantity of their publications, regardless of the number of bona fide subscribers. I think that is a serious question for the Congress to consider, especially at this time when we are being confronted with a deficit in the revenues.

It is true we will get more money, but we will pay out more money for the service. It is true we will get more money than we get under the 1-cent-a-pound rate, but the rate as herein provided is not compensatory for the service given.

Here is a letter carrier getting a maximum salary of $2,100 per annum. He can only carry so much. In prosperous times he is weighted down with first-class matter. You pass this bill and you are going to require additional letter-carrier service for advertising purposes and for advertising purposes alone.

I have not gone into the intricacies as to how much additional cost will be imposed by conferring this additional privilege, but I know the rate is not compensatory and that we are opening wide the privileges of the mails and permitting the sending out of an excess over the limit that has been the limit for years and years. Ten per cent of the bona fide subscribers has been the limit to which publishers could send sample copies.

The gentleman from New York said this was a minor bill. Unfortunately it is one of the few bills I did not have on my list to which I could give consideration. That was my reason for asking that the bill be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

It is a rather major bill because of the extent to which it is going to open the mails to second-class publications.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows whether or not this class of mail is now being carried at a loss?

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been acknowledged for years and years that second-class mail matter is the one burden upon the post-office service, and which this year is occasioning a deficit of more than $150,000,000. If we were only carrying first-class mail, there would not be a deficit.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a member of the committee.

Mr. KENDALL. The true deficit is $98,000,000 instead of $150,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says the true deficit is $98,000,000, but the postal year has not been finished. The true deficit for the last fiscal year was $98,000,000, but I venture to predict—and I do not believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania will challenge the statement—that for the fiscal year 1932 the deficit will be more than $150,000,000. It has been estimated by the Postmaster General that the deficit will be more than $150,000,000.

Mr. KENDALL. I understood the gentleman to say that the deficit of the year just past was $150,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am referring to the threatened deficit, which makes it necessary to introduce a tax bill which calls for the levying of a sales tax upon every consumer in this country, and that tax is imposed on almost everything except the breakfast table. I ask the gentleman whether it is the purpose to open wide the privilege of sending second-class matter above the present limit of 10 per cent of the bona fide subscribers, that having been the limit for 100 years. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says the rates are increased, but what are those increased rates? That this class of mail shall pay 1 cent for 2 ounces or fraction thereof.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is under a misapprehension, I am sorry to say. The gentleman should not understand we are doing anything here different from what is being done now as far as volume of mail is concerned. At the present time a publisher can send any number of his publications above 10 per cent through the mails at the third-class rates provided by law. We are providing in the bill that he may send them by parcel post at regular rates, which run as high as 12 cents a pound.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the rate at which the publisher is now privileged to send this excess number above 10 per cent?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. At the third-class rate of 1½ cents for 2 ounces.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the rate in the bill?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In some cases it will be 12 cents, which is the parcel-post rate that now prevails, and the lowest rate will be 7 cents, which will pay the cost of transportation and handling.

Mr. STAFFORD. Seven cents a pound, gentlemen, for a little advertising sheet which does not weigh an ounce, and with 16 ounces to the pound, this means 16 copies or more that they are privileged to send a great distance for less than a cent. If you send a circular letter even for local delivery, you are obliged to affix a 1-cent postage stamp, and it can not be sealed.

The gentleman's statement only confirms what I have stated, that while this provision may increase the revenue slightly, it is throwing open the gates to these advertising sheets and permitting these advertising houses to utilize the mails, which we have been guarding against for years and years.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does the gentleman think this legislation would increase or reduce the deficit?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the premise of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct, which I have some reason to question, that the publishing houses to-day have the privilege of sending ad libitum through the mail above the 10 per cent, I am frank to say that, perhaps, a little additional revenue would be derived; but I was predicating my argument upon the assumption—and I was right in that particular—that newspaper publishers could only send through the mails at the pound rate to the extent of 10 per cent of their paid subscribers. I am rather inclined to believe that the gentleman is right that they could send as third-class matter any amount.

Of course, this is new to me. I have not studied this minutely for years and years. I am projecting this discussion to the House so as to bring out the respective merits of these proposals.

The publishers up to 10 per cent would have to pay merely at the pound rate, but at the third-class rate it would be 1½ cents for each 2 ounces or less—or is it 2 ounces and more?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Up to 2 ounces.

Mr. STAFFORD. And for every additional ounce, what is the rate?

Mr. KELLY. The same rate.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have taken this opportunity to bring this matter to the attention of the committee. I hope the chairman will reply, if reply is necessary, to the position I have taken.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, our committee had representatives of the department explain the provisions contained in the bill and were advised that the revenues of the department would be increased $500,000 annually. This measure will not work a hardship on anyone. It will merely permit the use of the parcel-post rates when those rates are lower than the rates now applicable to this particular form of mail matter.

I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is under a misapprehension and is discussing a matter that, in my judgment, has no bearing upon the proposed legislation.

With the gentleman from Wisconsin, I disagree with the Postmaster General occasionally when he informs us that reducing rates will reduce revenue. Here is one instance, however, where I take the word of the Postmaster General when he tells us that reducing the rates or making the lower rates applicable will increase the volume, and in that way increase the revenue. The members of your committee in reporting this bill unanimously felt that the added revenue would, at least in a small degree, contribute to a reduction of the deficit, and for that reason favors the passage of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, it is with a great deal of sorrow that I have to call the attention of the House to a most tragic occurrence—tragic because it was avoidable.

A few days ago I referred on the floor to the conditions prevailing in the Century Airlines. I gave this House direct information of the ruthless method being employed by that company under the direction of Mr. Cord, in his cruel attempt to bring down the standard of his pilots. He first came to Washington with a suggestion that he could carry the mails for one-half the rate, received a courteous and attentive hearing, returned to Chicago, called in his pilots, told them he would take the romance out of aviation, reduced and slashed the pay of the pilots 40 per cent, and stated he would bring them down to $150 a month, which is less than a truck driver receives in a city.

Arbitration was suggested by the pilots, they even went so far as to call upon the Bureau of Conciliation in the Department of Labor. Before the agreed time of truce had expired, the company, on orders of Mr. Cord, discharged all the pilots.

I pointed out to the House on two occasions the conduct of the company and warned the public to keep off of these machines, because they were employing men who did not have experience, compelling them to work under unbearable and dangerous conditions, and it would be simply impossible to operate an air line with any degree of safety under such conditions.

Yesterday two men were killed and five injured in an airplane accident, which was avoidable. The plane was owned and operated by the Century Line in their attempt to lower the standards of aviation. The three injured were being trained in night flying preparatory to taking passenger planes.

Gentlemen, I can tell you from actual experience that men can not be trained for night flying by the methods employed by this company. I was trained in night flying myself, and under conditions that could not be compared to peace-time conditions. I can assure the House that in peace-time passenger service night flying requires the greatest skill and care. Men must be thoroughly trained and have long experience in night flying before being intrusted with human lives.

Two of the pilots were killed and three were injured. Now, this company has brought disaster and confusion in the aviation industry. It has destroyed the confidence of the public in air transportation. Aviation does not want that kind of people in charge of operations of air lines.

All I can do again is to sound a warning to the public that it is unsafe to travel on Century Airway planes until the company is willing to establish order and until experienced, competent pilots are put back to pilot these planes. [Applause.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 287 of title 39 of the United States Code, Supplement V, be amended to read as follows:

"The rate of postage on publications entered as second-class matter, when sent by others than the publisher or news agent, shall be 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction thereof, except when the postage at the rates prescribed for fourth-class matter is lower, in which case the latter rates shall apply: Provided, That these rates shall also apply to sample copies of publications entered as second-class matter mailed in excess of the quantity entitled by law to be sent at the pound rates, and to copies mailed by publishers to other than subscribers or to persons who are not properly includable in the legitimate list of subscribers required by law."

With the following committee amendments:

That the second paragraph of section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend Title II of an act approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1066, U. S. C., title 39), regulating postal rates, and for other purposes," approved May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. 941, U. S. C., Supp. V, title 39, sec. 287), be amended to read, as follows: Page 1, at the beginning of line 5, insert "SEC. 203."

Amend the title of the bill so as to read:

"To amend the second paragraph of section 5 of the act entitled 'An act to amend Title II of an act approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1066, U. S. C., title 39), regulating postal rates, and for other purposes.'"

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I did not have the bill on my list, otherwise I would have been better prepared to discuss its provisions. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that the rate of postage will be higher on this additional quantum that would be privileged to be sent by publishers in excess of the 10 per cent limit.

Since I had the floor a moment ago, I have looked at the report and notice that the only change in existing law is that which is embodied in the bill, on page 2, fourth line, after the word "thereof," "except when the postage at the rates prescribed for fourth-class matter is lower, in which case the latter rates shall apply."

Then there is this proviso, which is new law:

Provided, That these rates shall also apply to sample copies of publications entered as second-class matter mailed in excess of the quantity entitled by law to be sent at the pound rates.

What rates—the existing rates now applicable to second-class matter of 1 cent for 2 ounces or fraction thereof?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The parcel-post rate, which is a zone rate, 7 cents for the first zone, and up.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman believe that by the added burden of this second-class mail to the post office, even though additional revenue will come into the postal funds, it would still make a real saving and that the cost of the service would not be greater than the rates herein prescribed?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is mistaken about this bill. At the present time a publisher sends out any amount of second-class mail matter over the 10 per cent allowance and pays the regular third-class rate, which is high enough to cover the expense. We have in this case established the parcel-post rates as applying. There is no opening of the gates. The difference between expense and income will show $500,000 clear gain, according to the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman is correct, but I have serious doubts about it. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. BANKHEAD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GLOVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8818 and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read:

A bill to amend the second paragraph of section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend Title II of an act approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1066; U. S. C., title 39), regulating postal rates, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MONEY-ORDER FEES

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 10246, to fix the fees to be charged for the issuance of domestic money orders, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York calls up the bill H. R. 10246, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10246, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER] will please take the chair.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10246, with Mr. GLOVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to fix fees to be charged for the issuing of domestic money orders. It was recommended to us by the Postmaster General. In his recommendation he sought to have authority to fix the rates left with the Post Office Department. The committee, however, decided to fix a schedule of rates, and they are contained in the bill. It is estimated that this bill, which increases the first two rates, will augment the revenues of the department by $1,250,000. The bill comes before us with the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the hearing was had on this bill, did the postal authorities make any suggestion that the rates on the larger amounts for which money orders are authorized to be issued should be increased, or did the postal authorities request the privilege of authorizing the issuance of money orders in excess of $100, which is the limit at the present time?

Mr. MEAD. The recommendation of the department was given in the annual report. The department did not appear on this bill before our committee. We asked the department to suggest a schedule of rates and explained that we did not see fit to report out a bill giving authority to the Postmaster General to fix the rates. Then the committee took that matter up in executive session and reported out this bill.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In further answer, the highest amount set on money orders has been $100, and in a later bill the gentleman will find that we have taken care of the increased amount sent through the mail under registered mail, and provide a new bracket on that.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is not embodied in the bill under consideration.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. And you are seeking to raise this additional million and a quarter dollars by raising the rates on money orders below $5?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Below $5; and 63 per cent of all money orders now being sent are less than $5. The loss runs into millions on those smaller money orders. We put 1 cent on those two brackets up to the $5 money order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did the committee give any consideration to the thought of increasing the charge for money orders in amounts ranging from $40 to $60, from $60 to $80, and from $80 to $100?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The committee did, but the difficulty about that is that we run into some commercial companies who send money under insurance, and we found out the best we could do was to deal with those small money orders, where the loss in 1931 was $11,000,000. We endeavored to go on those lower money orders as high as we could.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman states the loss of operation of the money-order service of the Post Office Department is $11,000,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to connote that such loss is due to the fees being under the cost rate, or that loss was also incurred due to the loss of money orders?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The entire receipts are about $16,000,000, while all the expenses amount to $27,000,000, showing a discrepancy of about $11,000,000. However, we are in competition with certain commercial companies on this business.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman's committee given any consideration to the comparative rates charged for the dispatch of money by express companies?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. We are dealing with that in the registration bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think if there is such a tremendous loss as $11,000,000 in the operation of the money-order service, and the bill only provides for an increased revenue of $1,250,000 to make up that deficit, and that $1,250,000 is to be derived from money orders under $5, that the committee might well have considered increasing the rates on the money orders above the $5 limit.

All that is done in this bill is to increase the rate by 1 cent on money orders below $5, yet it is not increased above $5. Why would it not be advisable, if we are going to receive $1,250,000 from all these money orders under $5, to increase the rate on the money orders from $5 to $10, now 10 cents, 1 or 2 cents? It would be impossible to get a check or any kind of medium of exchange from an express company for $10 at a fee of 10 cents. If the loss is so tremendous, as the gentleman says, why would it not be advisable to increase the present 10-cent rate 2 cents? For instance, on money orders from $20 to $40, for which the rate is 15 cents, why not increase it 1 cent? Will we be doing any serious havoc to the operation of the Postal Service by increasing those rates nominally?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The loss is largely in the money orders under $5. The real answer to the gentleman's question is under consideration by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and that is the substitution for these smaller money orders of postal notes, which at one time were in use in the Post Office Department, but were discontinued, where there would be no accounting, where the money would go through the mail and be cashed at face value. That would remove a great deal of the loss on these money orders under $5.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. The object, as I understand, is to raise more revenue?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. And to avoid losses.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Perhaps this question is not germane, but I wish my colleague would tell me whether or not the Government makes a profit from the printing of stamped envelopes?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. They report to us that they do make a profit over all costs. However, that question is under consideration.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Are those envelopes printed by the Government or printed by private contract?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Under contract, four years at a time.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. When does that contract expire?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I think it expires this year.

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I believe it expires this year—1932.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. I want to say that I hope we may take steps to take the Government out of competition with private business in the printing of stamped envelopes.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. I have introduced a bill to that effect, and it is scheduled for hearing in the near future.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. I was aware of that, and I pledge my entire support to the gentleman's bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. That subject has been under consideration for many years, and is still dangling in the air without getting anywhere. That has been in force for 30 or 40 years. In the sales of these embossed envelopes in large quantities, where they do not take up the additional postage rate, the postmaster gets the fee as an additional increment to his salary, or is it now, under the regulations, turned over to the postal revenues?

Mr. MEAD. As I understand, it goes in with the revenues of the local post office as apply to stamps.

Mr. STAFFORD. In years back that little increment of profit went to the postmaster. I did not know whether any recent postal regulation had provided for it to go to postal revenues or not. For instance, the postmaster buys twenty-five 2-cent embossed envelopes for 56 or 59 cents. If he sells each one at 3 cents, he has a gain of 16 cents on the 25 sold. In years gone by that went to the postmaster. In that event the Government does not make any profit from the sale of embossed envelopes.

Now, I wish to direct the gentleman's attention to the bill under consideration. I am rather impressed with the idea that we should increase these rates above the $5 money order. We would not do any violence by such action, because there is no competitive agency that can meet that condition. Under existing law, we charge 10 cents for money orders from $5 to $10. Now, we have a large deficit here. What harm would be done by increasing that, as was done in the other, by 1 cent or even 2 cents? Let us make some gesture toward getting revenue. It does not require any hearing.

Mr. MEAD. I may say that the committee considered the entire rate structure as applying to money orders and found that the losses sustained were mainly attributed to these two classes, and these two classes were increased 1 cent each. That will increase the revenues $1,250,000. We found it is just about as expensive, as far as the Post Office Department is concerned, to handle a small money order as it is to handle a large money order. We are making some revenue on the larger money orders and we are losing considerable on the lesser ones, so without doing violence to the entire structure, we thought this bill would be acceptable. I concede that the gentleman is making a very good point; the committee may later consider his suggestion and perhaps revise the entire rate structure. But for the present I hope the gentleman will permit us to consider this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. But here is the practical situation, as admitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY]: In the operation of the money-order service there is a deficit of $11,000,000. The chairman of the committee says that most of that loss arises from the issuance of money orders under $5. The committee raises the rate on those money orders 1 cent. If the rate in each of the next brackets were raised 1 cent, about how much would that make?

An additional quarter of a million dollars, and there is still dangling in the air a deficit of $10,000,000, and no attempt is being made to meet that deficit. The gentleman says eventually—but why not now? Why not now increase those rates? I do not mean to increase the 5-cent rate. But I mean to go into the next two brackets, from $5 to $10 and from $10 to $20. Why not increase those rates 1 cent? If I were on the committee I would move to increase the 10-cent rate to 12 cents, and not only a 1-cent increase. If we did that, I do not believe it would mean much to those who buy money orders in the denominations of $10, $15, and $20, and I believe they are the ones which are mostly used.

I do not want to project my thought on this committee unless it meets with favor, but I think that is a conservative suggestion which the committee could well accept.

There is no private agency anywhere through which you can send a money order for less than 15 cents, probably not for less than 25 cents.

I appeal to the gentleman. I am for economy, and I am only making this suggestion as to those two brackets, increasing the proposed rate from 10 cents to 11 cents and from 12 cents to 13 cents. If that were done the committee could not be charged with having increased the smaller rates, mostly paid by poor people who use money orders amounting to $5 or below. I can not see any objection to it, and I really think it is a businesslike, practical suggestion. If I offer such an amendment I would like to have the approval of the committee. I do not want to do anything violently objectionable to the committee. My suggestion is to increase the rate for the issuance of money orders amounting to $5 to $10 from 10 cents to 11 cents, and on the $10 to $20 money orders from 12 cents to 13 cents.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will not press that amendment, because we have been faced with the situation that money is being sent now by private companies at about what this rate will be.

Mr. STAFFORD. What private company sends the money order amounting to $10 for 10 cents?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There are travelers' checks and money orders of one kind and another.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not in denominations of $10. As I had about won the support of the chairman of the committee, then I find the opposite effect on this side.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It will change the structure.

Mr. STAFFORD. It will not change the structure. I am carrying out the theory because I am leaving the next rate from $20 to $40 at 15 cents, but from $10 to $20 it will be 13 cents. Therefore I am carrying out the very principle the committee is suggesting. Because I have suggested this on the floor I hope the gentleman is not going to kick it to the rear.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield to me so that I may ask some questions?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Has the committee in contemplation raises on other lines of business which the Post Office Department is carrying on, increasing the revenue to some degree in order to meet the deficit incurred in carrying on these lines of business?

Mr. MEAD. I will say to the gentleman that we have a number of bills on our calendar to-day, and we estimate the total increased revenues will be $15,770,000 providing the bills are enacted into law.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Would it be unethical or any betrayal of confidence if the chairman of the committee stated what influences, if any, are brought to bear upon the committee in inducing it to accept the rate for the carrying on of these ordinary business transactions which is below the cost to the Government of carrying on such transactions?

I do not say the Government should make a profit, but I do feel that if it is going into competition with people who handle a similar line of business, the least the committee could do would be to make both ends meet. As the gentleman from Wisconsin said, the mere increase of 1 cent does not begin to wipe out the deficit, so why not increase it enough to wipe out the deficit, or nearly so, and see what the effect will be? Heretofore the policy of the Post Office Department has been, when they found a deficit in any one of these activities, to immediately increase the volume of business and make for a bigger deficit. That is what they did as to parcel post, money orders, and insurance. It is a ridiculous proposition for Congress to allow the Post Office Department to go into the insurance business and lose from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 on that business, and at the same time the people it is supposed to benefit really have to pay the bill. In reality they do not benefit. Most of this benefit goes to the department stores, the mail-order houses, and those who really ought to meet the cost of transportation, of insurance, and of the banking business. They ought to meet it and not pay it out to their stockholders in dividends, when they create it out of the taxpayers of the country.

I hope the committee will accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin and let us see what we can do along this line, because I think it would be a mighty good step in the right direction.

Mr. MEAD. I will say to the gentleman that the committee has been very diligent in holding meetings and hearings on bills applying to the rates of postage; but, in view of the fact that our Calendar Wednesday approached so rapidly, it was impossible for us to get any more bills upon the calendar than we now have here. We are considering other bills that coincide with the ideas expressed by the gentleman, and the committee is trying to place the Post Office Department on a better financial basis.

During the last two or three years the revenues of the department, as a result of the depression, have decreased approximately twenty-five or thirty million dollars a year; that is, considering the expected normal annual increase as against the recent decrease. Had the normal increase in volume continued, we would have eliminated most of the deficit by this time.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman may answer this question or not, as he wants, and I shall consider it no discourtesy whatever if the gentleman declines to answer; or if it is unethical, the gentleman need not answer. Is the Post Office Department itself or its representatives responsible, largely, for this inactivity on the part of Congress, or do they oppose such businesslike methods as will bring the department under a business administration and put it on a business foundation? Does the gentleman find that he has difficulty in the committee in dealing with the Post Office Department itself?

Mr. MEAD. I will say to the gentleman, considering the many activities of the Postal Service, we might be in agreement on one particular matter and in disagreement on another. We have our conflicts, just like any other committee. The department makes its recommendation to the committee and to the Congress in its annual report, and we have taken from their annual report such suggestions as would carry out the thought underlying the gentleman's argument. We have written those suggestions into bills, and we have brought them in here with the idea of raising the revenue and decreasing the deficit and placing the department on a better business basis.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I compliment the committee for what it has done, and I am trying to be helpful, if it is possible for one outside of the committee to be helpful; but the policy of the department has been that when they lose $5,000,000 on express and freight business designated as parcels post, they raise the limit from 5 pounds to 10 pounds, and then when they have $10,000,000 deficit, they raise it to 50 pounds, and then when they get a $20,000,000 or a $25,000,000 deficit they raise it to 70 pounds, and still increase the deficit all the time. I do not know whether the Committee on the Post Office has the power to say to the head of the Post Office Department, "Thus far shall thou go and no further. If you are going to increase this deficit and continue to do so by increasing the business you carry at a loss, we are going to stop you" or not.

Then there is one further thing, and I suppose this is a very embarrassing situation, but I want to emphasize it more than I did the other day on the floor of the House. Congress is constantly criticized as being unfair and unjust to the taxpayer through the use of the franking privilege, which costs about $550,000 a year. This is about the cost to the Post Office Department, and yet Congress through the Post Office Department accords to the newspapers and the periodicals and the magazines franking privilege to the extent of $96,000,000, and the very newspapers that are criticizing Congress are the beneficiaries of such liberality.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I have read the Postmaster General's report for the past year, and the Postmaster General, as I understand from his report and from his interviews and releases, favors increasing the rate of postage on first-class mail matter.

Mr. UNDERHILL. On which the department makes 500 per cent.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am pleased to note that the gentleman is in favor of increasing the rate only on the mail matter that creates the deficit.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Absolutely.

Mr. HASTINGS. And, of course, the gentleman from Massachusetts knows that there is no deficit in the first-class mail, and therefore that rate on that class of mail ought not to be increased or raised.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that if any private concern or any corporation or any individual had the power and made a profit on a necessity, such as the carrying of the mail, of 500 per cent on first-class business, this Congress would get up on its hind legs and raise Cain and would not allow it to continue; and yet the only way the Postmaster General says we can wipe out this deficit is to increase the rate on first-class mail and make a profit of 700, 800, or 1,000 per cent. Now, this is not right.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am pleased to know that the gentleman from Massachusetts agrees with me and others that the rate on first-class mail should not be increased.

Mr. UNDERHILL. In other words, first-class mail is a necessity. It is a necessity to the people of this country, but we have other mediums of transportation. We have express companies, we have banks, we have insurance companies that can carry on these various lines of business that create such a tremendous deficit, and we ought to restrict our business along that line or else put the cost at a price which would wipe out the deficit.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will permit, I heartily agree with him, and I think a careful study by the Postmaster General should be made of every class of mail and the cost of each class ascertained, and, so far as we can by legislation, Congress should make every class pay its fair proportional part of the expenses.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Can the gentleman, can anybody tell me, and I issue a challenge to everyone here to tell me, why the country newspapers should be carried free? We are spending something over $8,000,000 to frank country newspapers. Why should we spend that amount of money to carry the Saturday Evening Post and the Ladies' Home Journal and such other publications that carry a tremendous amount of advertising, for which they get anywhere from $500 to $1,500 a page?

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman is touching a very tender spot.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I am not afraid of that tender spot.

Mr. HASTINGS. I recollect that some years ago Claude Kitchin made a gallant fight, attempting to make those large publications pay the expense of transportation through the mails, but my recollection is that he was unsuccessful.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon, he was successful.

Mr. UNDERHILL. They say that the racketeers have got us by the throat, and here are the leaders of education, who are playing a good racket on the Government and on the people of the United States, a greater racket than any kidnapers or others engaged in the practice of racketeering.

It is costing hundreds of millions of dollars, and it ought to be stopped. They got it simply because they had the power to reach out and say to the people, "You can not get this magazine or this paper for 5 or 20 cents if Congress is going to add to the postage rate. If they do, we have got to charge it back to you." And then the Members of Congress are flooded with propaganda telling us that we must not increase the cost of magazines.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman from Wisconsin corrects me and says that Mr. Kitchin was successful in raising the rate a few years ago. I was under the impression that he was not successful.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me say that a subsequent Congress, however, lowered these high rates which Claude Kitchin advocated and succeeded in putting into the law.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, we are getting far afield from the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin. Let me clear up one or two matters which he has raised. The gentleman from Massachusetts seems to think that we can make a hard-and-fast rule for postal charges as easy to solve as the multiplication table. Fixing rates is not as simple a matter as that. A few years ago it was called to the attention of Congress that the rates on postal cards of 1 cent should be increased, and it was figured that by an increase from 1 cent to 2 cents $20,000,000 would be derived, or an increase of $10,000,000. Congress increased the rate from 1 cent to 2 cents on postal cards, and the result was that during the following year there was a falling off in the postal-card receipts of $6,000,000. Now, let us go back to the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. UNDERHILL. How can the gentleman say that there was a loss of that amount? By saving 2 cents I would rather write a letter and put it in a sealed envelope than send it on a post card.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. All of us would; but Congress passed the law believing the public would look at it in a different way. There are many leaks in post-office receipts. I say to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] that his figures are altogether too large as to what the department loses on the transmission of second-class mail. I shall not take the time now to go into that proposition in detail.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I took my figures of ninety-six and a half million dollars from the RECORD, which figures, in turn, were submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD], who got them from the Post Office Department.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. In regard to another matter, before returning to the item under discussion, I do not know of any reason, and I do not know of anyone who can give a reason, why the Government ought to indulge in printing returns on envelopes, whether it does it itself or farms out the contract, any more than the Government should indulge in selling shoes or sugar to the people of the United States.

If we arbitrarily increase this postal money-order rate to a point where it will not be patronized by the public, then we will have deprived ourselves of the very object we are seeking to accomplish. We ought to go slow in increasing rates, that we may not call into use the potential competition in this matter which exists on every hand.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. Has the gentleman the figures as to whether or not the Government receives any money in the printing of returns on envelopes?

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. The Government does not spend any money direct, but it carries the printed envelopes from Dayton, Ohio, to California, Maine, and Alaska free. The Government lets a contract to the detriment of printers in every town and city in the Nation except one printing plant in Dayton, Ohio.

Mr. HARLAN. It is paid for by the people who get the envelopes, is it not?

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Theoretically only.

Mr. HARLAN. How can you pay for anything theoretically? It is paid for, and it renders a profit, does it not——

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. It does not.

Mr. HARLAN. To the firm that does the printing; and is it not a fact that this is not done by the Government but it is done by a private concern under contract?

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. It is done under contract.

Mr. HARLAN. Why did the gentleman make the remark that the Government should not be in the printing business?

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. There are good printers out of work in every town in the United States. The Government should not be in the printing business in competition with printers throughout the country. There are 57 other varieties of business in which the Government ought not compete.

Mr. UNDERHILL. How does the gentleman draw the distinction between the printing business and the insurance business and the transportation business and the express business and the banking business?

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Congress would indeed render a needed service if it would divorce government from competitive business. The function of government is to govern and not to indulge in competitive business with its citizens.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. As to the question asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL], since no one seemed to answer concerning the weekly newspapers, which are given the free privileges, I will say that that privilege was granted in 1851 by the Congress to help the small papers in the country districts. To-day it applies only to those offices where there is no delivery service, so that it does not cover every place. It does cost about $8,000,000, due to the policy of Congress. In regard to the Saturday Evening Post, which with other large magazines is always under fire, it is admitted by the Post Office Department, after long study, that any publication that weighs 8 ounces or more pays its full cost of handling and that the loss on second-class matter is entirely due to those smaller publications that go through the mail in vast quantities, each requiring handling and delivery service.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC], and then I shall be obliged to ask the House to refrain from these extraneous discussions in order that we may get on with our calendar.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, much has been said about the cost of the circulation of the small country newspaper. I distinctly recall that the small newspapers take quite an active interest in matters relating to their own little home surroundings, to the extent that they use very large amounts of space for which they receive no pay. I have also noticed that they likewise publish articles about Members of Congress, and we who are Members of Congress are always pleased when they print something complimentary that relates to our service. In my time I want to read a short statement from a county newspaper in my district.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the gentleman reading this article, if he will agree to leave out the advertising feature in connection with it and not name the source of his article.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I rise to a point of order. I have a perfect right to object to the gentleman reading into the RECORD any matter which he attempts to read. I do not object to his reading this matter into the RECORD, but I do object to using the RECORD as an advertising medium for either country or city newspapers or any other printed article. Unless the gentleman will agree to eliminate the name of the paper from which he quotes, I shall have to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts has sought to take me off my feet because I had in mind making some complimentary statements about a country newspaper that is published in the district which I have the honor to represent. I likewise desire to give credit to the editor of this paper, because this statement was published in his paper without my notice, and inasmuch as it referred more to my service rather than to myself as an individual, I thought it would be beneficial to put it into the RECORD. But in view of the attitude of the gentleman from Massachusetts, in view of the fact that he feels that this country newspaper should not receive any recognition by name, under the circumstances I will yield to the gentleman's desires.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman knows that everyone of us is impressed with the value of the gentleman's services, none more than I. It does not need the indorsement of a country newspaper to tell Members of Congress how valuable the gentleman is to the Nation.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. This statement did not refer to me so much personally as it did to the character of service a person is capable of rendering who has had the same length of service as myself.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. What is the name of this country newspaper?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. The paper is the Beckham County Democrat, published at Erick, Okla.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. And who is the editor?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. A distinguished gentleman by the name of J. B. Miller.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. And he agrees with all the rest of us, that the gentleman's service in the House of Representatives has been excellent? I would be glad to hear the remarks which the gentleman had to make.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. He made a very nice statement in this connection, which was to the effect that only a few understood congressional rules and regulations, and that a Senator or Congressman can better benefit his district after he has had a long service, because this allows him to be placed on important committees, and such assignments enable the Senator or Representative to have a voice in taking care of many public questions of importance. He was also nice enough to call attention to the fact that I am the ranking member of an important committee, and that other districts that have retained their Members in Congress for long periods were the ones that profited the most, concluding with a statement which, in substance, is that a district that changes its Representative after he has reached a high place loses not only prestige but all that has been gained by long service. This article was not personal, because it contained a statement that he had no personal interest in the candidacy of any man, and that he did not owe me anything but respect for that which had been achieved. Therefore, I think it would have been beneficial for the entire House to have read this article; but in view of the fact that the gentleman from Massachusetts does not think this ought to go into the RECORD, I am hoping that this will answer the questions asked by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact there are 32,000 free issues of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. There are only 700 people in the United States who pay for the RECORD, and I think something in it occasionally about country newspapers would be valuable.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. I have always taken the position that the country newspaper is entitled to a great deal of consideration, and especially do I agree with the gentleman with respect to his viewpoint on contracts for stamped envelopes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to modify the postal money-order system, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1883, as amended (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 716), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. A money order shall not be issued for more than $100, and the fees for domestic money orders shall be as follows:

"For orders—

"From $0.01 to $2.50, 6 cents;

"From $2.51 to $5, 8 cents;

"From $5.01 to $10, 10 cents;

"From $10.01 to $20, 12 cents;

"From $20.01 to $40, 15 cents;

"From $40.01 to $60, 18 cents;

"From $60.01 to $80, 20 cents; and

"From $80.01 to $100, 22 cents."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 2, strike out the numeral "10" before the word "cents," and insert "11"; in line 3, strike out the numeral "12" before the word "cents" and insert "13."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment and ask its adoption.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GLOVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10246) to fix the fees to be charged for the issue of domestic money orders, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. MEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FEES FOR DOMESTIC INSURED AND COLLECT-ON-DELIVERY MAIL OF THIRD AND FOURTH CLASSES

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10247) prescribing fees and corresponding indemnities for domestic insured and collect-on-delivery mail of the third and fourth classes, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House automatically resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10247, with Mr. GLOVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, this bill prescribes certain fees and indemnities for domestic insured and collect-on-delivery mail of the third and fourth classes. It is recommended by the Postmaster General in his annual report. It was considered and unanimously recommended by your Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. We are advised that the additional revenues to be produced as a result of this legislation will amount to $2,500,000.

The bill increases the fees for insurance from 8 cents to 10 cents for indemnification not to exceed $25. It increases from 10 cents to 15 cents the charge for indemnification not to exceed $50. It also adds some new rates, and provides for additional services.

The fee for collect-on-delivery service, which is now 12 cents for collections not to exceed $10, will be changed to read "the fee for collect-on-delivery service for domestic third and fourth class mail shall be 12 cents for collections and indemnity not to exceed $10," and for several other new rates not contained in the present law.

The new rates can be found on the last page of the report. They are 17 cents for collections and indemnity not to exceed $25; 22 cents for collections and indemnity not to exceed $50; 32 cents for collections and indemnity not to exceed $100; 40 cents for collections and indemnity not to exceed $150; and 45 cents for collections and indemnities not to exceed $200.

This bill is an effort to make up for some of the losses sustained in this service. As I said before, it has been recommended both by the department and the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any estimate as to the amount of revenue that will be derived from these two respective services by increasing the rate, one for indemnification and the other for collect on delivery?

Mr. MEAD. I have not a copy of the cost-ascertainment report here.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It is estimated that this bill will raise $2,500,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to know if the gentleman has any estimate of the segregated services. You increase the rate on indemnifications in the lower amounts from 8 cents to 10 cents and from 10 cents to 15 cents, but you increase them materially on the collect-on-delivery mail. Can the gentleman give us any figures as to the additional revenues resulting from these respective services?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes. Those changes on insured mail will bring in additional revenues of $1,455,000. The changes in collect-on-delivery mail will bring in $1,045,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume the gentleman has figures as to the amount of money the service is losing in the operation of these two respective services. If the gentleman has those figures, I would like to have them.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have those figures, because I thought they would be interesting to the committee. The insurance mailings last year brought in $7,613,000, and the expenditures in connection with it were $10,655,000, leaving a deficit or discrepancy of $3,041,000. That is on the insured mail. On the collect-on-delivery mail the deficiency in the cost, according to the cost ascertainment, was $5,000,000. So, as to the two services there was a loss in 1931 of some $8,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the collect-on-delivery mail had a net loss of $5,000,000?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Five million three hundred and twenty-one thousand dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then there will still be a deficit notwithstanding the increased rates which the committee proposes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There will still be a deficit; and we are trying to get that deficit cut down as much as possible without at the same time injuring the service and destroying it to the public.

Mr. STAFFORD. What comparable service in private business comes in conflict with the collect-on-delivery service?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There are private insurance companies that will take mail and insure it at small fees.

Mr. STAFFORD. The express companies do that to a large extent in connection with the collect-on-delivery mail?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information, from his long and close study of the operations of the Postal Service, as to whether the large department stores utilize the parcel-post service, or do they utilize the express companies for collect-on-delivery service?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. They are patronizing the parcel post and third-class mail very largely. I think they prefer it wherever they can get the service, but in some cases they can not get insurance beyond a certain amount.

Mr. TILSON. Is it correct that the Post Office Department, without additional legislation, can change the rates on parcel-post matter?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. They can not do anything without the Interstate Commerce Commission. Under the law as it stands at present the Postmaster General can go to the Interstate Commerce Commission, present his case, and the Interstate Commerce Commission can then increase or decrease rates.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not a fact that the Government loses on its parcel-post service as a whole?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Well, the cost ascertainment for 1931 indicates a loss of $21,000,000 on fourth-class mail. However, there is considerable question as to the apportionment of the cost; that is, as to whether it can be as high as that. The Postmaster General desires to raise $12,000,000 through increased rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think when the Government delivers a package at a residence miles away from the post office, after having carried it for more miles on the train, that it is losing money?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Well, I will say to the gentleman the provision of the law is that where the rates are losing money and where it is preventing the shipment of articles desirable to be shipped, the Postmaster General is permitted to go to the Interstate Commerce Commission and get higher rates. All that it is necessary to prove is that we are losing money and then the mandatory provision of the law comes into effect.

Mr. TILSON. Many parcel-post packages are delivered for 10 or 15 cents some distance from the post office, and it seems to me that the Government must certainly lose money in delivering these packages miles away from the post office, especially when there may be but few packages in a large, heavy truck.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman. The cost ascertainment shows a great loss on packages in the first, second, and third zones, but a profit on the zones farther away.

Mr. TILSON. Are not the rates rather low in the first and second zones?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the service was first established the rate in the first zone for the delivery of a 1-pound package, as I recall, was 5 cents?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. At that time it was absolutely impossible for my imagination, no matter how wild it would run, to conceive how the Postal Service, paying a letter carrier at that time $1,800 per annum——

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. One thousand two hundred dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. At that time we had increased the salaries of postal employees in the first-class offices. That was away back in 1910. It was based on population and at that time we increased them from $1,200 to $1,800. At that time the Hon. Jesse Overstreet was chairman of the committee, and I served on that committee. That was during the period from 1903 to 1911. As I am getting along in years, I recognize that sometimes I may be mistaken, and in this particular I will yield to the keen intellect of the younger gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is almost impossible of conception that the Postal Service, no matter how large the volume in the carriage of parcel post, could carry 1-pound packages at a fee of 5 cents, and that is where the loss was then, has been, and still is, and I can not understand why the Post Office Department in these many years has not sought to increase to a paying basis the rate on this class of merchandising which is availed of not by the public generally but by the storekeepers in certain localities, who use it in the distribution of their merchandise. Instead of operating delivery service themselves at a higher expense, they utilize the Postal Service for that purpose, and the Postal Service is performing this service at a much less compensatory rate than is received.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. As the gentleman knows, since 1912, when the parcel post law went into force, the only increases that have been made in rates have been made by Congress, so that the Congress of the United States has increased them. However, the Postmaster General is now asking for an increase.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; those increases were made, as referred to a little while ago, just following the war, under the courageous leadership of the Hon. Claude Kitchin, who was then the majority leader and chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. He had the moral stamina to increase rates on parcel post in all the zones except the lower ones.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; the gentleman is mistaken. There was no increase at that time in parcel post. The increase was on second-class matter and the zone system was then established.

Mr. STAFFORD. I stand corrected. It was on second-class mail matter, and instead of applying the pound rate universally throughout the country they adopted and extended the parcel-post feature of zone charges to second-class mail.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (a) of section 211 of Title II of an act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1069; U. S. C., title 39, sec. 245), as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 39, sec. 245), is further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 211. (a) The fee for insurance shall be 5 cents for indemnification not to exceed $5; 10 cents for indemnification not to exceed $25; 15 cents for indemnification not to exceed $50; 25 cents for indemnification not to exceed $100; 30 cents for indemnification not to exceed $150; and 35 cents for indemnification not to exceed $200. Whenever the sender of an insured article of mail matter shall so request, and upon payment of a fee of 3 cents at the time of mailing, or of 5 cents subsequent to the time of mailing, a receipt shall be obtained for such insured mail matter, showing to whom and when the same was delivered, which receipt shall be returned to the sender, and be received in the courts as prima facie evidence of such delivery: Provided further, That upon payment of the additional sum of 20 cents at the time of mailing by the sender of an insured article of mail matter, a receipt shall be obtained for such insured mail matter, showing to whom, when, and the address where the same was delivered, which receipt shall be returned to the sender, and be received in the courts as prima facie evidence of such delivery:

Provided further, That no refund shall be made of fees paid for return receipts for registered or insured mail where the failure to furnish the sender a return receipt or the equivalent is not due to the fault of the Postal Service."

SEC. 2. That paragraph (b) of section 211 of Title II of an act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1925 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 246), is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The fee for collect-on-delivery service for domestic third and fourth class mail shall be 12 cents for collections and indemnity not to exceed $5; 17 cents for collections and indemnity not to exceed $25; 22 cents for collections and indemnity not to exceed $50; 32 cents for collections and indemnity not to exceed $100; 40 cents for collections and indemnity not to exceed $150; and 45 cents for collections and indemnity not to exceed $200."

SEC. 3. This act shall become effective April 1, 1932.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this for the purpose of directing the attention of the Chairman and the members of the committee to the effective date that is provided in the bill. April 1 is only a few weeks ahead, and I question whether this bill will be enacted into law before that time. Would it not be better, in view of the fact that this bill may not be considered for perhaps a month or more in the other body, to have this measure go into effect July 1, 1932?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out in line 16, page 3, the word "April" and insert in lieu thereof the word "July."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 3, line 16, strike out the word "April" and insert in lieu thereof the word "July."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BANKHEAD] having resumed the chair, Mr. GLOVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10247) prescribing fees and corresponding indemnities for domestic insured and collect-on-delivery mail of the third and fourth classes, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DOMESTIC REGISTERED MAIL

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10244) fixing the fees and limits of indemnity for domestic registered mail based upon actual value and length of haul, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10244, with Mr. GLOVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3926 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of February 27, 1897 (ch. 340, 29 Stat. L. 599), providing limited indemnity for loss of registered mail matter, and by the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. L. 1174), fixing such indemnity at not exceeding $100, and that portion of the act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat. L. 1337), making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, and providing indemnity for the loss of third and fourth class domestic registered matter, which laws were jointly amended by section 3 of the act of May 1, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 469; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 39, sec. 381a), are hereby further amended to read as follows:

"For the greater security of valuable mail matter the Postmaster General may establish a uniform system of registration, and as a part of such system he may provide rules under which the senders or owners of any registered matter shall be indemnified for loss, rifling, or damage thereof in the mails, the indemnity to be paid out of the postal revenues, but in no case to exceed $1,000 for any one registered piece, or the actual value thereof when that is less than $1,000, and for which no other compensation or reimbursement to the loser has been made: Provided, That the Postmaster General may in his discretion provide for the payment of indemnity for the actual value of registered mail or insured mail treated as registered mail in excess of $1,000, but not in excess of $10,000, when such mail is not insured with any commercial insurance company or other insuring agency and may fix the fees chargeable for the risks assumed ratably at the rates fixed up to $1,000: Provided further, That the Postmaster General in his discretion may cause to be underwritten or reinsured in whole or in part with any commercial insurance companies any liability or risk assumed by the Post Office Department in connection with the mailing of any particular registered article or articles.

"SEC. 2. The full value of all registered mail or insured mail treated as registered mail shall be declared by the mailer at the time of mailing unless otherwise prescribed by the Postmaster General, and any claim for indemnity in any amount involving such mail, when the full value knowingly and willfully was not stated at the time of mailing, shall be invalid. All claims for indemnity involving registered mail, or insured mail treated as registered mail, or other insured mail, or collect-on-delivery mail, which is also insured with commercial insurance companies or other insuring agencies, shall be adjusted by the Post Office Department on a pro rata basis as a coinsurer with the commercial insurance companies or other insuring agencies."

SEC. 2. Section 3927 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 209 of the act of February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1068), and by the first section of the act of May 1, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 469; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 39, sec. 384), be, and the same is hereby, amended further to read as follows:

"Mail matter shall be registered on the application of the party posting the same. The registry fees, which are in addition to the regular postage, and the limits of indemnity therefor within the maximum indemnity provided by law shall be as follows:

"For registry indemnity not exceeding $5, 15 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $5 but not exceeding $25, 18 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $25 but not exceeding $50, 20 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $50 but not exceeding $75, 25 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $75 but not exceeding $100, 30 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $100 but not exceeding $200, 40 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $200 but not exceeding $300, 50 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $300 but not exceeding $400, 60 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $400 but not exceeding $500, 70 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $500 but not exceeding $600, 80 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $600 but not exceeding $700, 85 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $700 but not exceeding $800, 90 cents;

"For registry indemnity exceeding $800 but not exceeding $900, 95 cents; and

"For registry indemnity exceeding $900 but not exceeding $1,000, $1:

"Provided, That for registered mail or insured mail treated as registered mail having a declared value in excess of the maximum indemnity covered by the registry fee paid there shall be charged additional fees, as follows: When the declared value exceeds the maximum indemnity covered by the registry fee paid by not more than $50, 1 cent; by more than $50 but not more than $100, 2 cents; by more than $100 but not more than $200, 3 cents; by more than $200 but not more than $400, 4 cents; by more than $400 but not more than $600, 5 cents; by more than $600 but not more than $800, 6 cents; by more than $800 but less than $1,000, 7 cents; and if the excess of the declared value over the maximum indemnity covered by the registry fee paid is $1,000 or more, the additional fees for each $1,000 or part of $1,000 on articles destined to points within the several zones applicable to fourth-class matter shall be as follows:

"For local delivery or for delivery within the first zone, 8 cents;
"For delivery within the second zone, 9 cents;
"For delivery within the third zone, 10 cents;
"For delivery within the fourth zone, 11 cents;
"For delivery within the fifth or sixth zones, 12 cents;
"For delivery within the seventh or eighth zones, 13 cents.

"All such fees shall be accounted for in such manner as the Postmaster General shall direct. Mail matter upon the official business of the Post Office Department which requires registering shall be registered free of charge, and pass through the mails free of charge."

SEC. 3. The Postmaster General may make such rules and regulations in accordance with this act as he may consider necessary or advisable.

This act shall become effective April 1, 1932.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, this bill fixes the fees and limit of indemnity for domestic registered mail, based upon actual value and length of haul, and creates an additional service by increasing the present maximum of $1,000 to $10,000. This increase in amount and rates is explained in the second and third pages of the report.

It is recommended by the department and the committee, and it is estimated that it will increase the receipts of the Post Office Department $7,000,000. It is in keeping with our committee program of reducing the deficit and putting the Post Office Department on a more businesslike basis. The committee has conferred with the department and agreed upon the fees stated in the bill.

If any time is required on that side, I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this bill is one which provides a new feature in addition to the change of rates. At present we have a limited registration, and in this bill we have added a provision which makes it possible for one to register an amount above $1,000, and you will find included in it the rates provided in the bill which are believed to be sufficient to pay the cost of handling the extra amount.

In 1931 the department received from registered mail matter $11,846,000, and the expenditure was $20,214,000, which left a deficit of $8,516,000. The increased rates of registered matter up to $1,000 will bring in an additional revenue of $2,000,000 per year. The cost of the service on amounts above $1,000 will bring in $5,000,000, according to the estimates of the department, which would mean that there would be an additional revenue of $7,000,000.

The registry service, as Members know, originated in 1864. It has been changed from time to time, but has been growing greater each year. There have been losses, which the committee is trying to curtail. We are not endeavoring to curtail the entire amount of the loss, and there will be a slight loss in this service. I believe that these changes will add value to the Postal Service in its registration service.

Mr. STAFFORD. The new policy of registration is to be extended through the zone feature?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the reason of this operation of the registered mail by zones?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. As the gentleman says, this is a new feature, where we are attempting to handle sums of more than $1,000. In the past we did not attempt to register sums over $1,000, although the banks and others desire to transmit much larger sums through the mail. In the past they have had them insured by private organizations, which insured for a profitable rate. The post office transacted the business and the private companies collected the profit.

After a thorough hearing in the last Congress we have thought it safe for the Government to register these sums over $1,000. The committee thought there should be a zone system where this mail goes a great distance, where they have transfer points, which would give a chance for desperadoes or bandits to take this money. We therefore thought that the zone system should be put into force. The last zone runs the rates up to 13 cents above the regular charge.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman direct me to that part of the bill which authorizes the Government to carry amounts in registered mail in excess of $1,000?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I refer the gentleman to the proviso on page 5—

That for registered mail or insured mail received as registered mail having a declared value in excess of the maximum indemnity—

Which is $1,000—

covered by the registry fee paid, there shall be charged additional fees as follows—

And so forth.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, on page 2, in lines 20 and 21, we find reference to—

Mail treated as registered mail in excess of $1,000, but not in excess of $10,000.

This is the provision the gentleman from Wisconsin refers to, I think.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is true; and the rates are in the proviso that I referred to.

Mr. TILSON. The provision permitting it is on page 2.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for an hour.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if this bill merely increased the rates of the amount of registered mail that the Government is now authorized to carry, I would not rise at this time in opposition to any part of the bill, but for a long time I have thought it is a mistake for our Government, through the Postal Service, to undertake to carry through the mails vast sums of money. I well recall many years ago when Mr. Burleson, later Postmaster General, then a Member of the House, offered an amendment upon the floor which permitted the Postal Service to carry large sums of money through the mails. At that time we were providing in the sundry civil appropriation bill some $200,000 for the carriage of Government funds by private agencies. The amendment was to authorize those large funds to be carried through the mails. Now it is proposed to go one step farther in this paternalism of the Government in competition with private enterprise, particularly where vast sums of money are involved, and have the Government carry these funds through the registry system.

From my observation of the operation of the two agencies carrying funds, by express companies and by registered mail, I have thought that the private agencies are far better prepared to safeguard the conveyance of large sums of money than is the Postal Service. We have in recent times suffered tremendous losses by holdups of registered mail. One comes to my mind in the operation of a mail train on the Milwaukee Road leaving Chicago for St. Paul about midnight, which was held up at Roundout, about 20 miles from Chicago. It cost the Government many thousands of dollars.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. One of the difficulties we were faced with was the practice now of sending these huge sums of money through the mails, registering them up to $1,000, and then getting a private insurance or indemnity company to handle the insurance on the amount above $1,000, which put the expense and danger on the Post Office Department without any of the revenue.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not exactly follow the position of the gentleman. In case of loss, who would receive the benefit or indemnity?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am making the point that we take all of the danger of handling these great sums of money which are insured by private companies. Of course, if a loss is incurred the private company has to stand the loss, but the danger to the employees and the service comes through those vast sums of money being carried as they are now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood that under existing law the Postal Service could carry amounts only up to $1,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In registration; yes. But sometimes millions of dollars are carried through the mails and the amount above $1,000 is insured by private companies.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the Government does not stand sponsor for safe delivery of those million dollars.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. The risk is upon the private insurance company or the private bank.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman was making the point about the danger of money in the mails.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The money is in the mails now.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the Government is not responsible for the safe carriage, except for $1,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, you are making the Government the insurer. Of course, if I had a million dollars I might send it through the mails if I wanted to, but I would have to take the loss or secure other means of indemnity in case of loss. You are now making the Government the indemnifying agent. This is one of the bills where the report was made at midnight under special order made late yesterday afternoon.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, we have had this bill under hearing for the last three years and have thoroughly gone into it. We have tried to safeguard it by providing that the Post Office Department may reinsure if it believes it wise to do so, and the gentleman will find that provision on page 3 at the top of the page, so that we are not taking any undue risk in this matter, and will get some of the returns now going to private companies who insure the money.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is one of the bills where Members did not have a report upon it available until this morning. It is my practice to have all bills and the reports so that I may scan them before they are brought up for consideration. Nevertheless, I believe that we are launching on a very dangerous policy when the Government becomes the guarantor of millions and millions of dollars that may be carried in the mails.

The Government is not as well qualified to safeguard the carriage of great amounts of money as is a private agency, and in the nature of things it can not safeguard the carriage of these huge deposits as well as a private agency.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. We are using every possible safeguard.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in this bill that compels the Government to take out indemnity insurance for these tremendous amounts of money that will be transported in the mail and for which the Government will be liable. It rests entirely upon the discretion of the Postmaster General, and if he is socialistically inclined he will not call upon a private insurance company to guarantee the payment of any money that may be lost.

I venture this assertion—and this is merely an assertion: That as between the rates to be charged by a private surety company for the transportation of money by a private agency, such as an express company, and that by Postal Service, the rates will be much higher for the transportation of money in the mails than by a private agency. I lay that down as a postulate, based upon my observation of the care with which money is transported by express companies and the way registered mail matter, not known to the persons guarding it, is transported by the Postal Service now.

Mr. COYLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. COYLE. Is it the point of view of the gentleman that the express companies covered all points where this service would be called for?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mostly. Until the Government went into the business of competing with private agencies, private agencies reached almost every available place in the country, but when the Government went into the business of carrying merchandise and carrying large funds of money, that of itself drove the private agencies out of business, and at whose expense? At the expense of the taxpayers of the country, because ever since the Parcel Post Service was adopted it has been operated at a loss. The mail has been carried at a great loss, and for the benefit of whom? The users, the department stores, at the expense of the taxpayers.

Now we are attempting to balance the Budget. Why do we not attempt to balance the Postal Service?

Mr. COYLE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. COYLE. I am seriously interested in the gentleman's point of view, because I happen to know of some instances where the express service for this class of transportation was canceled and shortly thereafter the mail service endeavored to cancel their rates for exactly the same transportation. I do not like particularly to mention the point, because I do not want to give it undue publicity but is it the gentleman's opinion that if the express company does not serve any large community, the Post Office Department, with its general monopoly, should serve that community?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am protesting here and now against the Government indemnifying the banks of the country for the transportation of millions and millions of dollars through the mail, as the surety of those companies, rather than forcing the banks to go to a private surety company for their own indemnification. I do not want the Government to go into this business of indemnification; and, if I had my way, I would oppose it, just as I opposed it when Mr. Burleson, the gentleman from Texas, advocated the socialistic proposal that, because we were operating an agency for the transportation of first, second, third, and fourth class matter, we should then and there transport the money of the Government from New York to Philadelphia and other places. That was the entering wedge to this socialistic venture. Now, we have its full fruition of having the Government go into the insurance business.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] says we do to-day transport these huge amounts of money, and we only stand sponsor to the extent of $1,000. I say that we should not go beyond that $1,000 but should throw it upon the banks to look to their sureties for their indemnification.

Mr. COYLE. I agree very closely with what the gentleman says.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman being from Pennsylvania and being a Republican could not aught do else, and those from Pennsylvania are Republicans.

Mr. COYLE. I would like to ask the gentleman this further question: The gentleman would not think that the Post Office Department ought to entirely cancel its transportation to any point that could not otherwise be served, whether it is the transportation of money or ordinary matter?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. It is not attempted to check or dwarf the present facilities. Even before the Government proceeded upon indemnifying any person or the Government itself for the transportation of Government funds by mail, any third party using the mail could, if he wished, take the risk of sending money in an envelope. We tried to educate the public that there is risk in connection with that and they should buy money orders. Now, we are taking the position that they should utilize the registry service to the extent of millions and millions of dollars, and the Government, for a fee, should indemnify them. The essence of this is whether the Government should go into the insurance business.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KENDALL. The Government indemnity applies only up to $10,000; not into millions and millions, as the gentleman says.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, only $10,000; but at one time it was only $1,000. A bank, instead of sending one hundred $1,000 bills in one package, can send 10 packages containing $10,000 each, and the Government be obligated as indemnitor to the extent of $100,000. The banks will easily get around that. The question is whether we should go into the insurance business of indemnifying private agencies for the hazard of sending large sums of money through the mails. I say that the postal agency is not as well suited for safeguarding the carriage of large sums of money in the mail as the express companies are.

I regret that last night I gave consent to having the committee present reports up to midnight. It does not give the Members of this House an opportunity to study the bills. I understood the gentleman to say they were only minor bills. This is a bill of great essential consequence. I was busy in a special committee framing Muscle Shoals legislation this morning, and I do not have time on the floor to prepare the necessary amendments that I think are worthy to safeguard the interests of the Government. It is an instance showing we should be wary of granting leave to committees to file reports up to midnight so that the Members can not have an opportunity to study the bills thoroughly.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, the committee asked unanimous consent to file reports after the adjournment of the House because of the fact that we were filing a number of reports during the afternoon, and it was thought we might not be able to file them all before adjournment. Our committee filed the last two reports just a few minutes after adjournment.

This bill has been considered by our committee for several years. It is recommended by the Postmaster General in his last annual report. That recommendation can be found on pages 7 and 49 of his report.

It is a service we are already giving the country. This bill merely extends it; we are in a better position to serve every section of the country than any other agency.

Our committee is endeavoring to balance the postal budget. We are trying to do just what the gentleman from Wisconsin stated he is trying to do.

This bill permits slight increases in rates up to $1,000. It then gives a new service and adds new rates up to $10,000. It will raise $3,000,000 in revenue for the department.

The department, as I said before, is in a position to take care of this added work and serve the country better than any other agency. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania said, the department is now authorized to reinsure. We are not depriving insurance companies of business.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Is it not also true that the danger at the present time comes because of the fact that we are carrying more than $1,000? For instance, there are shipments now being made of $1,000,000 in postal mail bags, and the fact that that large amount of money is carried puts an additional danger on the $1,000 which we now indemnify.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is correct. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3926 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of February 27, 1897 (ch. 340, 29 Stat. L. 599), providing limited indemnity for loss of registered mail matter, and by the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. L. 1174), fixing such indemnity at not exceeding $100, and that portion of the act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat. L. 1337), making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, and providing indemnity for the loss of third and fourth class domestic registered matter, which laws were jointly amended by section 3 of the act of May 1, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 469; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 39, sec. 381a), are hereby further amended to read as follows:

"For the greater security of valuable mail matter the Postmaster General may establish a uniform system of registration, and as a part of such system he may provide rules under which the senders or owners of any registered matter shall be indemnified for loss, rifling, or damage thereof in the mails, the indemnity to be paid out of the postal revenues, but in no case to exceed $1,000 for any one registered piece, or the actual value thereof when that is less than $1,000, and for which no other compensation or reimbursement to the loser has been made; Provided, That the Postmaster General may in his discretion provide for the payment of indemnity for the actual value of registered mail or insured mail treated as registered mail in excess of $1,000, but not in excess of $10,000, when such mail is not insured with any commercial insurance company or other insuring agency, and may fix the fees chargeable for the risks assumed ratably at the rates fixed up to $1,000; Provided further, That the Postmaster General in his discretion may cause to be underwritten or reinsured in whole or in part with any commercial insurance companies any liability or risk assumed by the Post Office Department in connection with the mailing of any particular registered article or articles.

"SEC. 2. The full value of all registered mail or insured mail treated as registered mail shall be declared by the mailer at the time of mailing unless otherwise prescribed by the Postmaster General, and any claim for indemnity in any amount involving such mail, when the full value knowingly and willfully was not stated at the time of mailing, shall be invalid. All claims for indemnity involving registered mail, or insured mail treated as registered mail, or other insured mail, or collect-on-delivery mail, which is also insured with commercial insurance companies or other insuring agencies, shall be adjusted by the Post Office Department on a pro rata basis as a coinsurer with the commercial insurance companies or other insuring agencies."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: On page 2, line 17, after the word "made," strike out the proviso ending with the figures "$1,000" in line 24, which reads as follows:

"Provided, That the Postmaster General may in his discretion provide for the payment of indemnity for the actual value of registered mail or insured mail treated as registered mail in excess of $1,000, but not in excess of $10,000, when such mail is not insured with any commercial insurance company or other insuring agency and may fix the fees chargeable for the risks assumed ratably at the rates fixed up to $1,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the striking out of this proviso will leave the operation of the Postal Service as is, other than that higher rates of indemnity will be charged.

This proviso, as you will notice, would authorize the Post Office Department to carry sums in excess of $10,000 in the event that the Postmaster General, through any commercial insurance agency, would insure those amounts.

I do not want by direction or circumvention to allow the Post Office Department to be held responsible for the carrying of amounts in excess of $1,000, certainly not to the extent of $10,000, for which no indemnity is required, certainly not to the extent of $10,000, and being repeated ad infinitum, which would probably run into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

I think it is a most serious innovation to have the Government, under the guise of increasing the revenues, go into the insurance business. That is what this provision means.

The argument is made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from New York that banks to-day use the service for the transportation of huge sums of money. Granting that they do use this convenience, nevertheless they must go to a private surety for indemnity. However, under this bill you are permitting the Postmaster General to carry amounts up to $10,000 without securing any indemnity.

I know just as sure as I am here that we are going to be confronted time after time with heavy losses if this insurance feature is adopted as a policy of the Postal Service.

It is acknowledged that this service is not self-sustaining. Why should we invade the province of private industry to that extent, and which will make it less sustaining under the guise that you are going to authorize the Government to charge a fee for the indemnification?

This is socialism. It is paternalism. We have seen the effects of this proposal. It was made 25 years ago, or thereabouts, by Mr. Albert S. Burleson, when he was a Member of this House. It was tainted in a slight degree—I will use that qualifying clause because he is not present, though I am glad to say he is still alive and enjoying good health—it was tainted to a slight degree with the socialistic proposal that because the United States Government was operating a Postal Service it ought to permit funds to be transported by the Postal Service, whether that service was suited to that purpose or not. It was not suited to it then, and while it may be suited in a degree to carry on such a service now, it can never qualify to carry on such service with the same protection as is given by a private agency.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Wisconsin has offered an amendment striking out the service which the Post Office Committee, after complete deliberation, believes to be worthy on several grounds.

It certainly can not be more socialistic to insure up to $10,000 than it is to insure up to $1,000. If any principle of that kind is involved, it applies to a service which has been in existence since 1864 and has been growing more and more valuable every year.

The second point is that we take all the chances. We have all the dangers now in handling these large sums of money that are being sent through the mail without any of the advantages whatever which come from the returns that may be received from it.

The gentleman from Wisconsin refers to the fact that we must turn the post-office machinery loose if we pass this bill. We must do that now. With an indemnity up to $1,000, when a package of registered mail is stolen, this brings into force every agency of the department. The inspection force must scour the country for years, if necessary, to run down the depredators who take money from the mails.

This will not add one additional cent of that kind of expense to the Government in raising the limit to $10,000. What it will do will be to give us a proper rate on the increase from $1,000 to $10,000.

The Post Office Department has figured that this one provision which the gentleman seeks to strike out will mean $5,000,000 in clear, additional revenue.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much loss will ultimately come to the Government of the United States?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is included in the calculation of the $5,000,000. The amounts paid out as indemnities on registered mail for 50 years have been considered as to the possible cost of the new registration. It is uncertain, of course, whether raising the limit from $1,000 to $10,000 will multiply the losses; but if on a regular basis there are no more losses up to $10,000 than there have been proportionately on $1,000, there will be a clear gain of $5,000,000.

Your committee feels this is well worth the consideration of the Congress with respect to a service that is now losing money. We should establish such rates and such new accommodations for the public as will bring in a total under this bill of $7,000,000, which will very largely reduce the deficit in the registered mail special service.

We believe this is justified. Hearings have been held on the bill. We have listened to representations from various interests and have finally brought out this bill for due consideration. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin will not be adopted because it would completely destroy this new accommodation that we desire to give the public.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The Postmaster General may make such rules and regulations in accordance with this act as he may consider necessary or advisable.

This act shall become effective April 1, 1932.

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the fact that the Post Office Department, through its inspectors, has done within the last few days a very fine job. We all think that the Northwestern Mounted police of Canada is a particularly fine body of men, because their boast is that they always get their man. I want to say that the Post Office Department, according to the papers yesterday, proved that they, too, are a body that we can be proud of. Their boast is that they always get the man that interrupts or breaks down the mail service, and yesterday they did get the man who apparently was responsible for the bomb outrages in the Easton post office in my district on December 30, last and I think this is worthy of note, when the Post Office Department itself is under some criticism as not being a safe custodian of the mails.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question in connection with the rates proposed here. I would like to ask if this is a case of the camel getting his nose under the tent in connection with first-class mail rates and whether there are going to be any increases in that feature of the service.

Mr. MEAD. No; on the other hand, this is an effort on the part of the committee to avert any increase in first-class rates.

Mr. GOSS. Then any such increases will be confined to special items of registered mail and so on?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; the committee has made a definite decision on that question.

Mr. GOSS. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to suggest to the chairman of the committee the advisability of postponing the effective date of this enactment to July 1, as we did in the other bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I shall accept such an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Line 17, page 6, strike out the word "April" and insert "July."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 6, line 17, strike out the word "April" and insert the word "July."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. BANKHEAD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GLOVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10244) fixing the fees and limits of indemnity for domestic registered mail, based upon actual value and length of haul, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TO CURE THE PRACTICE OF DEPOSITING MATTER IN LETTER BOXES WITHOUT THE PAYMENT OF POSTAGE

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9262) to amend section 321 of title 18 of the United States Code.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 321 of title 18 of the United States Code be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Whoever shall willfully or maliciously injure, tear down, or destroy any letter box or other receptacle intended or used for the receipt or delivery of mail on any mail route, or shall break open the same, or shall willfully or maliciously injure, deface, or destroy any mail deposited therein, or shall willfully take or steal such mail from or out of such letter box or other receptacle; or shall knowingly, willfully, or feloniously deposit any mailable matter such as statements of account, circulars, sale bills, or other like matter, on which no postage has been paid, in any letter box or other receptacle established, approved, or accepted by the Postmaster General for the receipt or delivery of mail matter on any mail route, with intent to avoid payment of lawful postage thereon; or shall willfully aid or assist in any of the aforementioned offenses, shall for every such offense be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than three years."

With the following committee amendments:

In line 3, page 1, strike out "section 321 of title 18 of the United States Code" and insert in lieu thereof "section 198 of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States,' approved March 4, 1909, as amended by the acts of May 18, 1916, and July 28, 1916 (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 321)."

Strike out "or other receptacle" wherever it appears in the bill; strike out "or" at the end of line 11, page 1, and "feloniously" at the beginning of line 1, page 2, and insert "or" between "knowingly" and "willfully" in line 11, page 1; strike out "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$300" in line 9, page 2, and strike out "or by imprisonment for not more than three years" in lines 9 and 10 on page 2.

Amend title so as to read:

"To amend section 198 of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States,' approved March 4, 1909, as amended by the acts of May 18, 1916, and July 28, 1916."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain just what is sought to be done by the proposed amendment?

Mr. MEAD. Let me read what the Postmaster General says. I am quoting a paragraph from a letter regarding this measure:

> The purpose of this bill is to curb the practice of depositing statements of account and circulars, sale bills, etc., in letter boxes or other receptacles established for the receipt or delivery of mail, without the payment of postage thereon, by making this a criminal offense. Much matter of this kind is, of course, now deposited in private mail boxes, thus depriving the Postal Service of considerable revenue which it would receive if the matter was sent through the mails.

Our committee decided to reduce the penalty in the original bill from $1,000 to $300 and to eliminate the provision for imprisonment altogether. So the extent of the penalty now is a fine of not more than $300. The practice of public-utility companies and others, who have withdrawn a very profitable business from the Postal Service, is to make deliveries by messenger service. We believe if they withdraw this business from the Post Office Department they should refrain from using the mail boxes. The withdrawal of this mail has reduced our revenues about $4,000,000 a year.

We have sufficient law now to prevent that practice on rural routes, and we aim to apply the law to city mail boxes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman states it was the desire to discontinue the practice of depositing mailable matter in other receptacles in the country and city. I believe the gentleman is in error, because the committee does not go to the extent of the Postmaster General's recommendation, in that he suggested that they provide not only for letter boxes but other receptacles. The committee has stricken out "other receptacles."

Mr. MEAD. We struck that language out because we felt we were going too far in enacting legislation which would prevent an individual from dropping a circular or a bill in a slot in the door or in some receptacle not used exclusively as a mail box.

We felt that if the bill covered a mail box erected for the purpose of receiving mail we were going as far as we could in this connection, and so the committee struck out the language "or other receptacle," and we also struck out the language "knowingly, willfully, or feloniously."

Mr. STAFFORD. And substituted "knowingly or willfully."

Mr. MEAD. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to get a clear concept of the gentleman's intendment of this legislation. It is the practice in the country local to Milwaukee and local to Detroit, and local, I should say, to most of our metropolitan centers, for the newspaper publishers to provide a separate receptacle for the delivery by their agent of their newspapers in these boxes. Certainly the gentleman does not intend to ban the delivery of those newspapers in boxes furnished by them?

Mr. MEAD. Not at all. The newspapers are setting up their own receptacles; they are not using the mail boxes along rural routes. We want the public-utility companies to take care of their bills without using the mail boxes in the cities.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing here that will prevent any private agency from distributing mailable matter direct to the home or in a private receptacle that was erected by the patron, provided that receptacle is not used for the receipt of mailable matter. Many of our rural delivery route boxes are provided by—in fact, all cases—and erected by the patron himself.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. But that box could not be used for the deposit of any other character of matter. If the patron wanted to have the deposit of other character of matter, he would have to erect a separate box, which would not be used for mailable purposes.

Mr. MEAD. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition on the amendment. I am wondering if the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], who is chairman of the committee, would be willing to permit an amendment so as to add the word "commercial" before the word "circular," so that it would apply only to commercial circulars. There are some circulars that it is to the interest of the patrons of the Post Office to receive, which are matters of interest in a local community. For instance, there are thousands of communities where notices out in the country to the effect that a church sociable is going to be held or that there is to be singing on Sunday afternoon are put in the mail boxes. This ought not to apply to things of that kind, and it ought to be limited to commercial circulars.

Mr. MEAD. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, permit me to say it is now contrary to law to deposit such circulars as the gentleman has in mind in letter boxes on a rural route.

Mr. BLANTON. That is exactly what I am complaining about, and I am hoping the gentleman from New York in his great experience and wisdom would see fit to stop it from being a violation of the law, because it is to the interest of all the owners of these boxes to receive these little community notices. Of course it is done in spite of the law, but it ought not to be a violation. They ought to have the right to put a little community notice in the box, and if the gentleman would limit this to commercial circulars he would carry out the purpose of the committee and the purpose of the Post Office Department, and still give these people the right to use their mail boxes for little notices that benefit the entire community.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman will see that the effort being made by the committee is in another direction altogether. We are not in this bill concerned with the law that applies to mail boxes on rural routes. We are trying to apply the law that now applies to rural mail boxes apply to city letter boxes.

Mr. BLANTON. What time is a better time than right now to rectify this little injustice to the rural people? Is there any better time than now? I take it that the gentleman has never lived in a rural community.

Mr. MEAD. That is where I live some of the time.

Mr. BLANTON. Then he realizes the problems that beset the rural people. Some of them get their mail only twice a week, people who live away off in the mountains, and it is unfair to say to them that when they have a notice of high importance to the community, it can not be placed in the boxes. Suppose they were getting up a dance for the young people in the community. That is the only way they have to get word about it. They run around the circuit and put the notices in the boxes. Every time they do it they violate the law, but they do it just the same. We ought to stop it from being a violation of the law.

Mr. MEAD. At such time when the committee takes up the matter of revising the law as it applies to rural mail boxes, I shall be glad to consider the gentleman's amendment, but we are considering now only the application of the law to city mail boxes, and that is the only idea conveyed in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman realize that such an amendment is a good one?

Mr. MEAD. Except that it would in my judgment conflict with the purpose of this bill which applies only to city mail boxes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does this restrict the entire legislation to city letter boxes?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; it does.

Mr. BLANTON. It has no application to rural boxes?

Mr. MEAD. None whatever.

Mr. SEGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. SEGER. I am in sympathy with the general purpose of the bill, but does the gentleman mean that this would apply to boxes erected inside the vestibule of apartment houses?

Mr. MEAD. Any mail box that is designated for receiving mail matter. We eliminated some of the language in the bill so that it would not apply to slots in doors and various other contrivances; we apply the law that exists in rural communities to city mail boxes, boxes set up by the patron for the receipt of mail matter only.

Mr. SEGER. On the porch or in an apartment house?

Mr. MEAD. Wherever the city letter carrier delivers mail to the patron, whether in the hallway or on the veranda, as long as it is a mail box.

Mr. SEGER. Is that not a broad interpretation? Suppose I was going to visit a friend and he was not home and I left a note in his letter box, would I be punishable under this law?

Mr. MEAD. Well, as the gentleman from Texas said, they now deposit circulars in the local letter boxes and they are not interfered with; but where some large corporation withdraws a volume of mail from the Post Office Department and sets up a service of its own, we restrict the use of the mail receptacles to mail matter handled by the Post Office Department.

Mr. SEGER. I can see where there would be considerable revenue taken from the Post Office Department, but I think the bill is so broad that it would take in the receptacles in every apartment house in a city.

Mr. MEAD. On line 5, page 2, of the bill the gentleman will find we struck out the language "or other receptacle," and narrowed it down to apply to mail boxes only.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield to my distinguished colleague.

Mr. BOYLAN. Does the gentleman not believe that the penalty is excessive? The idea of penalizing a person to the extent of $300, to my mind, would be entirely unjust because it is too severe. If that penalty were reduced to about $3 it would be more in keeping.

Mr. MEAD. The original penalty provided in the bill was that every such offense should be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than three years. The committee struck out that language and inserted in lieu thereof a fine of $300 and no imprisonment.

Mr. BOYLAN. That is true, but the original proposition would be atrocious. The idea of fining a man a thousand dollars or sending him to jail for three years, although at the present time many people would be better off in jail on account of the depression, seems absurd to me. The gentleman knows that the Federal jails are woefully overcrowded now, due to the enforcement of the prohibition act, and we can not build jails fast enough. Even with a penalty of $300, suppose a man is not able to pay the $300, then he must go to jail, must he not?

Mr. MEAD. No. He probably would be warned not to use the mail boxes hereafter. I have never heard of anyone going to jail for a trivial matter as the gentleman has in mind. We have reduced the fine to a minimum. I understand existing law with regard to rural mail boxes is much more severe, but the committee, moved by the same humanitarian spirit as that which moves the gentleman from New York, reduced it to what they believed a reasonable minimum.

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, just imagine where would a man get $300 in these days of depression? If he did not pay the $300, perhaps he would be committed to jail. The jails are now overcrowded.

Mr. MEAD. I agree with my colleague; they are crowded, but with the amendment which we have adopted no one can be sent to jail. I for one objected to such a provision. Nor will it be necessary to levy a fine of $300, for the bill states that not more than $300, which will permit of a fine from $1 up.

Mr. BOYLAN. Then I suggest that the penalty be reduced from $300 to $3 for each offense. Will the gentleman accept such an amendment?

Mr. MEAD. I am afraid I could not at this time, because we are aiming to curb a very bad practice, a practice that has withdrawn $4,000,000 from the revenue of the Post Office Department. I feel sure there will be no injury caused to any constituent of the gentleman from New York for depositing a card in a mail box, but it may prevent large companies from taking business away from the Post Office Department.

Mr. BOYLAN. But, knowing the gentleman as I do, and knowing his wonderful humanity and generosity of spirit, I feel that his zeal in securing additional revenue for the Government has carried him away from his first principles. Just imagine mulcting a man or a woman to the extent of $300 in these hard times for a simple misdemeanor of this kind.

Mr. MEAD. I doubt whether that would be applicable in this case, and I for one would resent it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the remaining committee amendments.

The Clerk reported the remaining committee amendments.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of adding to the statement made by the chairman of the committee and to reassure my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] that the law has had much heavier penalties than this bill carries for many years, and it has worked out in practice in this way: The department has a regulation that where this mail matter is put into a rural box covered by law, it is carried back to the post office and is there rated up, as if it were sent by mail, and the mailer notified. Without doubt these bills of the public utility companies, and so forth, will be taken back to the office by the carrier and rated up and the company notified and the postage will be paid on them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion by Mr. MEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to amend section 198 of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States,' approved March 4, 1909, as amended by the acts of May 18, 1916, and July 28, 1916."

LEAVES OF ABSENCE TO SUBSTITUTES IN THE POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4719) granting leaves of absence with pay to substitutes in the Postal Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4719) granting leaves of absence with pay to substitutes in the Postal Service, with Mr. GLOVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, when substitute postal employees have worked a total of 1,224 hours, they shall be entitled throughout their period of substitution in each fiscal year to leave with pay at the rate of one and one-quarter days for each 204 hours' service rendered and sick leave with pay at the rate of five days for each 1,224 hours' service, to be cumulative throughout period of substitution and continued, if not used, to the credit of the substitute after his appointment to the regular force.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of this bill I will say it was reported by our Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads at the last session. It passed the House without objection but failed of being reached on the Senate calendar.

It grants substitutes in the Postal Service sick leave and vacation-time allowance provided they are employed six months or more in any one year.

For the last two or three years, as a result of the falling volume of business in the Post Office Department, substitutes are not as a rule receiving six months' employment, and therefore the bill would not apply to many cases. We therefore estimate that the cost would be negligible compared to normal years, but it would give the substitutes the same rights now enjoyed by the regulars in the service; they would be considered regular civil-service employees.

When the Second Assistant Postmaster General came before our committee he was asked if the substitutes in the Postal Service were not in reality regular employees, and in reply to that question he said, "If they are not regular employees, you tell me what they are."

This bill aims to give to the substitutes in the service some consideration for the many times they report for work. They are always ready to take the place of a regular in order to keep the mail moving. They render a valuable service and many, many times they are forced to return to their homes without putting in any time, only to report again the next day.

This bill will affect those substitutes who work at least six months out of every year, and will give them proportionate consideration in connection with sick leave and vacation allowance.

As I said before, the bill was reported out in the last Congress; it passed the House but failed to be reached on the calendar of the Senate. I hope it will be approved at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice from the letter of the Postmaster General, a very brief letter, that he estimates, if this bill is passed, there will be an added burden on the Treasury of $1,894,723 a year. I assume that is predicated upon the operation of this law under normal conditions.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is correct. The gentleman realizes that under present conditions, except in rare cases, only regulars in the department are employed, and our committee believes the estimate of the Postmaster General is excessive and applies, as the gentleman has indicated, only in normal years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any estimate as to what expense would be entailed if it were put into operation at once under existing conditions?

Mr. MEAD. Our committee estimated that it might reach a maximum of $600,000, but that is a mere conjecture, because, as I said before, most of these substitutes are doing nothing but reporting night and morning and receive very little employment in most cases.

Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOGG].

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a short petition from the postal employees of the Indianapolis, Ind., post office.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the House to some facts in connection with the substitute employment question in the Postal Service.

Many substitutes are now regularly employed at lower pay rates than the regulars receive and pending legislation is designed to require their appointment. My hope is it will be liberally construed to bring the greatest possible relief to the substitutes.

Owing to the variations in mail fluctuations and work requirements, it is necessary to have a flexible working force—one that can be expanded or contracted to meet actual work needs. For this reason the Post Office Department employs substitutes, taking them from the civil-service eligible lists when needed. The existing ratio is one substitute clerk for every seven regular clerks and one substitute carrier for every four regular city letter carriers. The substitutes are paid at the rate of 65 cents per hour. Their period of substitution is not definitely fixed, which I believe is a mistaken policy.

Substitutes should be assured of a minimum number of hours of work weekly. I have fixed this minimum at 30 hours in a bill I have introduced—H. R. 5110. At 65 cents an hour this would mean only a weekly minimum of $19.50. Obviously this amount, even as a minimum, is far too low to attract the type of worker needed in our Postal Service.

My hope is the minimum in my bill will be exceeded at least to the extent of 15 hours—or 45 hours' work for substitutes each week. Further, there should be a definite limit placed on the length of substitute service, not to exceed two years.

The Post Office Department can within a reasonable time establish a satisfactory substitute force that could be kept at a numerical level to permit of appointments within two years, and in the meantime the substitutes could be guaranteed 30 hours' work weekly. This may necessitate a larger auxiliary or temporary force during rush periods, but such an arrangement would be far more satisfactory than the present one. In most communities there is an ample supply of labor that could be utilized for short periods on brief notice when required in the post offices. Such workers, as now, would have no civil-service status, and consequently the Government would be under no moral obligation to provide employment for them. This situation does not apply with the substitutes, all of whom have taken successfully an examination with the expectation of securing postal employment, and many of whom have relinquished other jobs as a consequence. This temporary or auxiliary help would not depend upon the Postal Service as a means of livelihood. These workers, where they are now utilized, are largely recruited from among the college students or workers who have other employment that does not take up all of their time. In short, a larger temporary and auxiliary force would permit the department to keep its substitute force within reasonable bounds.

In addition to my bill to guarantee substitutes a minimum amount of work weekly, I favor heartily, as a necessary supplementary measure, the Sweeney bill (H. R. 6183) limiting substitute service to one year. I favor also the Kelly leave bill (H. R. 4719), which would give substitutes the same leave privileges as regulars. These three measures would go far toward improving economic conditions.

PETITION FROM INDIANAPOLIS

I include in my statement at this point a petition signed by 56 substitutes of the Indianapolis post office urging action on the Kelly and the Sweeney bills. This petition is a fair sample of countless petitions which I have received from many parts of our Nation in regard to my own bill:

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS,
Indianapolis, Ind., February 20, 1932.

A PETITION

DEAR SIR: In addressing you on a subject that is nearest our hearts we wish this petition to be regarded by you as an expression of our confidence in the sincere efforts you are putting forth to secure the legislative ends so vital to us as substitute clerks.

We wish hereby to establish the fact that we shall be known to be earnestly in accord with the provisions for sick and annual leave contained within the Kelly bill, H. R. 4719. We believe this will be the nearest approach obtainable at this time in the direction of remedying the injustice of the present system.

The Sweeney bill, H. R. 6183, appeals to us as an ideal measure in rightly interpreting the functions of a substitute and definitely controlling the term of service as such.

We hope to see a speedy end to the practice by which appointments to regular clerkships are deferred for an unreasonable period of time; for instance, some of our group are rounding out their eighth year as substitute clerks.

We heartily indorse these two bills and commend your efforts in their behalf.

Fraternally yours,

Dewey R. Morgan, Elmer V. Klaiber, Varjo A. Anderson, Ralph B. Thompson, Arthur C. Langer, Jess Brown, Harry Anderson, Paul Becker, Lloyd L. Locke, M. R. Burnworth, P. H. Lawvere, Carl F. Zuchert, F. Attest:

HARRY ESTLE,
President Local No. 130.
HERMAN L. KETTLER,
Chairman Legislative Committee.

Mr. Thomas Flaherty, the exceedingly able legislative representative of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, has given very valuable testimony to the Post Office Committee on this subject. He has shown that many employees in the smaller second-class offices have been dropped through relegation of this office to temporary third class; that thousands of substitutes who have worked as such for years are now earning little or nothing; that they have been dropped off the pay roll, if not off the civil-service list. That by restoring 8 and 9 hour working schedules for regulars and removing the speed-up system under which one clerk must do the work; that by making Saturday a half holiday, as the Kendall law was intended, will help the situation. Mr. Flaherty has explained to the committee that the problem of substitutes is largely one of sympathetic and intelligent administration.

Because of his comprehensive knowledge of the subject, his integrity and fairmindedness, his testimony to the committee merits fullest consideration.

MANY PETITIONS AND PROTESTS

The many petitions and protests from post-office substitutes in Los Angeles, Brooklyn, Pittsburgh, and other places requesting legislative relief are to the same effect, namely, that the falling off in mailings and the department's economy program, whereby the hours of regular employees in many instances have been increased by a change in working schedules, have greatly reduced work opportunities for the substitutes.

It is incumbent upon the Congress to now give some legislative relief to these substitutes by enacting these measures.

RELEGATION OF SECOND-CLASS POST OFFICES

I call the attention of the House to a bill that I have introduced (H. R. 8684), which is intended to prevent the relegation of second-class offices to third class due to a falling off in receipts. This condition is a by-product of the present depression, and I believe the Congress should lower the existing fiscal requirement in the interests of the postmasters and employees affected. The law now fixes $8,000 as the requirement to maintain a second-class designation. I would lower this to $6,500 for the present and the next fiscal year. This would give the postmasters and employees in the smaller offices an opportunity to retain their present status during the depression period.

As near as can be estimated, 125 offices will be relegated on July 1 next, unless this legislation is enacted. This would mean that approximately 400 employees and postmasters would either be without employment or would have their earnings greatly reduced. Inasmuch as the Congress has very properly seen fit to come to the aid of other groups, I believe we should not overlook these faithful employees in the smaller communities where, if thrown out of employment, there would be little opportunity to find it elsewhere at present.

I bespeak the support of H. R. 8684 by the House membership as a constructive measure to lessen unemployment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GLOVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4719) granting leaves of absence with pay to substitutes in the Postal Service and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PAYMENT OF MONEY ORDERS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 278) to compensate the Post Office Department for the extra work caused by the payment of money orders at offices other than those on which the orders are drawn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 278) to compensate the Post Office Department for the extra work caused by the payment of money orders at offices other than those on which the orders are drawn, with Mr. GLOVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this bill permits the Post Office Department to make a charge equal to the original charge when a money order is paid at a post office other than the one on which the order is drawn. This merely compensates the department for the extra work involved.

It has been recommended by the Postmaster General in his last annual report. It was considered by the Post Office Committee and unanimously reported.

As I said in the beginning, it is an attempt to provide compensation for service not heretofore compensated for and given by the Post Office Department to those who use this particular class of service.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the author of the bill.

Mr. FOSS. I simply want to call attention to the fact that this bill passed the House last year.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's remark occasions my rising to propound the inquiry whether this proposal was not somewhat contested last year when it was brought up for consideration?

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. If the chairman of the committee will yield, I may say it was only objected to by two, or perhaps three, Members and at that time the fee was explicitly fixed in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. And now it is proposed to leave the amount of the fee to the determination of the department?

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. No; according to the bill, the fee will be the same at the other end.

Mr. MEAD. In other words, a charge equal to the money-order fee now charged is made when a patron requests the cashing of a money order at an office other than the office upon which the order was drawn.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield me a few minutes on the bill?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Wisconsin five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the bills that was under consideration last year, and was reported late last evening so as to be on the calendar for to-day.

When this bill was up for consideration last year I questioned whether it was proper to charge the same fee for payment at a different office from that of issue because conditions might mean that that fee would be much larger than the service would warrant. Take, for instance, you charge 40 cents for the payment of a postal money order of $100, and the expense occasioned by having it paid at some other office would be just the same whether the amount is $2.50 or whether it is $100, and yet under this bill you would require the payment of a larger amount, although the expense would be the same, because there is no greater clerical service required.

I ask the author of the bill what is his idea about charging the same fee as the initial fee when the cost is no different regardless of the amount of the money order.

Mr. FOSS. It is simply because the fee is already established.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will agree, I believe, with my position that there is no further cost whether the money order is for $2.50 or $100.

Mr. FOSS. As I recall, last year we did fix a definite fee for that purpose. As I recall, in the last Congress the Post Office Department wished it left to them to determine the amount of the fee for this service, and the committee did not believe that the department should have such discretion.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Does not the gentleman from Wisconsin believe that if a person purchases a money order at Washington payable at New York and then puts that in his pocket and takes it to San Francisco the Government ought not have a fee for balancing the accounts when it makes payment at San Francisco?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. I take the position that you should compensate the department for the extra service, but you should leave it to the department to determine what the charge for the extra service is to be.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. We brought in such a bill last year, and it was objected to because the objectors did not want to leave the fixing of fees to the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. No.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; I objected.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. The able gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] objected to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the policy of the committee last year was not to submit this to the decision of the department, but to recommend a definite fee.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; that is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Foss] confirms my statement.

Mr. FOSS. And we did recommend a definite fee on all such bills.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here is a money order, issued in New York, for $100, payable in Philadelphia. The person happens to cash it in Baltimore. Why should he be charged a different fee for payment in Baltimore? If the money order is for $2.50 he only pays 7 cents, whereas if it is for $100 he would pay 40 cents.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Simply because the sendee is asking the Government to do something that it did not contract to do, and a larger fee is just when larger amounts are involved.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am in favor of the primal idea of this bill in requiring an extra charge for the payment of a money order at a different office from that at which the money order was originally intended to be paid.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. If the gentleman will yield further I will answer the gentleman's inquiry. There must be a fixed and arbitrary charge of some kind. I submit to the gentleman that there is no method of arriving at a more reasonable charge than to fix the same fee which was originally charged the sender of the money order. If the sender pays a certain fixed fee for sending $100 from one city to another city surely the sendee should pay a like fee for cashing the money order in a third city.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would much rather leave it to the department to establish one uniform fee, based upon certain conditions as to distance and the like.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate the payment of postal money orders," approved February 6, 1913 (38 Stat. 280; U. S. C., title 39, sec. 727), is amended to read as follows:

"That under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster General shall prescribe postal money orders may be issued payable at any money-order post office, and on and after the date upon which such rules and regulations become effective all money orders shall be legally payable at any money-order post office, although drawn on a specified office; and as compensation for the extra labor involved in paying a money order at an office other than that on which the order is drawn the Postmaster General is authorized to exact a fee of the same amount as that charged for the issue of the order; and that all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

With the following committee amendment.

Page 1, line 4, strike out "1913" and insert "1914" instead.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GLOVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 278) to compensate the Post Office Department for the extra work caused by the payment of money orders at offices other than those on which orders are drawn, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The commitee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LIMITATION OF THE PURCHASES OF THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 5612) to limit the purchases of the Post Office Department, so far as possible, to articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

TO DEFER REDUCTIONS IN CLASS OF POST OFFICE AT SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6305) to amend the act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustments, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill involving a $600,000 charge on the Treasury, and it is too important to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York think this bill will take any extended time?

Mr. MEAD. I do not believe so. The gentleman from Wisconsin, I think, is mistaken in his estimate of the total cost of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I direct the gentleman's attention to the report, in which it is said that its enactment would involve an approximate additional expense of $691,422 for the fiscal year 1932, and it is believed that greater additional expense for the fiscal year 1933.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call attention to the colloquy yesterday afternoon, in which it was suggested that in the latter part of the day the Speaker would be authorized to recognize gentlemen to take up the rule on the moratorium-irrigation proposition. If this bill is to take up two hours, it would then be 6 o'clock. If there is real opposition, it could not be passed in an hour.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the Assistant Postmaster General says that the enactment of this bill would involve an approximate additional expense of $691,422 for the fiscal year 1932, and it is believed greater additional expense for the fiscal year 1933, and he is opposed to the bill.

Mr. BRUNNER. Mr. Speaker, at the hearing this statement was made:

Mr. TROTTER. This would reduce $234,000. However, there would be some offset, because when they went back to the third class they would pay, then, from the appropriation for third-class postmasters $184,178. So these officers would cost only $60,622.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I have just read from the letter addressed to the committee by the First Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. MEAD. The bill takes effect the 1st of July next; if the depression continues, it might reach the figures suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. But, in view of the fact that we are supposed to have reached the bottom and are about to rise, it will not have any effect, except, if we increase the revenues, it will increase salaries.

It is merely to protect them from a further reduced classification. It protects the second-class offices from going into the third class, thereby losing their civil-service status.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It does not mean the taking of an additional dollar out of the Treasury more than was provided for the fiscal year which we are covering in this bill.

Mr. BYRNS. That may be true; but if we do not take that dollar and pay it out in an increased salary to the postmaster, it will help to take care of the deficit to the extent of whatever is saved in that respect, and even if it is only $60,000, I do not think this is a good time to increase salaries.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman's own committee brought in the appropriation which will be used, if this bill goes through, upon the basis that the revenues would be on a stable basis. Instead of that, they have dropped almost $50,000,000 for the year.

Mr. BYRNS. What has the gentleman to say in regard to the position of the Post Office Department as to this bill? I think we ought to trust some things to the Post Office Department. They have written a letter saying that they are opposed to this bill. I do not believe it ought to pass without due consideration.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. We have passed this afternoon measures which will increase the revenues of the Post Office Department more than $15,000,000, and this bill does not take an extra dollar out of the Treasury above the amount provided by the regular appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS. Then let us not now begin to chip off what we have saved in the way of revenues. Let us make it a real saving, and not turn around and give it away in salaries.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There is no increase whatever. The gentleman seems to think that we are increasing salaries. All we are doing is maintaining salaries at the level which the gentleman's committee appropriated for the fiscal year 1932–33.

Mr. BYRNS. But under the law these salaries are fixed according to receipts, and when we undertake to change the law and provide that a lesser amount of receipts shall not affect the salaries, then we are increasing the salaries contemplated by Congress when it passed the original legislation, and I assume that that is one of the major reasons which influenced the Post Office Department to recommend this bill be not adopted.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There is another point involved in this bill, and that is that these postal revenues have reached such a stage now that certain second-class offices, which have civil-service employees of many years' standing, have been reduced automatically to third class. Immediately all the rights of those civil-service employees—their retirement and their standard pay—falls and they become employees of the postmaster and no longer have a civil-service status. These employees are protected in this bill, and they well deserve it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the opposition and the possibility of considering the unanimous-consent request made last night, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be temporarily laid aside.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered. There was no objection.

THREATENING COMMUNICATIONS IN THE MAILS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 96) to punish the sending through the mails of certain threatening communications, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever, with intent to extort or without justification to demand from any person money or other thing of value, shall deposit or cause to be deposited in any post office, or station thereof, or street or other letter box of the United States, or authorized depository for mail matter, to be sent or delivered by the post-office establishment of the United States, any written or printed letter or other communication with or without a name or designating mark subscribed thereto, addressed to any other person and containing any threat (1) to injure the person, property, or reputation of the addressee or of another or the reputation of a deceased person, or (2) to kidnap any person, or (3) to accuse the addressee or any other person of a crime punishable by law, or (4) to expose any infirmities or failings of any person or to charge any person with infirmities or failings shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than five years: Provided, That the accused may be indicted and tried either in the district in which the unlawful matter is deposited as aforesaid or in the district to which it is carried by mail for delivery, according to the directions thereon, or in the district to which it is directed to be delivered by mail by the person to whom it is addressed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 9, strike out "five" and insert "20."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EQUIPMENT ALLOWANCE TO THIRD-CLASS POSTMASTERS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4602) granting equipment allowance to third-class postmasters, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the bill H. R. 4602. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the bills reported late yesterday. I object.

The SPEAKER. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. GLOVER, will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4602, with Mr. GLOVER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after July 1, 1932, postmasters at third-class offices in which post-office fixtures and equipment are not provided by the Post Office Department shall be paid, as allowances for personally owned or rented post-office fixtures and equipment, an amount equal to 50 per cent of the box rents collected at such offices, the allowances to be paid quarterly, under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe: Provided, That when post-office fixtures and equipment are furnished by the Post Office Department at post offices of the third class, the provisions of this act shall become inoperative.

With the following committee amendment:

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, this bill permits third-class postmasters to retain 50 per cent of the box rents collected from their patrons. All this equipment is furnished by the postmaster at no expense to the Government. The local postmaster pays taxes and insurance on the equipment and is not reimbursed by the department. We believe this legislation is meritorious and should be approved. The Committee on Appropriations cut out an item which would enable the Postmaster General to purchase a certain amount of this equipment during the next fiscal year. If that practice continues and these postmasters are forced to furnish their own equipment they should share in the revenues resulting in the use of the equipment. We provide in this bill that 50 per cent of the revenue from the box rents shall be turned over to the Government and 50 per cent retained by the postmasters. It is his own property. When he is appointed postmaster he must buy this equipment and is not reimbursed by the department. When he leaves the service, in many cases he finds it impossible to sell his equipment, even at a sacrifice. It occurs to me it is an injustice to expect third-class postmasters to provide their own equipment when we provide the equipment for other postmasters. I feel that the department should standardize this equipment, own this equipment, and this legislation is intended to bring that condition about.

We have amended the bill so that it will not take effect during the next year and will only go into effect in July, 1933. This is a discrimination that should be corrected, and the committee aims to make that correction by this bill. I hope it will be favorably approved by the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any member of the committee opposed to the bill? [After a pause.] If not, the gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for one hour.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] such time as he desires.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss the merits of this bill so much as I am the question of passing bills of this kind at this particular time. I am going to read to you the report of the Postmaster General on this particular bill. Then if you feel that the opinion of the Postmaster General, who is the head of the department, is not to be considered and that we should pass the bill notwithstanding his opposition, of course, that is the privilege of the House.

This is the letter of the Postmaster General, set forth in the report:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1932.

Hon. JAMES M. MEAD,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. MEAD: Replying to your letter of the 14th instant, requesting an expression of my views on bill H. R. 4602, providing for an equipment allowance to postmasters at third-class post offices in an amount equal to 50 per cent of the box rents at such offices, I have to advise that in view of the additional expense involved, approximately $1,000,000 per annum, it is recommended that adverse action on the bill be taken.

Very truly yours,

WALTER F. BROWN.

Now, the Postmaster General ought to know more about this bill and its effect than any other person. He tells you that when you put it into the law it is going to cost the taxpayers of the country $1,000,000 per annum.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] says he will provide that it shall not go into effect until the fiscal year 1933, or next July 1; but I call attention to the fact that we are now not only in a state of intense depression and a big deficit but on to-morrow we will take up a tax bill which taxes everything that every man and woman in this country eats and wears, with a very few exceptions. In face of that are we going to add another million dollars to the deficit that will occur on June 30, 1933? That is what we are going to do if we pass this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations considered this matter a year ago. Third-class postmasters who have been seeking increases in salary were allowed $300,000 for the purchase of equipment in their offices. There are about 9,000 of them, as you can realize by the amount involved in this bill. They will have provided for 200 third-class postmasters this coming year in that $300,000. It will require a period of about 20 years before we ever get through providing equipment, and before half that time elapses Congress would be appropriating more money for those who first got the equipment, and it would cost $15,000,000 to complete the program. Your Appropriations Committee recommended, and this House without question ratified, their recommendation and cut that appropriation out of the appropriation bill for next year. Now, you are asked to pass a bill which will provide not for $300,000 but for a million dollars next year. Gentlemen, when are we going to stop?

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. DYER. I understood from the press that the so-called policy committee of the House, which I take it to be the leaders, including, of course, the gentleman from Tennessee, has advised chairmen of the various committees not to bring in legislation, generally speaking, that would put a tax upon the Treasury?

Mr. BYRNS. No; not as far as I know. I have not attended every meeting of the policy committee, but I do not think the matter has been broached in the policy committee. I do recall a letter which the papers stated was written by the Speaker and the majority leader to the chairmen of the various committees requesting them not to report legislation involving authorizations unless there were vital reasons for doing so.

Mr. DYER. We of the Judiciary Committee took that as law and have been following it strictly so far; but if other committees are not going to do it, of course, then our committee should not be expected to do so.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman think that the people back home who are protesting against increased taxes will be pleased by this legislation?

Mr. BYRNS. I certainly do not; and I think, if we continue to pass this kind of legislation, somebody will answer for it in November when we go before the people.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does not every third-class postmaster mentioned here enter into competition for his appointment, knowing that he has to pay for these things himself?

Mr. BYRNS. Of course he does; and I daresay you gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, who are in political sympathy with the present administration, and therefore who have devolved upon you, probably, the recommendation of applicants to fill those offices, are overwhelmed every time a vacancy occurs by the number of applicants who want it. All of them, as the gentleman from Colorado says, understand what he will have to supply and what their compensation will be when they enter office.

Now, why should we undertake to increase the third-class postmasters in this way? It is said that they buy the equipment and therefore they should have half of the receipts.

Suppose they do? They get a salary based on their receipts, and under the law they are required to furnish their equipment. As the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON] says, they know what they are required to do when they are appointed.

I can not see any possible reason for the passage of this bill increasing, as the Postmaster General says, the expenses of the Government for 1933 and 1934 in the sum of $1,000,000 every year.

Now, gentlemen, we have got to call a halt. I am not any more interested in economy than you are.

I heard that great old statesman, Uncle Joe Cannon, say once on the floor of this House that the only way to reduce was to reduce. There is nothing truer in the world. We can not reduce when we come along and pass bills increasing salaries and increasing allowances. For goodness' sake, let us wait until this depression is over and then if you wish give these third-class postmasters this increase, if you think they are entitled to it. This is no time to increase salaries here, when salaries are being cut in various places. I have never up to this time asked for a reduction. I did not ask it last week. All I was asking was that we do not enter upon the policy of increasing salaries. Let me tell you something. A naval officer said last week—and I am not going to call his name—in talking about reductions, that there was no reason why Congress should not, under the present stress of circumstances, temporarily reduce all salaries, and he cited this instance. He said:

> I have a brother who took a four years' academic course; then he took a course in theology; now he is the pastor of an Episcopal Church at $1,800 a year, and his church has cut his salary 10 per cent.

Mr. SWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. SWEENEY. In line with the sentiment expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee when he said let us wait until this depression is over, may I ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether he will agree that I submit an amendment to make this act effective July 1, 1934, and reduce the per cent from 50 to 25?

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, that is up to the committee. But why put it into effect now? I do not know what the conditions are going to be then. I do not know whether the tax bill is going to balance the Budget or not, and I do not know whether the tax bill is going to pass or not, or anything of that sort. I do not know what the conditions will be then. However, Congress will be in session a year from now just as it is in session at this time. Why, therefore, undertake to provide that in 1934 this increase shall be made? Let that be decided when Congress comes to it.

Gentlemen, we ought to kill this bill and tell the country we have stopped increasing salaries for the time being; that we are not going to have any more increases in salaries under the present circumstances. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, it had not been my intention to have anything to say with respect to this bill; in fact, I had some assurance from those in charge of the legislation that was going to be proposed to-day that, instead of creating additional charges upon the Post Office Department, the bills contemplated were for the purpose of increasing some legitimate revenues in order to meet the already tremendous deficit in the operation of that department.

I want to submit this for the candid consideration of the members of this committee on both sides of the aisle, because this is not a party question. The deficit that exists in the Treasury of the United States is an actual deficit. I think it is the part of sound statesmanship, looking at it from the standpoint of the immediate future and in the long-range view, that we undertake just as soon as possible to devise some means by which we may balance our National Budget and pay as we go.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. In view of the opposition to this bill, and with the gentleman's permission, I would like to withdraw it and call up another bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am very happy the gentleman has determined to do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will not use any of the time allotted to me if the gentleman will move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; and Mr. BANKHEAD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GLOVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4602) granting equipment allowance to third-class postmasters and had come to no resolution thereon.

TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL BY MOTOR VEHICLE IN LIEU OF BY TRAIN

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9636) to authorize the Postmaster General to permit railroad and electric-car companies to provide mail transportation by motor vehicle in lieu of service by train.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill was defeated in the last Congress. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9636, with Mr. GLOVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of this bill, permit me to say that the Post Office Department has conducted a survey and is able to furnish fairly accurate figures as to just what effect this bill will have on the appropriations for the department. All this information was not available at the time the bill was discussed here in the last Congress.

This bill grants the department authority to carry the mail on bus and truck lines established by railroads where passenger-train service has been discontinued. If this authorization is not given, it will be necessary for the department to advertise for star-route contract service at an added expense of $125,000 per annum.

Here is a paragraph from the Postmaster General's report which explains the statement I have just made:

> It may be stated that at the present time railroad and electric-car companies are providing satisfactory service by bus or truck over the highways in lieu of service by train at many points throughout the country, and that the total compensation for this service at regular railroad rates is approximately $250,000 per annum. We have had a recent survey made by our field officers and it is indicated that if the present manner of handling were discontinued and service placed under star-route contracts the additional cost would be approximately $125,000 per annum.

In many cases railroad and electric-car companies have been forced to discontinue passenger-train service and have substituted service by busses and trucks to those communities that formerly had railroad passenger service.

The Comptroller General has ruled that the Postmaster General is without authority to continue the practice of reimbursing the railroads for carrying the mail under these circumstances, but has permitted the Postmaster General to do so until the beginning of the next fiscal year, after which time the Comptroller General will no doubt require legislative authority. To give the Postmaster General such authority this bill has been reported by our Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Chairman, we had this bill up last year, and I may say to the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office that we had a long debate on it. The bill was defeated on the floor of the House. I do not want to go into details at this time because there is an important measure coming up under a rule and it would not be fair; but I submit to the chairman that a bill of this kind ought to be thoroughly debated.

Gentlemen, this is what it means. It means that the railroads can obtain contracts to carry mail and then sublet them, or carry the mail by bus, and there will be no real competitive bidding between bus lines or between bus lines and railroads, and it will cost the Government more money instead of saving any money. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is on the floor and will remember when this bill was up last session. The bill was thoroughly debated at that time and was defeated.

Instead of saving any money this is going to cost more money, because the Government will pay railroad rates for bus transportation, which is cheaper.

Where you have a situation between two points where mail is carred by busses, if we have competitive bidding we will get the lower rate. Bus transportation permits competitive bidding. If a railroad as such obtains the original contract and then carries the mail by busses or sublets the carrying of the mail to some bus line, the Government does not get the benefit of the decreased cost of transportation.

At this late hour we can not go into this matter very thoroughly, but I want to say to the gentleman from New York that it puts many of us in a most embarrassing position. We do not want to use time that has been promised to a great many Members who have a bill in which they are very much interested and about which they are very much concerned, and I wish the gentleman could withdraw this bill. The bill is highly controversial.

Mr. MEAD. I will say to the gentleman from New York we discussed this measure last year, but we did not have an exhaustive report which we now have from the department.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We had exactly the same bill.

Mr. MEAD. But the department has since made a survey, and they now say it will save the department $125,000 a year.

I hold no brief for railroads, but let me say to the gentleman there are many places in sections of the country where service is given only by railroads or by bus and truck lines which have been put on by the railroads to render such service.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. And I believe if we retain the present rates by preventing the Post Office Department from paying the railroads a rate in excess of the rate they are now receiving to carry the mail we are moving in the right direction.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let me say to the gentleman, Why are the busses displacing the railroads? For the simple reason that they are more economical in operation. Here you are providing under the guise of economy permission to the railroads to come in and receive railroad rates for mail transported by the busses, when the busses can operate at a cheaper rate.

Mr. MEAD. This is only where the railroads have established bus service in lieu of passenger-train service.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let them get the bus rate then. The transportation of mail is based on capitalization and the cost of operation, and if you compare that with the bus business the bus cost of operation and bus capitalization is so much less, and that is why the railroads can not compete with the busses. But if the Government is to use busses for mail, we should pay bus rates. This bill is not for Government economy but for greater profits to railroads.

Mr. MEAD. The representatives of the Government say that they will save money by this provision. We must take the word of the Postmaster General.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the bill will not be withdrawn. This is a most important bill to the West and the agricultural sections. The gentleman from New York may not appreciate the importance of it, but I represent an agricultural section, and I know that a great many trains have been taken off and the people of the smaller towns are deprived of adequate mail facilities. What they are asking for is the carrying of mail by bus when the towns can not be reached by train.

There is nothing in this bill to be alarmed about. The bill does not increase the rates. It provides for no higher rates than that received by the railroads for carrying the mail.

I did not know that this bill was coming up for consideration to-day, but let me say that the railroads have taken off a great many trains in my district. I dare say that in many towns the people are deprived of adequate mail facilities. This bill only gives them the same mail by bus that they have heretofore had by train, and at the same rate and no higher. It is a very important bill to the agricultural sections of the country.

A great many trains over the small lines throughout the country have been discontinued. That is true of a number of counties in my State. The Post Office Department reports that the mail could be carried by bus where the trains had been taken off.

I hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] will not consent to the bill being withdrawn. I know, as well as you do, that if this bill is withdrawn to-day it is dead. Why? Because you can not get a rule for it; it will be regarded as too unimportant to secure a rule for its consideration, and if it is put on the Consent Calendar there will be objections to its consideration. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the call is with the Post Office Committee. This is a very important bill to the agricultural sections and the smaller towns throughout the country visited by busses where trains have been taken off, and where they have no other mail facilities, and where mail can be delivered at no increased cost to the Government.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is nothing to prevent busses carrying the mail by direct contract.

Mr. HASTINGS. The bill does not increase the rates; the busses do not get any higher rates for the same service. I can not see any possible objection to the bill, and I sincerely hope the chairman [Mr. MEAD] will insist on its consideration and keep it before the House until we get a vote on it.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Could not the Postmaster General have such mails carried by star route, and give the contract to the lowest bidder?

Mr. HASTINGS. That requires advertising, takes time, and causes delays. There are no star routes connecting many places. In any event, here is a bill that has been reported by the committee and has a favorable report from the Postmaster General. It is in the interest of better mail facilities and at no higher rates, and it ought to receive the favorable consideration of this House. I have always favored adequate mail facilities.

Mr. FOSS. And, in addition, this would only be in effect for the balance of the life of the contract.

Mr. HASTINGS. No longer.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman show where that is provided in the bill?

Mr. FOSS. A railroad, we will say, has a contract for carrying the mail. Let us suppose that it has already carried the mail for a length of time. They take off the trains, and this bill extends the service by bus.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The bill should have a proviso that it would apply only to existing contracts. Then it would not be so bad. The trouble is that you are paying more for this service than you should be paying.

Mr. FOSS. But no more than we are paying for the train service.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; but you are entitled to a cheaper rate if it is transported by bus.

Mr. HASTINGS. But in the meantime you deny the rural sections adequate mail facilities if you do not pass this bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to permit railroad and electric car companies to provide mail transportation by motor vehicle over highways in lieu of service by train, the compensation for such service to be at a rate not in excess of the rate that would be allowed for similar service by railroad or electric car, payment therefor to be made from the appropriate appropriation for railroad transportation and mail messenger service or electric and cable car service.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. BANKHEAD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GLOVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9636) to authorize the Postmaster General to permit railroad and electric-car companies to provide mail transportation by motor vehicle in lieu of service by train.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

TEMPORARY RELIEF OF WATER USERS ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a unanimous-consent request, but before doing so I shall make a brief explanation. The Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation reported unanimously a bill to the House that is now on the calendar providing for a temporary moratorium in the payment of some of the construction charges. They asked the Committee on Rules for a special rule to consider this bill, which has been granted.

If the unanimous consent which I propose to ask is not granted, it is my purpose this afternoon immediately to ask for the consideration of the rule. This legislation, in my opinion, is clearly emergency legislation, from the facts presented to the Committee on Rules. The emergency consists of the fact that in some sections of the irrigated portions of the country the time has now arrived when the farmers must have water turned on their land before they can begin their crop production. The bill does not involve any expenditure of money out of the Treasury. It is merely asking an extension of payment for this year on 50 per cent of the amount due now and last year. I trust, in order to save time, that Members will agree to a unanimous-consent agreement to take the bill up and consider it in the House at this time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Are the proponents of the bill willing to put in some interest even for one year?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I think it is proper for me to state this, inasmuch as that inquiry has been made by a member of the Committee on Rules. Negotiations were had in an unofficial way between some members of the Committee on Rules and those responsible for this legislation to see whether the legislative committee reporting the bill would agree to an amendment providing for one year's interest on these deferred charges. I think possibly a tentative arrangement was made by which the sponsors of the bill would make that agreement. However, my friend will recall that when we took final action on the Committee on Rules on this proposition, no agreement was imposed with reference to that matter. Of course, it is an amendment that any member of the Committee of the Whole may offer to the bill. I can not answer for the sponsors of the bill with reference to what they have in mind.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will yield for a minute, I have been heartily in favor of the bill because of the emergency involved.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But as I have maintained all of the time in the Committee on Rules, in good faith some interest should be included in the bill. I am not in sympathy with the proposition that interest should be included for the 25 or 30 years which are involved in this postponement of payment, but I think for this year 1932, during which this payment is not to be collected, at least one year's interest at, say, 3 per cent, should be included.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That has been the consistent attitude of the gentleman from New York. I am not in a position to dispute the equity of it. I trust that matter may be given consideration by the chairman of the committee reporting the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman from Georgia, Judge Cox, who has some very definite opinions on this matter, aware that this bill is to be brought up at this time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I think so.

Mr. SWING. It is in the RECORD.

Mr. MICHENER. I am not talking anything about the RECORD. This matter has been before the Committee on Rules. It was not secret. It was open. It was the judgment of some members of the Rules Committee that interest should be included. This was not in executive session. Then it was found that the gentlemen who were for the bill would rather not have the bill than pay interest, or it was so stated there.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Interest is carried on all delinquent payments under the general law, but this is a bill to give special consideration for one year, 1931, and 50 per cent of the charges for 1932, and we feel that it would be unfair to charge interest on those payments when under the general law the payments that are delinquent have to bear interest.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, has the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] read the bill; has he information other than the statements that were made before the Committee on Rules?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say that I have given no intensive study to the details of this bill. I did read it when we had it under consideration.

Mr. MICHENER. Like the gentleman from Alabama, I had not read the bill, but long bills of this type are brought before the committee——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman permit me to say that I am inclined to sympathize entirely with the attitude of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], and I have so expressed myself to the sponsors of this bill.

Mr. MICHENER. My question was if the gentleman understood what the bill provided. As a member of the Rules Committee, I did not. I listened to the splendid statements made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] and others, but I did not know there was a provision in section 3 which provides for an extension of time for one year for the beginning of construction of drainage on certain projects, and so forth. There are things put in here that do not have a thing to do with emergency relief. Here is a project that has always been a bad one; it has not been a profitable one; it does not pay, and finally, there is a bill enacted here permitting new construction. The terms of the legislation can not be complied with this year. They can not construct, and this bill is brought in giving them permission to have another year in which to begin construction.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman knows that I am not in any way responsible for the provisions of this bill. We did vote to give them a rule for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This is the exact bill that was considered by the Committee on Rules, and that section was in the bill when it was considered.

Mr. MICHENER. When the gentleman appears before the Committee on Rules he should state concisely what his bill contains; he should state all those things and not take an appealing part of the bill only. The Committee on Rules can not read and study all of the details of these bills. We have to rely on what the gentlemen tell us.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to extend this argument indefinitely. I demand the regular order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to make a suggestion? The only proposition before the House at the present time is whether or not you will give this bill a privileged status. If there is material opposition to this bill, in view of the fact that we are to have a session to-night, the Chair does not think it would be quite fair to the membership to take it up and run it into a late hour. The only proposition is, Will the House give this bill a privileged status? Then the question is when it will be considered in the House. The Chair understands that the gentlemen who are interested are anxious for early action. Just when the House could consider it in case there is material opposition, the Chair can not state, but if it is given a privileged status, then it would be in the discretion of the Chair when it would be taken up.

Is there objection to giving the bill S. 3706 a privileged status?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, I am not going to object, I want to make this statement. I do think that it is hardly the proper thing to bring a bill of this kind up when everybody who is for the bill is here, and just a scattering 75 Members in the House.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That always happens. That is nothing new on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the bill being granted a privileged status, but it is upon the understanding that the bill will not be brought up this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Upon the assumption that the bill will not be brought up this afternoon, is there objection to giving it a privileged status?

There was no objection.

THE LATE JOHN PHILIP SOUSA

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that the Senate has messaged over a resolution with regard to the death of John Philip Sousa, and I offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 171

Resolved, That the House has heard with deep regret of the death of John Philip Sousa, late a lieutenant commander in the Navy, who was universally recognized as the world's greatest composer of march music.

Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to join a similar committee on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the status now of the bill S. 3706, for which a special rule was granted by the Committee on Rules, and the chairman of that committee is ready to call up the rule?

The SPEAKER. The bill has a privileged status and that is all the rule gave it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman from Alabama is ready to call up the rule.

The SPEAKER. When the question was put whether or not this bill should be given a privileged status, which was equal to adopting the rule, the Chair thought this was the quicker method. If the gentlemen interested in the bill want to withdraw that, the Chair has no objection. The Chair was trying to facilitate the passage of the bill, but the Chair does not think the bill could be passed this afternoon.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, if this bill has a privileged status, I ask for the present consideration of the measure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not recognize the gentleman for that purpose. The Chair does not believe at this late hour that it would be fair to the membership to take up a bill of this nature, with the amount of opposition there is to it and with the debate that would be necessary. There would be two hours of debate and that would extend the consideration of the bill to 7 o'clock this evening, with a meeting at 8 o'clock for the consideration of the Private Calendar. The Chair for this reason must decline to recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered under an amendment of the rule providing for one-half hour of debate.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen, we must first dispose of the pending resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to make a statement. I am very sorry that this resolution was brought up at this time. I appreciate the services of Mr. Sousa, and in a general way I dislike to object to the resolution; but I think this would be establishing a very bad precedent; and if we start with this resolution, we would have to do the same thing many times in the future. It will be a precedent that will come back to plague us, and for that reason I object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If this bill has a privileged status and the Speaker does not wish to recognize the chairman of the committee to call it up this afternoon, would it be possible to call the bill up to-morrow during the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair say to the gentleman from Idaho that the Chair has tried to facilitate the passage of this legislation with all the earnestness possible. The Chair wanted to give the measure a privileged status, and hoped that it could be considered this afternoon, but there has developed some opposition to the bill. Now, in order that the opposition may have a fair opportunity to present their views to the House, it would hardly be just to those gentlemen who are coming back at 8 o'clock to-night to consider bills on the Private Calendar to consider the measure at this time. As to when it can be taken up in the future is a question which the future must decide. Speaking for himself and as the one who can recognize the gentleman to call it up, the Chair hopes it can be taken up at a very early date, but the Chair does not think the advocates of the bill ought to insist on taking it up this afternoon.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will it be subject to being called up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It could be called up to-morrow if the gentleman could get recognition from the Chair, which the Chair does not now propose to promise.

LIMITATION OF INJUNCTIONS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, one day last week my colleague the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] mentioned to me that he was very deeply interested in the anti-injunction bill (H. R. 5315). At the same time the gentleman stated it was possible that he might be away when the bill was considered, and requested that I pair him in favor of the bill, and also stated that if he were present he would support the measure. In justice to my colleague the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK], I am making this statement.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 317

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 317).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 317, introduced by me, making it lawful for the President to proclaim that a conflict exists in violation of, or threatened violation of, the Kellogg pact, and then to prohibit loans or extension of credit to the nation which is engaged in such violation, has two important implications: First, its general effect; second, its application to the present Far Eastern crisis.

The general effect of such a resolution would be greatly to strengthen the peace machinery of the world for the following reason: No President given the authority of this resolution will exercise that authority except in cooperation with the other nations. Although the resolution does not explicitly so provide, it would in actual practice be a multilateral undertaking. It would enable our State Department to confer with the other nations in a crisis. If it should seem advisable to the group to take the action provided for in this resolution, then the nations could vote to do so, knowing that the representative of the United States would have the backing of the administration, which in turn would have the power to put into effect the policy voted.

As it is now, there is no one who can speak with any authority at such a conference as to what the United States will do. Any action determined on by the nations can not be followed by the United States without congressional action. This situation is a very serious handicap to international action, and it would be at least partly removed by the passage of this resolution.

The second point is the relation of the resolution to the present crisis. If this resolution should be passed promptly, it would give Japan great cause to pause in her apparent policy of overrunning China in flagrant violation of the Kellogg pact.

It would work something like this: All the nations are loath to consider an economic boycott on Japan. Moreover, if they did consider it, there is no telling what the United States will do. The other nations could not take such action without us, and we ourselves can not say what we would do.

But the proposed resolution would make easy a practical, simple form of international action not so severe as an economic boycott, with no uncertainty of application or possible encounter that would lead to war, no unfavorable reaction on the nations taking the action, and yet very powerful in its psychological and actual effect on Japan. If the assembly of the league now meeting should vote to withhold loans or credit to Japan, with the United States concurring, such action would be a positive, definite step making it clear to the Japanese people that practically the whole world condemns their policy. That would be very important psychologically. Moreover, there are many, many things that Japan needs to carry on such campaigns as she seems to be contemplating in China and Manchuria.

These can not be secured in any quantity except by credit. Her credit would be cut off. Her exports to China have already dropped to about 20 per cent of what they were a year ago. Her exports of silk to us are dropping; she could pay for the things she needs in gold, and her gold is fast disappearing.

Of course, by internal loans and by local manufacture of munitions, Japan could keep up some sort of military campaign for some time even if her foreign credit were shut off. But such course would be a struggle against overwhelming odds with the whole world lined up against her, not in a military way, not even in any physical blockade or prohibiting of shipments of goods, but simply by the stopping of credit. The effect would be very great in making it evident to the Japanese people that they are being led astray by their military leaders.

SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS AND THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, there recently came to my desk a circular containing a resolution adopted by the school superintendents of our country at their convention held several days ago in Washington, on law enforcement and the eighteenth amendment.

This circular, a copy of which was received by all the Members of this House, contained large headlines, which read as follows: "Educators back eighteenth amendment."

A few days ago one of the militant defenders, if not the most militant defender of the eighteenth amendment in this House, the distinguished gentleman form Texas [Mr. BLANTON] took occasion to call to our attention the said resolution as a protest by the school superintendents of our country against the movement in this House to ask a vote on the proposed amendment to the eighteenth amendment.

This superintendents' resolution, that is alleged to approve the eighteenth amendment and has brought joy to the hearts of the friends of the eighteenth amendment reads, as follows:

> The department of superintendence urges teachers to continue to impart respect for the Constitution of the United States and for all of its various amendments. We urge the continued vigorous and impartial enforcement of the entire Constitution of the United States as the supreme law of the land, and we reaffirm our belief in the principles of the eighteenth amendment and in the habits of life and conduct which it is intended to inculcate.

I must confess my inability to find in the said resolution any condemnation or censure of the efforts of this House to bring before this body for debate a proposal to amend the eighteenth amendment so as to give the States of this Union the right to regulate or prohibit the liquor traffic within their own borders.

The declaration by the school superintendents in favor of the vigorous and impartial enforcement of the entire Constitution of the United States as the supreme law of the land certainly contains no commendation of the eighteenth amendment.

The American Bar Association, that has come out in favor of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, is also strongly in favor of the continued vigorous and impartial enforcement of the entire Constitution of the United States as the supreme law of the land.

Seven members of the Wickersham Commission in their individual reports condemned the eighteenth amendment as unworkable and affirmed their belief that the amendment should immediately be repealed or amended so as to permit States that desired traffic in intoxicating liquor to have it under congressional supervision, and yet these same opponents of national prohibition strongly affirmed their belief in favor of the strict and vigorous enforcement, not only of the Constitution of the United States but of all its amendments, including the eighteenth amendment until it was amended or repealed.

The affirming of the school superintendents' belief in the principles of the eighteenth amendment and the habits of life and conduct which it is intended to inculcate, likewise is no statement on the part of these educators that they are at the present time in favor of national prohibition or opposed to the efforts being made in this House to submit to the people of the country an amendment for its repeal or amendment.

Millions of American citizens who believe in the principles of the eighteenth amendment and approve the habits of life and conduct which it was intended to inculcate and who were at one time in favor of the eighteenth amendment have now joined the army of American citizens who are demanding its amendment or repeal.

This change of attitude on the part of such a large body of our citizens is not due to the fact that they do not agree with the affirmations of these educators in this particular resolution, but because they are now convinced that the eighteenth amendment has dismally failed to develop the habits of life and conduct which it was intended to inculcate; that the amendment has not been enforced and can not be enforced in our country.

This organization of school superintendents has been meeting annually for a great many years. At its meeting in Detroit in February, 1931, was the first time it passed a resolution specifically pertaining to the eighteenth amendment.

The Wickersham report that gave to national prohibition a blow from which it has not recovered and never will recover, was given to the public on January 20, 1931. The convention of superintendents assembled in that year on February 20, 1931, and passed the following resolution relative to the eighteenth amendment:

> We reaffirm our belief in the eighteenth amendment as the most effective means yet devised to curtail the distribution and use of alcohol.

This is the way the resolution reads in the report of the proceedings of this meeting of the superintendents. It is quite manifest that the printer or somebody made a mistake and that the resolution was intended to read:

> We affirm our belief in the eighteenth amendment as the most effective means yet devised to curtail the consumption and use of intoxicating liquor.

It is altogether probable that these superintendents at that time had learned nothing more about the Wickersham report than what they gathered from the misleading newspaper headlines as to what the report contained.

It is also probable that at that convention the friends of prohibition were frantically appealing to these educators to do and say something about national prohibition that would tend to offset the findings of the Wickersham Commission that national prohibition had proven a failure.

One year later, February, 1932, these superintendents came together again in their annual convention. During this year the eighteenth amendment was being enforced not by the Treasury Department, but by the Department of Justice, a change that it was claimed would revolutionize the situation in this country as to the workings of the eighteenth amendment.

Now, what happened? Would these superintendents reaffirm their belief in the eighteenth amendment as they did a year before, although they said but little at that time in favor of the eighteenth amendment? No; apparently the new enforcement régime had not bettered the situation as far as the superintendents viewed the results, and possibly many of the superintendents had read and studied the Wickersham report in the meantime and had learned what the report had really done to national prohibition.

Anyway, these superintendents could not be brought to repeat even the little that they had said in favor of prohibition in 1931 and dropped the prohibition question by affirming their belief in the principles of the eighteenth amendment and in the habits of life and conduct which it is intended to inculcate. They studiously avoided commending the eighteenth amendment on its record even feebly as they did in 1931. They had nothing to say for or against the wisdom of resubmitting the eighteenth amendment to the people of this country again through a new amendment to the Constitution.

They evidently were sorry and regretted very much what they had been led to say in praise of the amendment in 1931 and would not go one step farther than to deal with ancient history as far as the eighteenth amendment was concerned, and that was to reaffirm their belief and approve of what the amendment was intended to do but unfortunately has not done for our country.

Other resolutions adopted by our school superintendents during the past few years are interesting as throwing some light on the actual workings of national prohibition in our country. In 1923, three years after the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, this organization of educators urged teachers to inculcate obedience to established law.

In 1924 this organization says:

> We recognize that our civilization is in danger of being undermined by the failure of our people to observe the laws of our country and the communities in which they live.

In 1927 this same organization urges teachers to teach respect for law and order.

Not until the eighteenth amendment was written into the Constitution of the United States did these educators feel concerned about disobedience to law and feel compelled to urge upon the teachers of this country the necessity of teaching respect for law. Such action on the part of our school superintendents was rendered necessary by the growing disrespect for law in our country that began to develop about one year after the commencement of our national prohibition era.

Of course, the great question before the people to-day is not as to the principles of the eighteenth amendment or to the pious reforms it was intended to accomplish in this country but rather how has it worked out; in other words, what are the fruits of national prohibition?

When the members of this House vote on next Monday to discharge the Judiciary Committee from a further consideration of an amendment to repeal the eighteenth amendment, they will not be voting on theory and promises, but they will be voting as they view the cold facts indicating the complete breakdown of national prohibition.

Of course, this resolution on the eighteenth amendment recently adopted by our school superintendents in Washington was sent to the Members of this House by the prohibition advocates for propaganda purposes.

Its large headlines were intended to deceive the casual reader and to intimidate some of the Members of this House who have yet to reach a decision as to how they will vote when the proposal to amend the eighteenth amendment comes before this body for consideration. It will fail of its purpose, because the misrepresentation and deception will be detected.

The friends of national prohibition may continue their propaganda; they may continue to misrepresent in headlines in the public press the contents of reports and resolutions concerning the eighteenth amendment, but their efforts will be in vain.

American public opinion as regards our liquor problem is on the march toward the goal of a restoration of this problem to the various States for solution. The foolish attempt to regulate the social lives of our peoples by law under one standard has proven to be a dismal failure.

RECESS

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now stand in recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BANKHEAD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into, the House is in session until 10.30 p. m. for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, beginning at the double star.

STATEMENT ON ANTI-INJUNCTION BILL

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for half a minute out of order to correct an item in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the time is to be devoted exclusively to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman had better take that up in the morning.

Mr. BLANTON. If it does not affect the Journal, the gentleman has the right to correct it at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio only desires to make a brief statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, this has reference to the roll call on the LaGuardia bill. I had a speaking engagement yesterday evening when the vote was taken on the anti-injunction bill, and it was practically impossible for me to be present. However, it was apparent in the House that nearly everyone was in favor of the bill and there was no possibility of its defeat. I found to-day that I was paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK], but it was later announced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] that Mr. LAMNECK was in favor of the bill, and on the record it looks as if I were opposed to the bill. I wish to say that if I had been present I should have voted for the bill, and that if there had been the slightest chance of the defeat of the bill I would have been present regardless of any engagement.

C. M. WILLIAMSON ET AL.

The Clerk read the first bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4391, for the relief of C. M. Williamson, Mrs. C. E. Liljenquist, administratrix, Lottie Redman, and H. N. Smith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation from the author of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this bill has twice passed the Senate, has been twice favorably reported by the House committee, and the further fact that one of the claimants is sitting in the gallery, where he has been sitting through four consecutive sessions of Congress waiting for a hearing, I ask unanimous consent that I may make a brief statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This bill is for the relief of four settlers on the Fort Hall irrigation project who entered into a contract, along with other people on this project, with the Government to place water on their land.

When the project was under construction and the laterals were being laid out, it was found that these people lived on a small rise in the land, which made it impossible to bring the water by gravity to the land.

Consequently, while waiting for the Government to fulfill its contract, they purchased an electric pump and pumped the water on the land for nine years, and when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on reconsideration concluded that the contract required that water be placed on the land, water was placed on the land without additional expense to the settlers.

During the time that they were having to pump the water the settlers paid for the annual operation and maintenance charges required of all water users and, in addition, incurred expense of buying a pump, and paying monthly for the electric power to pump the water.

They come now to Congress, because there is no other tribunal to hear their case, and they appeal to Congress to reimburse them for the amount of money they expended in bringing water to the land which the contract required the Government to do.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

What is the gentleman going to say to the House about this adverse report by the Secretary of the Interior, which says that the facts in this case do not place the Government under any obligation to pay these landowners the sums expended by them in constructing and operating pumping machinery for their own private benefit? The Secretary recommends that the bill do not receive favorable consideration. That comes from the Secretary of the Interior, and the gentleman from Idaho, who is a strict party man—and I admire him for that—must have seen in the paper this morning the castigation that the President has given Congress for not taking steps to reorganize matters and stop extravagance and expenditures where they ought to be stopped.

This bill involves over $8,000. If this is a just debt, it ought to be paid, but the Secretary of the Interior who has had charge of the whole matter, who made the contract with these people, who knows more about it than anybody else, who has his men on the ground, says it is not just, says there was no obligation on the part of the Government to refund these people for furnishing a pump for their own private benefit, and he recommends that the Congress do not pass it. What are we going to do in a case like that?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. But the reason we come to Congress for relief is because the Secretary of the Interior takes that position. We contend that the Congress is superior to the Secretary of the Interior in a matter of this kind.

Mr. BLANTON. There is just as much responsibility resting on the shoulders of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the other members of the Republican administration to stop the waste and to balance the Budget as there is on anybody else.

Mr. STAFFORD. The reservation of objection has been made. Mr. Speaker, I have gone over this most carefully and for the reasons set forth in the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs dated June 8, 1929, I feel constrained to object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Has the gentleman read the contract which is printed in the report between the Government and these individuals, wherein the Government agreed to deliver water to these lands?

Mr. STAFFORD. I read the copy of the contract as set forth on pages 2 and 3. I object.

CAPT. W. B. FINNEY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1296) for the relief of Capt. W. B. Finney; and there being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Capt. W. B. Finney, of 920 Grand Avenue, Kansas City, Mo., the sum of $479.14, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse him for money paid out by him in line of his duties as captain Company A, Seventieth Regiment United States Infantry, Camp Funston, Kans.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

HEIRS OF THOMAS G. WRIGHT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1996) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas G. Wright.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a Civil War bill, and as chairman of the Committee on War Claims I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims for further consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish it understood that there is a reservation of objection to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the House on one occasion. It has been before the House, reported favorably from the committee, on two occasions. In the last Congress it was rejected. Having been placed now in a status for passage, I do not feel that I ought to permit the request to recommit to be granted. Is the gentleman going to object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLGOOD. This is a Civil War bill, and it inadvertently came out on the calendar from the old Congress. I want to put it on all fours with Civil War matters. I should have to object.

Mr. BLAND. This party has been waiting a long time for the settlement of his claim.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. BLAND. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin going to object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

MAJ. LESTER L. LAMPERT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2572) for the relief of Maj. Lester L. Lampert.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve the objection?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. REILLY. This bill was first introduced by the late Florian Lampert for the relief of Major Lampert. It was passed by this House in the Seventieth Congress and has been passed by the committee twice. It is recommended by the War Department. There is no doubt at all about the liability of the Government for the damages which this officer suffered by the destruction of his own personal property in a cyclone in Texas while he was engaged in saving Government property.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. My investigation of this case shows that this officer did save property for the Government and did splendid service. The claim is for less than $500. I do not know whether my friend from Mississippi was closely associated with the late Florian Lampert or not. I was. He was one of the hard-working men of Congress. While I differed with him many times on policies while on the District Committee, yet I must say that there was not a more sincere, earnest, hard-working man in Congress than Mr. Lampert.

Mr. COLLINS. For the benefit of both of the gentlemen who have spoken for this bill, I will state that the War Department appropriation bill carries items of appropriation that could be applied to the payment of any claim for damages, provided the damages accrued while the man was actually engaged in saving Government property himself. This case must fall without that rule; otherwise it would have been paid prior to this time.

I have made it a rule to object to all bills of this particular type. If an officer, either in the Army or the Navy, wants protection against fire or cyclone, he can protect himself by taking out insurance, just like the gentleman can, or just as I would have to do. I do not see any reason for singling out Army and Navy officers and protecting them against loss by fire or by cyclone or against damages when they can protect themselves by the exercise of ordinary business judgment by taking out insurance as other citizens are required to do.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that if a bill is objected to it remains on the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

IDA E. GODFREY

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3033, for the relief of Ida E. Godfrey and others.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill has been before the House of Representatives for a long time. The report of Secretary Weeks back in 1923 was not very favorable to the merits of the claim that this cranberry bog was set on fire by a Government locomotive. I will be glad to have the gentleman reporting the bill make further explanation as to the merits.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I will say to the gentleman that I reported this bill, and that by supplemental evidence before the committee after the report of Secretary of War Weeks was made I think it was very clearly proven that the locomotive operated by the Government did cause the fire and was responsible for the destruction of this bog.

Mr. STAFFORD. One of the evidentiary facts that inclined me to the opinion that it was not caused by a spark from the Government locomotive was that there was a space of more than 300 yards between the burned portion and the railroad tracks which were not affected at all.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is in the first report made by the Army engineer, by those who were responsible for the fire, but it was proven to the satisfaction of the committee that there was not that space and that the fire did not jump that space, but that it ran right straight across.

Mr. STAFFORD. Upon the statement of the gentleman that later testimony showed that the facts which were before the Secretary of War when he wrote his report in 1923 were not correct, I will withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we want it understood, as it has always been understood, that where a bill has been reduced by a committee amendment the amendment is always to be accepted, and that there will be no attempt to override the committee amendment and still pass the bill in its original form.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understand that has been the custom.

Mr. BLANTON. With that understanding, I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ida E. Godfrey, of Cookstown, N. J., the sum of $750, to the estate of Annie L. Davis, of Wrightstown, N. J., the sum of $500, to Thomas N. Emley, of Cookstown, N. J., the sum of $750, damages by fire on June 11, 1921, to certain cranberry bogs adjacent to the rifle range at Camp Dix, N. J.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: At the end of the bill insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

W. J. SHIRLEY

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3265, for the relief of W. J. Shirley.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COLLINS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, from a reading of the committee's report, this claim should be $60.77 instead of $100. If the gentleman who introduced it is willing to amend it to comply with the amount recommended by a board of officers who made a thorough examination and recommended $60.77, I shall not object. Otherwise, I will.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to W. J. Shirley the sum of $100 in reimbursement for value of his personal property destroyed by fire in the military service of the United States at Brest, France, on the 21st day of July, 1919, and for which loss he was in no wise responsible.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Line 6, strike out "$100" and insert in lieu thereof "$60.77."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OSCAR C. OLSON

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3566, for the relief of Oscar C. Olson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the Treasury of the United States, from any money not otherwise appropriated, to Oscar C. Olson, the sum of $52.50, being compensation for loss on May 23, 1918, of his personal effects, baggage, and clothing while en route to France on the British ship Moldarra, under military orders, when said ship was torpedoed and sunk in the English Channel.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GUY GOODIN

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3568, for the relief of Guy Goodin.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Guy Goodin, late of the construction division, Quartermaster Corps, the sum of $484.50 as per diem allowance from September 26, 1919, to June 9, 1920, while on duty at McAllen, Tex., in the service of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLARA E. WIGHT

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3580, for the relief of Clara E. Wight.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the policy of the committee in recommending a lump-sum appropriation to the mother of this former employee of the navy yard?

Mr. SINCLAIR. The mother would have been dependent upon this young man had he not died. The policy of the War Claims Committee is to allow a certain amount in cases of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. At the time of the death of the injured employee the widow was living, and for some time she drew the compensation as authorized by the compensation act.

In this case you are not voting any regular monthly allowance as authorized by the compensation law, but you are voting a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. ALLGOOD. This is insurance. Instead of the full amount of insurance, $5,000, this is the balance due on the insurance.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there anything in the report which supports that position?

Mr. ALLGOOD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy does it appear that this is insurance?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have reserved the right to object in order to get information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HARRIET M. MACDONALD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3703, granting compensation to Harriet M. MacDonald.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the author of the bill whether he will consent to an amendment in line 7 striking out the words "and insurance benefits"?

Mr. BOLTON. I will be glad to accept such an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 200 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, the Administrator for Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to pay to Harriet M. MacDonald, formerly a nurse, such compensation and insurance benefits, effective October 31, 1929, as she would have been entitled had she been an American citizen at the time of her embarkation with the American Expeditionary Forces; and that she be entitled to hospitalization and such other benefits provided in the veterans' acts for members of the Nurse Corps.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. On page 1, in line 7, strike out the words "and insurance benefits."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EATON of Colorado: Page 1, line 7, strike out the words "and insurance benefits."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CLARA E. WIGHT

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 152, H. R. 3580, for the relief of Clara E. Wight, a bill to which I just objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to return to the bill referred to by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the author of the bill informs me—which confirms the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama—that these are insurance funds; that the widow obtained a certain amount, and that the $3,360 is the balance due on the $5,000 policy. It is shown, though not very clearly, in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy that the claimant did not put in her application until the statute of limitations had run.

Mr. ALLGOOD. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Clara E. Wight the sum of $3,360 in full compensation for the death of her son, Ralph L. Wight, who was a civilian employee of the Navy, and was overcome by gas and burned while working in submarine S-44 at the navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H., on January 10, 1919, as a result of which he died January 15, 1919.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HERMAN H. BRADFORD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4039, for the relief of Herman H. Bradford.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the committee makes its report on this bill recommending that $451.55 be paid this claimant, but the bill has never been amended by the committee reducing the amount from $1,348.10 to that amount. In other words, the bill as proposed here does not carry out the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I will further state to our friend that the usual attorney's fees clause should be added at the end of the bill, and I shall offer such an amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON of Delaware. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Herman H. Bradford, late No. 1747092, private, Company G, Three hundred and twelfth Infantry, United States Army, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,348.10, said sum to be in full and final settlement for his services in said Army from March 31, 1918, to July 2, 1921, and from March 23, 1928, to June 25, 1928, and for loss of clothing and money taken from him at Fort Du Pont, Del., and not returned, about March 23, 1928.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: On page 1, line 8, strike out "$1,348.10" and insert "$451.55."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: In line 8, strike out the figures "$1,348.10," and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$451.55."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which was suggested by the committee. In line 9, strike out the words "to July 2, 1921."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: In line 9, after the figures "1918," strike out "to July 2, 1921."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment. In line 10, strike out up to the comma following "June 25, 1928," and insert in lieu thereof "to February 7, 1919."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: In line 10, after the figures "1928," strike out "to June 25, 1928" and insert in lieu thereof "to February 7, 1919," so that as amended it will read, "said sum to be in full and final settlement for his services in said army from March 31, 1918, to February 7, 1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the usual attorney's fees amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: In line 12, after the figures "1928," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

META DE RENE M'LOSKEY

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4199, for the relief of Meta De Rene McLoskey.

Mr. SCHAFER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I reserve an objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, among the thousands of cases that have engaged the humanitarian activities of the American Legion I am sure I am quite right in saying that none is closer to the heart of the Legion than this particular case. This is the case of a boy who disappeared from the face of the earth in 1918, and there is every reason to believe he died at that time. This is a bill to give his mother the benefit of his insurance which was in force at the time of his disappearance and which was paid up until several months after his disappearance.

Capt. Watson B. Miller, whom we all know, representing the American Legion, and who, I am sure, has our entire respect, is so much interested in this case that he gave me a statement, with the privilege of reading it to the House, and I should like to do that. Captain Miller says:

The documentary evidence in the case, consisting to some extent of letters from the boy to his mother immediately after entering the service, nowhere gives a picture of a man who would desert and step out of his responsibilities and away from his relatives. I have seen several hand-written letters from the veteran expressive of loyalty and love, as well as patriotism. I can't set up the contention that I believe this boy was killed in France, although there is in the picture a possibility that he went over with the identification tags of some other soldier and, for all I know, he may be buried there under another name.

It is an extremely baffling case. The mother and father are aged and I am truly of the opinion that justice would be served by the approval of a statute granting the Government insurance to the beneficiary. I have in my possession the great amount of minutiæ and correspondence concerning the effort to locate this boy or to ascertain his fate. I can't prove that he was killed or died while his policy was current as to premium payments, but after an experience of 10 years in contact with hundreds of thousands of cases which pass over our desks here, I can't believe that he deliberately deserted the service. I am deeply convinced that there are some strong considerations of equity involved in the situation.

In this connection, may I please say that, having headed up the effort for the disabled on the part of the American Legion very nearly since the beginning, I have never seen fit to attempt to advocate more than half a dozen special measures for relief of veterans or veterans' dependents. Of course, there are many hundreds of claims as to which we can not secure settlement administratively, and I might ask for legislative consideration for many of them, but it has not been my policy to do so.

This case has enlisted my deep interest and sympathy. I truly think that no violence would be done by permitting the bill to pass. It is unnecessary for me to tell you that I have no relationship or even close contact with the mother of this soldier. In point of fact, I have never seen her.

So Captain Miller, who goes into these cases with the most extreme care, and whose services to humanity merit our highest tribute advocates the passage of this bill and enumerates it as among six, and only six, in his long and useful career that he has brought to the attention of Congress.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. The records show that this man entered the military service on March 29, 1918, and disappeared while assigned to a station in this country on May 7, 1918.

Mr. LUDLOW. That is right.

Mr. SCHAFER. He was in the service about 40 days and the gentleman and Capt. Watson Miller ask the Congress to vote out of the insurance fund in which all of the veterans carrying insurance are interested $10,000, without one scintilla of evidence indicating that this man is not a deserter. Would the gentleman be willing to pass general legislation paying $10,000 war-risk insurance in the case of every veteran carried on the records of the War, Navy, and Marine Corps as deserters because they had disappeared and seven years have elapsed since their disappearance?

Mr. LUDLOW. I will say to the gentleman that if his insurance was in force at that time, as the record shows it was, the time he was in the service is not the controlling factor. Furthermore, there is not a scintilla of evidence in the entire record to show that this soldier was a deserter. There is every reason to believe he died in May, 1918.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, this is the most indefensible bill I have ever seen on this Private Calendar. The last argument of the gentleman could with equal force be applied to every veteran or member of one of the regular establishments who disappeared and is now carried on the records as a deserter.

JOLIET NATIONAL BANK, COMMERCIAL TRUST & SAVINGS BANK, AND H. WILLIAM, JOHN J., EDWARD F., AND ELLEN C. SHARPE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4355, for the relief of Joliet National Bank, Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, and H. William, John J., Edward F., and Ellen C. Sharpe, of Joliet, Ill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to the report made by the Shipping Board.

The report states that the claim of the Joliet National Bank, and so forth, has been rejected repeatedly; in fact, both the War Department and the Shipping Board granted rehearings and gave them every opportunity to submit facts and arguments; and it goes on to show that there is no merit in this claim, Mr. Speaker; this bill seeks to take out of the Treasury $86,163.21, and I object.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will the gentleman from Texas reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; for the gentleman to speak. But I shall object, as this $86,163 should not be taken from the Treasury.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I will say to the gentleman this bill has been given very careful hearings, and the evidence shows conclusively that this old man, Sharpe, went to the two banks and borrowed money at the instance of the War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to my friend that the War Department gave a careful hearing and it gave a careful rehearing, and turned it down once and then turned it down twice. The Shipping Board has given a careful hearing and a careful rehearing.

Mr. SINCLAIR. If the gentleman will permit, the only time they turned it down once was when it was improperly before them.

Mr. BLANTON. It first turned it down and then granted them a rehearing and then turned it down again.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I had not heard about that.

Mr. BLANTON. And the War Department turned it down and gave a rehearing and turned it down again.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The evidence in the matter discloses that a representative of the War Department went with this man to the two banks and helped him to borrow $25,000 from one bank and $15,000 from another bank in order to enlarge his plant and take on contracts to manufacture forgings at the instance of the department.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I want to say that in spite of the finding of the War Department this is a just claim and one that ought to be paid, because the agents of the Government, if the gentleman will take the time to examine the records in the case, blackjacked this bank and these others into the making of these loans to this concern which they had threatened to take over unless they enlarged their plant.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to my friend that I regret it very much, but I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. COX. There have been a number of hearings held and they have arrived at the conclusion embodied in the report, after becoming fully advised of the action taken by the War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. I am a personal friend of the author of this bill, but I must object.

Mr. SINCLAIR. As a matter of fact, I may say to the gentleman from Texas, the bill passed both Houses, but failed of enactment on account of the jam at the end of the session.

Mr. BLANTON. I will admit that I am the objection goat.

Mr. COX. The gentleman was picked out last year.

Mr. BLANTON. I regret to object, but we should not let this bill pass.

Mr. COX. The author of the bill is ill and can not be here to-night. In view of that fact, will not the gentleman ask that the bill go over?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I must object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE CONCRETE STEEL CO.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4407, for the relief of the Concrete Steel Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Let me say to the gentleman that this seems to me to be a perfectly proper claim. It has been before Congress for some time. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE], a good attorney, has given it careful consideration. These people had a contract to furnish steel to the Caldwell-Marshall Co. That company went into bankruptcy. The material was furnished them to use in the construction of barges for the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. In reading the report I was influenced by the fact that they entered into an adjustment with the Government for the settlement of this claim. The attorney was present. The Government made a settlement, and as evidenced by a letter from the Director General of the Railroad Administration, they settled it for $30,000, and this claimant received his portion of that amount in full settlement of the matter in dispute.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. There is a question that you must decide. The attorney vigorously protested against that forced settlement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, that attorney has reversed himself, when he said it was in full settlement. I object.

KENNETH A. ROTHARMEL

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4811, a bill for the relief of Kenneth A. Rotharmel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object. I notice there is no letter from the War Department that shows that this individual after he resigned from the French Army, held a commission issued by the American Army.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This claimant had enlisted in the French field service in Paris, and, after serving several months in the ambulance field service, he enlisted in the Lafayette Flying Corps of the French Army, attending their flying schools and training camps. A board of three majors of the American Army visited the camp in September, 1917, asking the claimant and other American flyers in the French service to transfer to the American Army for the purpose of forming a nucleus for the American aviation units. Said board advised claimant that arrangements had been made with the French Army to release him and it would require about two weeks for the transfer and issuance of commissions promised to be arranged.

The claimant executed the forms requesting his release from the French Army, submitted to a medical examination by the said board of majors, who passed and accepted him for the American Army. The board directed him to stay with the French Army until the commissions and orders came through. He continued his service with the French Army with the Lafayette Flying Corps until February, 1918, when he was given his release. The expected American orders did not arrive until April 4, 1918. During the period from January 26, 1918, to April 4, 1918, by reason of the above arrangements and the delay, the claimant received no pay or compensation of any sort, either from the French or the American Army, although he served constantly in actual combat during that period in the French Army.

On April 4, 1918, he was advised there were too many first lieutenants in the Air Service; that the promise of a first lieutenancy made to him in September, 1917, by the board of majors was canceled, and he was sworn in as a second lieutenant in the American Army on April 4, 1918, the commission referred to above, and received pay as a second lieutenant in the American Army after April 4, 1918.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a fact that our boys, because at first we had no Air Service over in France, enlisted in the French Escadrille?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. During the interim for which the bill seeks to remunerate him he was actually in the French service.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes. This bill has passed the House three times, and this time I hoped to get it through in time to have it passed in another body.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the explanation by the author of the bill, I withdraw the reservation.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Kenneth A. Rotharmel, of the city of Chicago, in the county of Cook, and State of Illinois, the sum of $433.50 in full compensation for arrears to pay, including regular pay, foreign-service pay, and flying pay, during his military service under appointment and commission as a second lieutenant, aviation section, Signal Officers' Reserve Corps, from January 26, 1918, to April 4, 1918.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHINDBLOM, a motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

GEORGE B. MARX

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4854) for relief of George B. Marx.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. I object.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will permit, the War Department has found on an audit that there is actually due this party much less than the amount claimed in the bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman should reduce the amount in the bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. Oh, the committee has already recommended that amendment and I still object to that amount, because the Secretary of War is opposed to the passage of this bill. The Judge Advocate General has found against the merits of the bill. In addition to that, the attorney for the claimant, when he received $139,000 on this claim, admitted it was in full settlement. I can not see any justice now in coming back and asking the Congress as a mere matter of grace to pay $76,000.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I will be very glad to explain that feature of the bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. I reserve the objection.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is a fact that this is an effort to obtain equitable relief. The claimant in this case probably has not a good case in a court of law. Settlement was made, but it was a partial settlement, made as such, and understood as such by both parties, but, as we all know, to get any money from the Government it is necessary to sign releases and satisfactions, and as a matter of fact I think everybody in this room has signed a receipt in full for salary for a year in advance. If the gentleman will read the affidavits in the last part of the report made by the two captains of the Signal Corps, who negotiated the settlement, it will be clear to him then that it was only a partial settlement. At the time the settlement was made, General Carmichael refers to the audit as having been based on numerous errors. The War Department did reaudit this claim, because they were so impressed with the fact that an injustice had been done.

That reaudit was made; and as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has pointed out, they found that a balance of some $58,000 is actually due and owing. This man wants nothing except payment of an honest debt. We all feel that the Government should be as honorable in its dealings with citizens as citizens are compelled to be with each other. This money is due and owing. That can not be contradicted. The only defense is a technical defense which the Judge Advocate General naturally raises as the law officer. He says there is no legal claim, and that it rests entirely with the grace of Congress. This is the last court of appeal. The man has no recourse except in Congress. You can not get equity anywhere against the Government except through Congress.

Mr. BACHMANN. This claimant was represented by an attorney before the War Department and they agreed on a settlement for $139,000.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman is in error.

Mr. BACHMANN. I direct the gentleman to page 12 of the report, signed by Colonel Stallings, chief, civil affairs, section No. 2, of the Army. I read from the last paragraph of the report:

> This statement by the attorney for Mr. Marx is a confession that in his opinion the settlement is legally binding upon the parties.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That has no reference to the original settlement that was made. That has reference, however, to this bill which is now before Congress.

Mr. BACHMANN. Is it not a fact that Mr. Marx, represented by an attorney, agreed with officials of the War Department to accept $139,000 in round numbers, and that money was paid?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is the amount that was paid in partial payment in 1919.

Mr. BACHMANN. And now, some 12 or 13 years afterwards, he comes to Congress and asks Congress to pay an additional $76,000 which has been reduced to $58,000. I think, in the first place, the claim is too large to be handled here on the Private Calendar, where quick consideration must be given to items of this kind.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. An immense amount of testimony has been produced, and it was carefully studied by the War Department and by the Committee on War Claims. It is true that it has taken 12 or 13 years to reach this point, and because of that I am extremely reluctant to have all that effort and work thrown into the discard, because proper attention can not be given on this floor to the merits of the bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. Does not the gentleman think that this is a just claim?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I am certain that it is a just claim.

Mr. BACHMANN. If it is a just claim, in addition to the $139,000 already received, I think we ought to take this matter up with the War Department, that has all the facts, and get a favorable report from the Secretary of War, who has gone over it, who has all these accounts before him, who is familiar with the original settlement, rather than come here before Congress and in a few minutes ask the House for that sum of money.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. May I read just a sentence from the report of the committee?—

> After repeated efforts to have the claim reaudited, the War Department finally, on January 19, 1929, consented to a reaudit, with a view of determining to what extent, if any, the contractor was inadequately compensated. The War Department auditor found that Marx was entitled to an additional sum of $56,259.02, the amount carried in the present bill.

Then it quotes Judge Advocate General Carmichael.

Mr. BACHMANN. Who finds against that holding?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. No; that is not so.

Mr. BACHMANN. He does not recommend payment of this claim.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I wish the gentleman would take time to read this report.

Mr. BACHMANN. I have read the report two or three times.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I do not want to take the time of the House in this manner. If the gentleman will withhold his objection and let me go into this a little more thoroughly, I think I can explain it to him.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

STANLEY A. JERMAN, RECEIVER

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5185, for the relief of Stanley A. Jerman, receiver for A. J. Peters Co. (Inc.).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

STANTON & JONES

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5738, for the relief of Stanton & Jones.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WARREN BURKE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4103, for the relief of Warren Burke.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like some explanation of this bill. I have it marked for qualified objection, which means subject to some explanation.

Mrs. KAHN. If the gentleman has read the report—it was reported unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs. There is a report from the Navy Department recommending its passage.

Mr. STAFFORD. But what does it seek to do? Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COYLE] supplement the information given by the lady from California?

Mr. COYLE. May I explain to the gentleman this young man was serving as an aviator on one of the big airplane carriers. He was in the Naval Reserve but was assigned to regular duty as an aviator on one of these big carriers and was serving for nearly a year in exactly the same status as if he had been in the regular service.

At the time they were launching a large number of planes from the deck of the carrier. All of the motors were turning over at the same time. He either lost his balance or was blown from the cockpit of his plane as he tried to climb into it, and was blown back into the propeller of the plane immediately in the rear of him, and his arm was taken off at the shoulder. His status as a naval reservist does not entitle him to retirement pay. He is not entitled to any compensation, because it was not in war time, but, just as much as any man serving with a regular commission in that rank, he was doing his part, and he is seriously damaged for the rest of his life.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not this measure on all fours with the emergency officers' relief proposal, seeking to give to the reservist the same retirement privileges as if they were in the enlisted Army?

Mr. COYLE. I can not follow the gentleman that far, because the emergency officers' retirement was a measure for war-time officers. This is a measure for a young peace-time officer serving in the aviation service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, the gentleman has given considerable thought to this subject. Suppose a national guardsman during encampment maneuvers suffers an injury; would the gentleman say he was entitled to three-quarters pay?

Mr. COYLE. If the National Guardsman was called into the Federal service for regular duty and not for training, then I should say he was entitled to similar benefits.

Mr. STAFFORD. But this young man, as I understand, was not in training to be called into the regular service.

Mrs. KAHN. Yes. He had been for a year on the Saratoga. He had been in regular service on the Saratoga. He was there for a whole year.

Mr. STAFFORD. But merely in training.

Mrs. KAHN. They were short of aviators. He was in active service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to get this clear, because this establishes a principle. In the Army we send men in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps service to the various camps for training for three months or six months and the like. Is it purposed that when they are injured in that service we are going to retire them on three-quarters pay?

Mrs. KAHN. This is entirely different.

Mr. STAFFORD. But this is a comparable service.

Mrs. KAHN. May I read the last paragraph of the report from the Secretary of the Navy?

> The status of Ensign Burke at the time of his injury was materially different from that usually occupied by reserves. He was a qualified naval aviator and was performing active duty with the Battle Fleet Air Squadrons. His orders to this duty contemplated continuous duty for one year, most of which had elapsed at the time of injury. While performing this duty he was not in a student status but was an active member of a combatant unit of naval forces performing duties identical with those required of officers of the regular service with similar rank. The effect of the assignment of Ensign Burke and other reserve officers performing similar duty was to alleviate the shortage of naval aviators in the regular service and to bring up to required strength the active fleet aviation units.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then this could not be taken as a precedent for others in naval or military service who are being given training?

Mrs. KAHN. No. The Secretary of the Navy says:

> In view of the exceptional circumstances of this case, the Navy Department recommends that the bill H. R. 4103 be enacted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, they are very free with their recommendations.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question? I think I will have to object to the bill.

My colleague from Wisconsin has brought up a very pertinent point. Let us look at the facts in this case instead of looking at it in the light of sympathy. Take the officer personnel of the National Guard assigned to the border in 1916. That officer personnel was taken into the active Federal service. The captains were rendering the same service as Regular Army captains, and the lieutenants were rendering the same service as Regular Army lieutenants. Are we going to single out this one man, who has the same status as anybody else temporarily in the active military or naval service, and retire him on three-fourths of his base pay for the rest of his life, when we do not extend the same benefits to those in the National Guard and others who were temporarily in the active military or naval service of the United States and who were performing the same duties as officers in the Regular Establishment?

Furthermore, are we going to establish the policy, by special act of Congress, of granting relief to a naval reservist who has been injured in line of duty simply because he might have been called into the active service for two or three weeks or a year, and give him the status of a Regular officer, and if he is injured in line of duty retire him for the rest of his life at three-fourths of his base pay and fail to do the same for others having the same status? If that is the policy of the Naval Affairs Committee then I would suggest that they bring in general legislation, because I take the position that what is sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander.

Mr. COYLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. COYLE. This boy lost his arm, and he is entirely disabled. I know that if an Army officer on the Texas border, while in Mexico in action, had lost his arm the gentleman would be the last one in the world to object to having that man taken care of.

Mr. SCHAFER. I positively would object to picking out one single officer and extending to him special benefits which you deny to the many officers having the same status, simply because some influential Member of Congress introduces a special bill. I do not believe in the policy of picking out one individual and giving him a special status that is not given to all others in the same class.

Mr. COYLE. If the gentleman will show me another boy who has lost his right arm at the shoulder I will be very glad to introduce a similar bill.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RELIEF OF CONTRACTORS AND SUBCONTRACTORS

The Clerk called the next bill (H. R. 793) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," approved August 25, 1919, as amended by act of March 6, 1920.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this would open up the way for numerous claims which accrued prior to the World War, would it not?

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. No. They have practically all been settled. There are only two or three of those old claims left. This man's claim should have been taken care of with the others and he should have been paid. This is an old man. He took that contract and he lost his home by reason of it. He is now the object of charity. Practically all of these claims have been settled. Special bills were passed taking care of others similarly situated. This bill does not appropriate a cent. It simply gives this man the privilege of going before the Treasury Department and proving his claim. I hope the gentleman will not object.

As I have stated, this man is now the object of charity. He lost his home by reason of this contract. He was compelled to compete with cost-plus contracts and they simply took all of his labor and all of his material and ruined him. It is a just claim.

Mr. GRISWOLD. This would change the status of a lot of claims, according to the statement of the Treasury Department.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. I inquired at the Treasury Department and I was informed there are few of these claims left.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The Treasury Department states in its report that this would open up the way for the allowance of other claims.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. There are no more of those claims in existence, or, at least, very few of them.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will permit, the department does not make any recommendation.

Mr. GRISWOLD. However, the Treasury Department states that this will open up numerous claims.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. This only gives him the right to prove his claim. This is about the only claim left, so it will not open up a lot of other claims. This will only give him the right to go before the Treasury Department and prove his claim if he can.

I am frank to say I doubt very much, after this lapse of time, whether he will ever be able to prove it, but it will be a great relief to him to have the bill passed.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

WALTER S. WEST

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1700, for the relief of Walter S. West.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged marines Walter S. West, who was a member of Marine Guard, U. S. S. Marblehead, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of the United States Marine Corps on the 14th day of January, 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANK WOODEY

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1804, for the relief of Frank Woodey.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to accept for reenlistment in the Navy, Frank Woodey, 134-69-80, boilermaker, first class, and to immediately transfer him to the Fleet Naval Reserve in accordance with the laws existing at the time of his discharge from the naval service on the 10th day of February, 1922.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. As a Member of the Seventy-second Congress, elected in 1930 from the third district of New Jersey, a district which is perhaps as important, unusual, and interesting as any in our entire country, I wish to bring to your attention some of the existing conditions. Part of my district is highly industrial and contains some of the country's largest industries; another part is a rich agricultural section where the farmers largely engage in the raising of fruit and vegetables for the metropolitan markets. This section also produces annually a vast amount of poultry and eggs, which are widely distributed. There is also the seashore section of New Jersey, the playground of the East, which not only furnishes recreation and pastime for thousands of our citizens during the summer months but during the other parts of the year is the scene of great activity in the fishing industry. From this brief description of the district I know you will appreciate the diversified interests of my constituency. Since my election in 1930 I have spent a lot of time in finding out from the people of my district their views regarding the public issues of the day. Frankly and freely have we talked over problems, and the thoughts expressed to you to-day are what might be called the gleanings from conferences with members of both major parties.

Since I have been a Member of the House I have assisted in every way within my power to bring about the enactment of legislation which was thought would be helpful in relieving the depression, and especially the unemployment from which millions of workers are suffering through no fault of their own. We have put through what we know as the reconstruction program. We have passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, an act designed to ease the strained situation of banks, building and loan associations, the railroads, and insurance companies; we passed the Glass-Steagall bill, to end deflation by easing the credit situation by thawing out frozen assets. We have assisted agriculture in numerous ways. In short, we have done what it was agreed might be done for the farmer, the banker, the railroads, and the big corporations; and I feel that the time has now arrived when some measures should be taken to relieve the distress of the working classes—in a word, to do something for the plain people.

How can this be accomplished? In my judgment it can be done, in so far as the Federal Government is concerned, by the enactment of legislation which will permit the laying down of a broad and comprehensive building program. But here we are up against the opposition of the President, for we find that he has issued instructions that no more authorizations shall be made for building projects.

The President states that he will veto our road construction bill, which will prevent the appropriation for Federal aid in highway construction. And, is it not true that only by the adoption of such projects as this can the Federal Government do anything toward providing work for men who are idle? This will also set an example to private industry, which should stimulate a revival that would provide a great deal more employment than the Government, in its necessarily limited sphere of activities, can ever be able to do. Only through such means can we assist labor, both skilled and unskilled, and help it over the depression, which has continued so long that it has taken as its toll the lifetime savings of hundreds of thousands of worthy families.

We hear a great deal said about living in a machine age and of its effect upon labor. We know that machines are doing work formerly done by man power. The measure of benefit that goes to the working classes as a result of construction projects is only a fraction of what it would be if we did not have the many wonderful inventions of to-day. In a road-construction job, for example, the number of men that could be employed would be very much greater were it not for the steam shovel and the concrete mixer.

I realize that the suggestion which I am about to make may seem a backward step, but in a situation as we have to-day, with millions of men begging for employment in order to provide food for their children, would it not be well to require upon every Federal construction project, whether road construction or building or what not, that machinery be replaced by man power in every possible instance? It might slow down construction somewhat; it might even make it a little more costly, though probably not greatly so; but it would do an infinite amount of good and be infinitely better for the working people, the class for which the Government has not yet legislated. It would give employment to thousands now idle, thereby providing food and fuel for thousands of families, and that is what must be done eventually by one means or another.

The Federal Government is faced with the greatest Treasury deficit in its history, at least in time of peace. For the last fiscal year it is in excess of a billion and a half. There is every indication that by the close of the present fiscal year on June 30 next the accumulated deficit for two fiscal years will be in the neighborhood of $3,000,000,000.

This is a staggering sum. It has been accumulated during the administration of the President now occupying the White House, and he and his party must accept the responsibility therefor, because by no stretch of the imagination can it in any degree be charged to the party now in control of the House of Representatives. Nevertheless that party, my party, is confronted with the disagreeable duty of finding additional revenue through new or additional taxes with which to meet this deficit, balance the Budget, and preserve unimpaired the credit of the Federal Government.

This huge $3,000,000,000 deficit is due, on one hand, to an enormous falling off in revenue from income and other taxes, and, on the other, to the orgy of expenditure which has been indulged in during the recent years; expenditures which have steadily mounted until for the last two fiscal years they have reached the staggering sum of $5,000,000,000 annually.

To meet this deficit, at least in part, and to finally balance the Budget, the Ways and Means Committee of the House is now searching for new and additional sources of revenue. I desire here and now to express the hope that not one more dollar of new and additional taxes will be levied than is absolutely imperative, because we must never forget that we are going to levy these additional taxes at a time when they will constitute a very great hardship upon the taxpayers. All taxation is vexatious, but when taxes are levied at a time when the people are least able to pay they are doubly burdensome.

We hear a great deal about balancing the Budget, and I am in favor of balancing the Budget in a reasonable time, because we must do nothing that will impair our national credit in the slightest degree. But we do not have to balance the Budget to-day, or even this year. We should not lose sight of the fact that under this and the preceding Republican administrations a great to do was made about reducing the national debt. In seeking to make a record in that respect, the administrations of Presidents Hoover and Coolidge, and even that of President Harding, imposed more taxes than were necessary to pay the Government's running expenses, and in consequence found huge surpluses on hand, with which the national debt was reduced more than the law required.

The result is that we are more than six years ahead of the debt-retirement schedule, as fixed by law. Possibly that was justified when times were good and everybody was prosperous. But now that times have changed, now that the tax money is doubly hard for the taxpayers to find, would it not be wise to reduce our national-debt payments for two or three years, and to that extent ease the burden upon the people? If we do this we will still be two or three years ahead of the statutory requirements for debt reduction, and will have given the taxpayers the benefit of this relief at a time when they need it more than they have ever needed it in the past or probably ever will need it again.

Take the case of thousands of people in my district in New Jersey. As I stated earlier, the raising of fruits and vegetables is a most important industry. These producers are in difficult circumstances. They received very low prices for their products last year. Many of them did not make the cost of production. They are in difficulty. Taxes are more burdensome to them than they have ever been and the same is true of office workers and others we sometimes call the "white collar" class.

They should not be called upon to pay, and with my vote never will pay, a penny more in taxes than is absolutely necessary for governmental requirements. They are not concerned about income taxes, for many of them seldom, if ever, make enough to place them in the income-tax paying class. But they pay many other taxes—their land, State, and local taxes; they pay heavy indirect taxes because of the tariff. To add special excise taxes or sales taxes or any other special taxes to what they are already paying would work a great hardship on many and might even help throw some of them into bankruptcy.

One of the pledges upon which the Democratic Party came into control of this body last December was that of the strictest economy possible in governmental expenditures. We are keeping that pledge, and whatever the sum total of appropriations for the next fiscal year may be, it will be many millions of dollars less than would have been the case had not the Democrats gained control of the House.

As I have already pointed out, Federal appropriations have mounted steadily during the last several years until the Seventy-first Congress appropriated more than $10,000,000,000; more than $5,000,000,000 for the cost of Government for each of the past two years. The people were staggered by the size of these appropriations. They protested, and their protests became effective at the polls. So it was that the Democratic Party came into control in the House, pledged to strict economy.

The record of the Democratic-controlled House and the Democratic-controlled Appropriations Committee, under the leadership of Chairman JOE BYRNS, of Tennessee, stands out like a beacon of hope. That committee and this House have not yet finished with the consideration of the annual appropriation bills, but they have gone far enough to have made a record that challenges comparison. The appropriation bills already passed by the House, or reported out by the Appropriations Committee, carry appropriations for approximately $440,000,000 less money for the next fiscal year than the last Republican Congress passed for the same Government departments for the present fiscal year. That alone justified the faith which the people demonstrated in my party when they voted it into control of this body. But not only have we reduced appropriations under those made by the last session of Congress so as to effect a saving of over $400,000,000, but we have actually reduced the appropriations recommended by the Budget Bureau and approved by the President by nearly $115,000,000. And we are not yet through, for other appropriation bills remain to be considered, and additional savings will be effected which will compare favorably with those already made.

I am certain, too, that these savings have been made without impairing the efficiency of any activity of the Government in the slightest degree, for during even the relatively brief time I have been in Washington I have formed the opinion that many of the Federal departments are overly populated and that there is so much overlapping and waste that I firmly believe no private corporation could long exist if it managed its affairs in a similar manner. Convinced as I am of this fact, I have whole-heartedly supported the Democratic leadership in the House in the steps it has taken to cut out this overlapping, both with respect to the filling of vacancies in the Federal service and in the effort now being made to bring about consolidations and transfers that, it is hoped, will lessen the evil about which there is so much complaint.

Speaking generally, I know that the taxpayers of my district favor these efforts for retrenchment and economy, but I regret to say that there are a few individual cases where there is a complaint when a reduction or curtailment affects some activity of the Government in which they are particularly interested. Anxious as I am to please, I recognize that we can not play favorites and every Government department and bureau must share in this reduction, not only in the expenditures but sometimes in personnel, if real economy is going to be effected, and if the taxpayers are going to ever get any relief.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PARRAMORE POST, NO. 57, AMERICAN LEGION

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4515, extending the limit of time within which Parramore Post, No. 57, American Legion, may construct its memorial building and correcting street location.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire from the author of the bill whether or not this extension will bring about any expense on the Government?

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not inquire of the gentleman reporting the bill?

Mr. BACHMANN. All right; I will make the inquiry of the gentleman reporting the bill, but I thought the gentleman introducing the bill would prefer to explain it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, several years ago I got Congress to pass an act granting Parramore Post of the American Legion in my home city of Abilene, Tex., the right to construct a memorial building on one corner of Federal Square. This entire square was donated to the Government. The corner upon which the Parramore Post got permission to construct its memorial building was the northwest corner, when it should have been the northeast corner, the use of which would not interfere with any of the rest of the use or activities of the Government in connection with the property. This bill extends the time and corrects the location and was approved by the Treasury Department, approved by the Post Office Department, and has the unanimous report of the committee. The committee gave me a hearing on the bill and reported it unanimously.

The reason Parramore Post did not construct their building within the time authorized by the former act was because there were years of depression, continuous droughts, and hard times in that section. They were hard hit financially, and they failed to raise the necessary money within the time required, but during the last few years they have been raising funds by giving entertainments and otherwise accumulating their building fund. This bill is simply to extend their time for construction and to correct the location.

Mr. BACHMANN. The gentleman assures the House that this extension will not cost the Government any additional money?

Mr. BLANTON. Not one dollar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Texas will permit, the Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the bill does not undertake to define the location of this post. The Chair would suggest that an amendment might perhaps be appropriate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this language has been deemed sufficient by all concerned, and there is but one Parramore Post, and I would not like to change the bill as approved by the department and the committee.

Mr. BACHMANN. Does not the bill substitute the words "west side of Walnut" for "east side of Pine"?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; that definitely locates it at a certain point in Abilene, Tex., and it is perfectly satisfactory to all concerned.

Mr. BACHMANN. Is the gentleman satisfied with the bill in its present form?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I am.

Mr. BACHMANN. In view of the explanation, I have no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I thank my friend from West Virginia and my other colleagues here for allowing the bill to pass. When I got the original act passed, our former good friend, the late distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Jim Mann, at first raised several objections to the bill, but after extended discussion he approved it, and he helped me materially to pass it. I will appreciate it very much if my colleagues will let this bill pass now, as it may be some time before this committee reporting the bill may have a call on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman think this is a bad practice?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to be razzed about a bill by my friend from Mississippi just because I am the author of it. This is a just and proper bill to allow Parramore Post to construct their building. I feel sure the gentleman does not want to object to it, and now that he has razzed me about it, I hope he will let it pass.

Mr. COLLINS. I want to ask the gentleman a serious question: Does not the gentleman think it is a bad practice for post-office sites to be littered up with private buildings?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman could see this big oversized block which was given to the Government without costing the Government a penny he would realize that this American Legion building will in no way interfere with Government needs and necessities.

Mr. COLLINS. Was the site donated by the municipality?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; by the people of Abilene.

Mr. COLLINS. Then I have no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I thank my friend from Mississippi.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of time within which Parramore Post, No. 57, American Legion, may erect its memorial building as provided in the act approved August 24, 1921, being Public, No. 70, Sixty-seventh Congress, be, and the same is hereby, extended three years from and after the date of the final passage and approval of this bill; and that said act be, and it is hereby, further amended by striking out in line 9 of said act the words "East side of Pine" and substituting therefor the words "West side of Walnut."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

M. A. SPRENGEL

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 6334, for the relief of Lieut. M. A. Sprengel, Supply Corps, United States Navy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, although the allowance in this bill is very small, $17.36, nevertheless, there is a principle which I think the House should consider before we pass this bill under unanimous consent. The Comptroller General withheld the item of this amount from this man's account because it was shown that he was ordered to play tennis. The law only authorizes the Navy Department to grant transfers as a basis for mileage for public business. Here they are seeking to override the determination of the Comptroller General, the directing officer of the Government in matters of this kind.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this man was ordered from the naval station at Hampton Roads in 1927 to take part in a lawn-tennis contest at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. He was under orders to go there, he could not refuse, and incurred an expense of $17.36. That amount was paid him by Lieutenant Sprengel, of the Supply Corps. That item has been disallowed by the Comptroller General.

The only question involved here is whether this was public business. The Comptroller General says that he was not engaged in the public business. But we must consider the situation of the supply officer, who has paid the man, and this involves no appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States.

Regardless of how you may consider the matter, this is not a controversy between the Navy Department and the Comptroller General. It is a question of whether this man was engaged in public business.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the gentleman's contention that going from Norfolk to Annapolis to play tennis is public business?

Mr. GAMBRILL. When he is ordered to go; yes. He could not refuse, he incurred this expense, and it was paid by the supply officer, and this is to credit the account of the supply officer.

Mr. BLANTON. Playing tennis is much more laudable than some other things that he might indulge in. This only involves $17.36.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am at a loss to know what the gentleman from Texas refers to. Coming from Milwaukee, I know that there are some things indulged in by naval officers, but I do not know whether the gentleman, being a dry, refers to that or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of the right to object.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Lieut. M. A. Sprengel, Supply Corps, United States Navy, in the amount of $17.36, which amount represents payments made to Lieut. C. T. Simard, United States Navy, for mileage performed under orders of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department dated May 21, 1927.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CAPT. CHESTER G. MAYO

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6337) for the relief of Capt. Chester G. Mayo.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is hereby authorized and directed to allow the sum of $115 in settlement of the accounts of Capt. Chester G. Mayo, Supply Corps, United States Navy, this sum being the amount paid by the said Captain Mayo on account of floral wreaths purchased in connection with the funerals of the late Congressmen Lemuel P. Padgett, Daniel J. Riordan, and James R. Mann, and disallowed by the General Accounting Office.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

G. W. WALL

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 882) for the relief of G. W. Wall.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to have issued and delivered to G. W. Wall, of Spartanburg, S. C., a duplicate certificate of mutilated temporary coupon bond No. 13491081 for $50 of the third 4¼'s, the said bond having been partially destroyed: Provided, That the said G. W. Wall shall furnish, if the Secretary of the Treasury require it, a bond to hold the Government of the United States harmless against any loss that it might sustain by reason of said mutilated temporary coupon bond.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of George W. Wall, of Spartanburg, S. C., United States temporary coupon bond No. 13491081 for $50 of the third Liberty loan 4¼ per cent per annum bonds of 1928, with interest from September 15, 1919, to September 15, 1928, without presentation of the upper portion of the bond, the lower portion of said bond having been presented to the Treasury Department with coupon No. 4, due March 15, 1920, attached: Provided, That the upper portion of the said bond shall not have been previously presented or ascertained to be in existence and that no payment shall be made hereunder for any coupons which may have been attached to the temporary bond other than coupon No. 4 mentioned above: And provided further, That the said George W. Wall shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of the said bond and the interest payable thereon from September 15, 1919, to September 15, 1928, inclusive, in such form and with such corporate surety as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the mutilated bond hereinbefore described.

The committee amendment was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EDWARD BODECK

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2238) for the relief of Edward Bodeck.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I think the Government employee in driving this truck was negligent. I think the claimant is entitled to some compensation, but I can not agree that the amount of compensation provided in the bill, $5,000, is correct because, as I read the report, the injuries that the claimant received do not warrant the sum of $5,000. I say this especially in view of the fact that the gentleman's committee is on record as well as the Members of the House of granting only $5,000 in case of death. This injury is not of such a permanent nature as to warrant the payment of $5,000. I would have no objection if the chairman of the committee would agree to an amendment making the amount $2,500 instead of $5,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, this is the bill of my colleague from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN], who is at present in a hospital in Washington. I do not know whether or not he would accept the suggested amendment. The injuries here were pretty serious. It was an outrageous piece of negligence on the part of the Army truck.

Mr. BACHMANN. I think there is no question as to the liability.

Mr. BLACK. Excepting for his negligence, the claimant would be a sound and well man to-day, and would not be seeking relief. He was badly battered up by the Army truck. He was on the sidewalk, and the truck was trying to pass another vehicle on the right side and went off on the sidewalk and struck this man and knocked him down. The man was in the hospital for some time, treated for several days. He had concussion of the brain and several other injuries. His eyesight is impaired. The original bill was for $10,000 and the committee cut it to $5,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure our colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN], would rather have the bill passed at this time even though reduced; and if it does not suit him, he can get it changed in the Senate, because this bill will not be reached again for a long time. I suggest that the gentleman from New York reach an agreement with the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BACHMANN. Does the gentleman from New York believe, as chairman of the committee, and from the facts as he knows them, that this is a claim which would warrant Congress in paying $3,500 instead of $2,500?

Mr. BLACK. I feel that way, or I would not report the bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. I will accept the statement of the gentleman from New York if he will accept an amendment making it $3,500 instead of $5,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $10,000 to Edward Bodeck, of New York, N. Y., on account of injuries sustained when struck by an Army truck November 8, 1928.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, page 1, strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACHMANN: On line 6, before the word "against," insert the words "of all claims."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the remaining committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Line 9, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EDNA B. ERSKINE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4406, for the relief of Edna B. Erskine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to table that bill. That bill should not have been reported.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BACHMANN. The bill should be stricken from the calendar. It became law at the last session.

Mr. BLACK. I made a motion last session to strike a bill from the calendar, under similar circumstances, and the Speaker ruled that the proper motion was to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL MANUFACTURERS' SALES CO. OF AMERICA (INC.)

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5054, for the relief of the International Manufacturers' Sales Co. of America (Inc.).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker. This bill would unjustly appropriate $968,748.12.

Mr. BACHMANN, Mr. ARENTZ, and Mr. COLLINS objected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a bill of this magnitude, seeking to appropriate $968,748 should not ever come up for consideration on a unanimous-consent calendar. A case in court involving such a tremendous amount, would be hotly contested, and it would usually take a whole week to try it. The committee report does not have in it any communication whatever from any department of Government. The committee report does not show that any executive of the Government has given to it his approval. If the House should pass bills of this importance, taking practically a million dollars of the people's money out of the United States Treasury, on a unanimous-consent calendar, it would be absolutely impossible for us ever to balance the Budget. Every dollar that we appropriate must be taken out of the pockets of the people through taxation. And if we do not stop spending, our Government will face bankruptcy. These are my reasons for objecting to the bill.

ANNA MARIE SANFORD

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1275, for the relief of Anna Marie Sanford, widow of William Richard Sanford, deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I have been following a certain form with regard to all of these bills where we seek to grant compensation to individuals, by reason of the running of the statute of limitations. I want to know whether the gentleman would be willing to accept this amendment?

That the United States Employees' Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Anna Marie Sanford, widow of William Richard Sanford, deceased, former furnace man, navy yard, Washington, D. C., in the same manner and to the same extent as if said William Richard Sanford had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof, provided that no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

That is the form adopted at this session.

Mr. BLAND. I have no objection to the form, except there is one feature of this situation that I desire to bring to the attention of the gentleman.

The man first developed symptoms of tuberculosis in 1919. He was continued at work, and then in 1929 he developed tuberculosis. One question is when the tuberculosis first developed. He filed within one year after 1929.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are waiving by the proposed substitute the statute of limitations. We leave it to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission to determine whether he received injuries for which he would be entitled to compensation if he had filed his claim in time.

Mr. BLAND. I will accept the gentleman's amendment, but, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill an identical Senate bill, S. 2822, which has been passed. Then with the amendment to the Senate bill it may go to the Senate for concurrence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Anna Marie Sanford, widow of William Richard Sanford, deceased, former furnace man, navy yard, Washington, D. C.: Provided, That compensation, if any, shall commence from and after the date of passage of this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Anna Marie Sanford, widow of William Richard Sanford, deceased, former furnace man, navy yard, Washington, D. C., in the same manner and to the same extent as if said William Richard Sanford had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the substitute amendment.

The substitute amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CHARLES THOMAS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3724, for the relief of Charles Thomas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill provides for the payment of two amounts, one of $2,500 for injuries to the boy and another $2,500 to his father. I do not think this case warrants the payment of any additional sum to his father. If the gentleman will accept an amendment providing relief for this claimant to the extent of $2,500, I will have no objection to the bill.

Mr. BLACK. I really think the amount awarded to the boy is too low. This boy lost his leg.

Mr. BACHMANN. I am inclined to believe that, I will say to the chairman of the committee. I think he is right in that. I think there is a liability on behalf of the Government for injury to this boy, but my objection is to the payment of two special sums for the same injury. I have no objection to increasing the amount to $3,500 for payment to this boy.

Mr. BRUNNER. I will accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles Thomas the sum of $2,500 in full settlement for injuries sustained by him; and the additional sum of $2,500 is hereby appropriated for loss of services and expenses of Edgar Thomas, as a result of a collision in which Charles Thomas was struck by an Army truck on Bell Avenue at Maxwell Avenue, Bayside, Long Island, on October 8, 1928: Provided, That no part of the amount of any item appropriated in this act in excess of $200 thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum which exceeds $200 of the amount of any item appropriated in this act on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "to," insert the words "the legal guardian of."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Committee amendment: On page 2, in line 15, after the figures "$1,000," insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, there is another provision in this bill providing for attorneys' fees. There is no necessity for having two provisions for attorneys in the bill. I think, however, the provision inserted by the committee for attorneys' fees is a proper one. I offer an amendment to strike out the first provision contained in the bill for attorneys' fees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACHMANN: On page 2, beginning in line 2, after the colon strike out the proviso ending in line 15.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be amended in line 6 by striking out the figures "$2,500" and inserting "$3,500." Further that the bill be amended in line 7 by striking out the semicolon after the word "him" and all the language down to the word "as" in line 9.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Strike out, on page 1, beginning in line 7 after the word "him," the semicolon and the remainder of line 7, all of line 8, all of line 9, and line 10 down to the word "struck" and insert the words "by being."

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the amendment. I am afraid the amendment as read by the Clerk strikes out the important part of the bill, the injury part of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the amendment as reported by the Clerk will carry the following language:

The sum of $3,500 in full settlement for injuries sustained by him by being struck by an Army truck on Bell Avenue—

And so forth. I prepared the amendment in advance and I think it is in proper shape.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LIEUT. JAMES FLOYD TERRELL

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4280, for the relief of Lieut. James Floyd Terrell, Medical Corps, United States Navy.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would like to say to the gentleman that this bill passed the House last year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did it pass at this amount?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; it was passed at the amount of twelve hundred and some dollars.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, here is a man who is a lieutenant of the Navy and goes out at 8 o'clock in the evening and comes back after a while and finds there has been a fire. His goods are destroyed, and he puts in a bill for $280 worth of books 4 years old that cost $280; 3 pajama suits, 4 months old, cost price $5 per suit, $15; bathing suit, 6 months old, cost price $5, value $5; raincoat, cravenette, cost $60, value $60 after 6 months' use; marine uniform, whipcord, purchase price $80, value after 1 year $80; and so he goes on down through the list.

I thought the gentleman from Virginia wanted to hear the complaint about the bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did wish to hear the comments of the gentleman about the bill and the reasons for the gentleman's objection to the bill.

When this gentleman made the account up, he just stated what the things had cost him. He had no time to go into other detail. He just took the matter up before the Military Board and stated the matter in that way. The bill, as originally introduced by me, was for this amount, but I agreed to reduce it, according to the statement before the committee, from $1,600 to $1,250. I think this would amply cover the items which the gentleman thinks are extravagant. I did not at all correct the original report, because I had just offered the bill as I had introduced it last year, and the bill was offered last year for $1,250 and passed.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I have not had time to go over and revalue all these items, but I think the $250 or $300 reduction suggested is entirely out of line with the amount of loss, if there was a compensable loss. I believe it should be so materially reduced that I think the bill should go over at this time.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman suggest an amendment that, in his opinion, would cover the amount of the loss?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Let me say to the gentleman that the Navy Department, when it reported on the bill, stated that $1,250 was the proper amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think it is a rather high-handed method of action for a naval officer, after he has had a library for a number of years, to put the loss of the library at the cost price?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I know this man, and he is a very high-toned man.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there is no question of his high tone.

Mr. BACHMANN. There is no question about the liability here, and there ought to be some compensation made for this loss.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The only question raised about this bill last year was by the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], when he said that this man ought to have insured these goods. I stated at that time that the man had insured his goods, but his policies were canceled as soon as he was ordered to go to Panama. He had not been in Panama more than a week or two weeks when the fire occurred in the barracks. He was on leave for an hour or so and came back and found the barracks on fire. His superior officer ordered him at once to go and look after the wounded and sick and the killed or injured, and he had to leave his own quarters. He could have saved every piece of his property, but was put on this duty by his superior officer and lost his property without any negligence on his part.

Mr. BACHMANN. And this loss occurred while he was performing the duty of helping somebody else whose place was on fire. There is no question but what there ought to be compensation in this case. Would the gentleman agree to an amendment in the amount he thinks proper, say, $800 or $900, or whatever the gentleman thinks is right in the matter? There is no doubt that this man ought to have some compensation.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, there is a page and a half of fine print here, and I object to the bill being considered to-night.

Mr. BACHMANN. Would the gentleman accept $800 as an amendment?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. No; I think the entire compensation should only be a very few hundred dollars, if any. Everything involved here was old and secondhand, and he has priced the articles at their full cost value in most instances. The cost price is put in here and also the claimed price.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

WILHEMIA WILKIE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5198, for the relief of Wilhemia Wilkie.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

I. L. LYONS & CO.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4246, for the relief of I. L. Lyons & Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will note that the Treasury suggested an amendment, and the committee has amended the bill according to the suggestion of the department.

Mr. BACHMANN. There is no difference in the amount, but there is a further provision that they must return the liquor to the Government that the marshal of the district court turned over to the company that produced it. I want to inquire of the gentleman who introduced the bill whether they still have possession of the liquor?

Mr. MALONEY. They have possession of the liquor.

Mr. STAFFORD. What, in New Orleans? [Laughter.]

Mr. MALONEY. Yes. And the bill provides for the return of the liquor to the Government, before they can get the money back.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 1473 on the Speaker's desk.

The Clerk read the Senate bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood that the committee was going to suggest the committee amendment to the original House bill, as a substitute for the Senate bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. I reserved the right to object to the unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill. I only withdrew my objection because they accepted the amendment of the Treasury Department.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the committee amendment for the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the amendment as a substitute amendment for the Senate bill, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to I. L. Lyons & Co. the sum of $3,793.07, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, which sum represents the amount paid to the United States by the said company for certain liquors sold to it by order of the United States district court authorizing the marshal for the eastern district of Louisiana and the Customs Service, port of New Orleans, to make such sale, and which liquors were later found and held to be unfit for medicinal purposes and not salable by the said I. L. Lyons & Co. as permittee wholesale druggist.

SEC. 2. That the payment directed under section 1 of this act shall not be made until the liquor involved is surrendered to the Federal prohibition administrator at New Orleans, La., for destruction.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GRANTING OF CERTAIN LANDS TO THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana says there is a local emergency, and he desires unanimous consent to make a statement. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking the House to consider H. R. 8779, Private Calendar 408, out of order. I would not impose this request upon the House were it not in the nature of emergency legislation.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will not the gentleman withhold that until those of us charged with the responsibility of checking up bills have had an opportunity to make some examination of the matter? I do not know anything about it.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I will withhold it for the present.

SAMUEL SCHWARTZ

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2514) for the relief of the estate of Samuel Schwartz.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. I do.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, this bill was on the calendar in the last session of Congress. The deceased was hit by a mail truck in New York City and lost his life. His estate is claiming damages on account of that. It is true that the Postmaster General and the post-office inspector say on the report of the driver of the truck that it was the fault of the deceased, but in the report there is an affidavit by an eyewitness who says that the truck was going at an excessive rate of speed, and that it was the driver's fault.

I do not believe that the Post Office Department, either the Postmaster General or anybody in his department, can be relied upon as witnesses in his own case. Naturally the driver of the truck wants to exonerate himself. If he should confess to being negligent, if he should admit his culpability for the accident, he would be discharged. If that is what the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BACHMANN] is relying on, then I submit to him that in these cases where people are killed or injured by an agency of the United States Government and their only relief is in Congress, the unsworn statement of the Postmaster General is not entitled to much weight. Of course he knows nothing about it, nor does the Post Office inspector know anything about it. The only witness who could be sworn and whose testimony would be accepted in a court of justice—as the gentleman well knows, because he is one of the ablest lawyers in the House—is the witness, Antonio Cervini.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Chairman, I feel as the gentleman from New York does, so far as I am personally concerned. We have a great number of people who are injured and killed by postal employees who are operating Government trucks, as well as by soldiers who are operating Government automobiles and trucks. These people have no way of being compensated except by coming to Congress and asking for relief. Knowing that the gentleman from New York introduced the bill, knowing that he is a lawyer occupying a high standing at the New York Bar, I did not think that he would introduce a bill unless it was meritorious. I have read the report and I have read the affidavit of the Italian witness.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Do not emphasize the Italian part of it, just say the witness.

Mr. BACHMANN. Very well, the witness. I have risen to ascertain the true facts. As I understand this case, the deceased, carrying two bundles of newspapers, one on his shoulder and the other on his arm, started across the street at an intersection diagonally from one corner to another, instead of going across the street in the proper way. If he had been going across the street properly, he would not have contributed to this accident.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Admit all the gentleman says, if you will, do you think one of these poor, unfortunate people who makes a living carrying newspapers is going to deliberately throw himself in front of a United States mail truck?

Mr. BACHMANN. Certainly not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Why emphasize the matter of negligence? In New York and other States we have provisions of equity by which damages may be awarded for injuries irrespective of negligence. If the gentleman wants to go on the strict fact of negligence, he puts his Government in the position of the railroads, who dispute accident cases on technical grounds of negligence. The gentleman does not want to do that, I am sure.

Mr. BACHMANN. No; but let us talk about the facts in this case. What has the gentleman to say about the case that was referred for prosecution and the man was found not guilty? If the truck was going 50 or 60 miles an hour, he violated the law.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In answer to that I call on my colleagues from New York, who are lawyers, who represent plaintiffs in negligence cases, where the defendant, a drunken or reckless driver, is haled into the magistrate's court. The last thing we want to have happen is to have him convicted. If he is convicted of a criminal charge or of reckless driving, we may lose our negligence case.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I examined this bill and report, not knowing who the author of the bill was until a few minutes ago.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I did not know that it was on the calendar until a few minutes ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is this harmony of testimony between the witness and the post-office driver.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, there is no testimony of the post-office driver.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; there is the report of the inspector of the Post Office Department, who represents the Government, who got the testimony of the driver.

Mr. O'CONNOR. He was not there, of course.

Mr. STAFFORD. He has the testimony of the driver, and we have every reason to believe that the post-office inspector set forth the facts as the driver stated them to him. It is agreed that this news dealer was carrying newspapers in the dark, early morning, when it was raining, two bundles, one under his arm and one on his shoulder. It is agreed that he did not cross the street at the regular crossing, but diagonally. It is agreed also, if I know anything about New York traffic, the way it courses down Fifth Avenue, with automobiles going at 40 miles an hour, at the excessive speed of speedy New York——

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is a violation of all law.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the fact is that automobiles come coursing down Fifth Avenue, as I can testify, at 40 and 50 miles an hour.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BACHMANN. The gentleman does not mean to say that because an automobile is going 40 or 50 miles an hour, therefore, this man ought not to have his claim passed?

Mr. STAFFORD. I claim that the testimony supports the position of the post-office inspector, which contains the report of the motor driver. He says he was going only 15 miles an hour.

Mr. O'CONNOR. He was not there.

Mr. STAFFORD. The motor driver was not there?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The inspector was not there. The accident occurred on Third Avenue, in my district, where there are two rows of elevated pillars in the street. Anybody who goes 30 miles an hour there is criminally guilty.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Did the gentleman ever find a motor-car driver who had an accident who did not claim that he was going only 10 or 15 miles an hour?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, they all claim that. Now, one of the menaces to life in New York City, which the city has tried to stop, is the mail trucks. Mail trucks are the greatest menace to life in New York, and when New York City has tried to stop them the Post Office Department has said, "You have no control over us; we are an entirely different government. Mind your own affairs."

It is presumptive evidence of negligent operation when anybody is killed by a mail truck in New York City.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Here is a news dealer transporting newspapers that had been dropped on one corner over to his news stand. It is dark and raining, in the early hours of the morning. He is carrying a big package on his shoulder. He can not see the coming truck. Does the gentleman say that he is free from negligence?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman not think that the same obligation of care, because of the rain and the darkness, and so forth, devolves on the driver of the mail truck?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I grant that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Now, all things being equal, would the gentleman say that a citizen would run in front of a mail truck and commit suicide?

Mr. STAFFORD. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Any jury in the land, under the circumstances, would find a verdict for this man.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I think the thing which influenced the committee more than anything else was the testimony of the post-office inspector to the effect that the driver blew his whistle. He said he was traveling at only 9 miles an hour. He saw the man, he blew his whistle, and he was only going 9 miles an hour and he could have put on his brakes and stopped the wagon.

Mr. STAFFORD. He only went 10 feet after he struck the man.

Mr. O'CONNOR. You can stop in 10 feet going at 25 miles an hour. If the gentleman will stop these mail trucks from endangering the lives of our citizens, he will be doing a great service.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman from New York that it is usual in cases of this kind to ask for either $5,000 or $10,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This bill asked for $10,000 and the committee cut it down to a miserable $3,500.

Mr. BACHMANN. In view of the fact that they are only asking $3,500 I will withdraw my objection in this instance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Samuel Schwartz the sum of $10,000. Such sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for damages resulting from the death of Samuel Schwartz, who, on January 23, 1926, died from injuries received when run down and struck by a United States post-office truck January 22, 1926, in New York City.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500."

Page 1, line 11, at the end of the bill, insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARGARET B. KNAPP

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 2036, for the relief of Margaret B. Knapp.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection until I can make an explanation of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will withhold the objection.

Mr. CELLER. I will say to the gentleman that this is a bill wherein a petition is made to Congress to pay a woman, Margaret B. Knapp, $5,000.

After 19 years of faithful service, during which time, as the result of unremitting toil in the compilation of most important records, subsequently used in the war in the Quartermaster Corps, this woman developed a condition that brought on blindness. While it is true she wore glasses for a portion of her life, as a result of the very close attention she gave to her work, as indicated by the records in this case, particularly the medical testimony and the statements of the Compensation Commission, she is unable now to earn a livelihood, and in the evening of her life, after she is 50 years of age, she is thrown out of employment because of her disability, and the Government, to which she has given 19 years of faithful service might, if the gentleman's objection obtains, be so ill considerate of her needs as to give her nothing except the small amount she receives under the retirement act, something like $37 per month.

I ask the gentleman to close his eyes for just half a minute and see how the world is shut out, and then picture to himself the closing of those eyes while life persists to the end of his days, and then he will realize the dreadful plight in which this woman finds herself.

Now, just bear with me and I will read to you what the chairman of the Compensation Commission recites in one of her letters that was submitted to the Committee on Claims:

> The work Mrs. Knapp did for the Government during 1914 and 1915 appears to have been of such a nature that it might well be considered the proximate cause of her present disability. While she had been very nearsighted for many years previously, this eye condition had been nonprogressive.

I emphasize the word "nonprogressive," and parenthetically state that Bessie P. Brueggeman's letter—she being chairman of the commission—was submitted after she had read and studied the testimony of the medical experts, particularly those experts of the United States Army schooled in medicine. She goes on to say:

> This eye condition had been nonprogressive until she was required to do unusually close eye work, from 1913 to 1915. As a direct result of that work she lost the vision of her right eye from an industrial standpoint. Also there seems to be no question that the special task to which she was assigned was the direct cause of the progressive development of the change of eye symptoms which subsequent medical reports confirm. The most recent medical report, that of May 15, 1930, by Dr. J. N. Greear of this city shows that Mrs. Knapp is for practical purposes industrially blind in both eyes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to further explain the bill, because this bill passed the Senate during two previous sessions, and it has been on this calendar for many years. The woman lives in San Francisco, and she came here after a great deal of difficulty to testify before the subcommittee. I beg the indulgence of the House in order that I may endeavor to change the mind of the gentleman who objects to this bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest sympathy for the lady in her affliction. In the report it appears that in March, 1924, this claimant, Mrs. Knapp, was granted an annuity at the rate of $432 per annum, having been found upon medical examination to be totally disabled for useful employment. That is the report of the Compensation Commission. There is nothing in the bill which shows anything except that this $5,000 is to be added to the award heretofore made. There should not be two awards in this case, one a lump sum and the other an annuity. The least you should do, if you want a lump sum, is to cancel the annuity; if you have a case where sufficient annuity is withheld, then redraft the bill along that line. But unless and until there is some kind of a change in the pending bill I shall continue to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JAMES RIVER BRIDGE CORPORATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 796, for the relief of the James River Bridge Corporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have no report from any member of the United States Shipping Board. I notice we have a report from the attorney of the interested claimant.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. This bill passed the House last year and that report was not asked for. If it did not belong to the Shipping Board, there would be no suit. This bill simply gives them the right to prosecute the case in admiralty.

Mr. STAFFORD. Instead of incorporating the views of the attorney for the corporation, why not have the views also of the Government representative?

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. This is the first time I have had such a request. I would be very glad to have that, but this is the first time any request of that kind has been made, and I did not know it was going to be required. The bill passed the House last year and, as I have said, all it does is to give the admiralty court jurisdiction, a court that is used to handling claims of this kind. At present a bridge is not a subject of admiralty, but a ship ran into it and they want the admiralty rules to apply in the trial of the case. I am sure this vessel belonged to the Shipping Board. I do not know why there is not a letter here from them.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report is incomplete. I dislike to object because the bill merely submits the matter to the court.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. I hope the gentleman will not object, because it is getting late in the session and I would like to have the bill passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. We ought to have a full report, but in this case I shall withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the James River Bridge Corporation, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Virginia, for damages suffered by reason of injuries alleged to have been inflicted upon the draw fender of the Newport News James River Bridge, near Newport News, Va., by the steamship Vittore Emanuelle III, alleged to belong to the United States, in a collision with said fender by the said steamship, occurring on or about the 9th day of April, 1929, may be submitted to the United States court in the district in which said bridge is, and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the damages sustained by reason of said collision; and if any shall be found due either for or against the United States, upon the same principles and measure of liability with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same right of appeal: Provided, however, That any suit hereunder shall be instituted within four months after the passage of this act.
> SEC. 2. That the mode of service of process upon the United States shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

With the following committee amendment:

> Page 2, line 6, after the word "damages," insert the words "if any."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Page 2, line 13, after the word "act," insert "Provided further, That no judgment can be rendered against the United States unless the said steamship was operated by the United States or by some governmental agency."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GRANTING OF CERTAIN LANDS TO THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up out of order the bill (H. R. 8779) granting certain lands to the board of commissioners of the Orleans levee district in the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, for levee and street purposes.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to permit the gentleman from Louisiana to make a statement and then I shall make an inquiry, and, I think, following that, I can withdraw my objection.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is necessary to change and move the levee at the foot of Esplanade Street for a distance of about half a mile. This requires the moving back of three railroad tracks, a street, and a sidewalk, and it is necessary to take 30 feet of property belonging to the Government.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. Has the gentleman taken this matter up with the Treasury Department and also with the Attorney General; and if so, what recommendation did he receive from the departments?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. The bill, in fact, was written by the Department of Justice, and I have their letter here, which I shall be pleased to put in the RECORD, and also the letter of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BACHMANN. If the gentleman will incorporate with his remarks the letter of the Treasury Department and the letter of the Department of Justice, and if the gentleman states now that there is absolute necessity for the passage of the bill on account of an emergency by reason of flood conditions and to prevent an overflow at this point in the levee, I shall withdraw any objection.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I shall be pleased to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described land, to wit: A strip of land 210.02 feet in length and 30 feet in depth, fronting on North Peters Street, between Barracks Street and Esplanade Avenue, being a part of the Old Mint Site, transferred to the control and custody of the Department of Justice by the Secretary of the Treasury on May 15, 1931, and shown on a plan made by the chief engineer of the Board of Levee Commissioners, dated January 2, 1932, be, and the same is hereby, granted to the board of commissioners of the Orleans levee district, of New Orleans, La., for levee and street purposes; and the Attorney General is, upon the passage of this act, authorized to execute a proper quit-claim deed upon due proof of the organization and legal existence of the board of commissioners of the Orleans levee district.

SEC. 2. That the said lands are granted solely for levee and street purposes, and shall revert to and become the property of the United States of America, if used for any purpose whatsoever other than or foreign to those for which this donation is made.

SEC. 3. The transfer of this property and its use for the purpose mentioned shall be without expense to the United States of America.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein the letters referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration by unanimous-consent request, H. R. 8779, Private Calendar No. 408, is for the purpose of acquiring an easement over a strip of land 210.02 feet in length and 30 feet in depth, fronting on North Peters Street, between Barracks Street and Esplanade Avenue, being a part of the old mint site transferred to the control and custody of the Department of Justice by the Secretary of the Treasury on May 15, 1931, and now used as a jail.

This 30-foot strip of land runs in front of the old United States mint site along North Peters Street. The acquisition of this strip of land will in no way interfere with the accessibility to and from the building.

The entire square of ground on which this strip of land is located was donated by the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, to the United States Government in 1835 for the purpose of erecting a branch of the Mint of the United States and was used as a mint for a number of years. Only recently the Treasury Department authorized the transfer of this square of property to the Department of Justice for use as a jail.

The present existing levee, from Toulouse Street to Esplanade Avenue, the point where this land is located, is the one remaining portion of the levee line in the whole city of New Orleans that is not up to the standard height and cross section, and it is desired by the Orleans Levee Board, parish of Orleans, city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, that this piece of construction be undertaken immediately following the high-water season of 1932 and completed as soon thereafter as practicable. It requires the moving back of railroad tracks, the street, and the sidewalks. However, none of this work can be commenced until authority is granted by Congress to use this small strip of land to set back the sidewalk and street. For this reason I have asked the unanimous consent of the House to consider the bill out of order so that the legislation may be enacted by this Congress which will grant the necessary right of way and in order that the Levee Board of the Parish of Orleans, city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, can proceed as expeditiously as possible with their work.

It would be interesting, I believe, to state that Orleans Parish is building the levees on its 26 miles of Mississippi River front without any assistance or contribution from the United States.

As suggested by my friend, Congressman BACHMANN, and under the permission granted by the House, I include in my remarks a letter from Hon. Ferry K. Heath, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, dated January 13, 1932, also letter from Hon. W. D. Mitchell, Attorney General, dated January 29, 1932.

Letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Heath:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, January 13, 1932.

Hon. J. O. FERNANDEZ,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of January 4, 1932, relative to the proposed conveyance by the United States to the Board of Commissioners of the Orleans Levee District for street and levee purposes of a strip of land of a uniform width of 30 feet off the North Peters Street side of the old United States Mint Building site at New Orleans, La.

I have the honor to inform you that the aforesaid building is now in the custody and care of the Department of Justice, the formal transfer of said mint building for use as a jail having been approved by this department, effective as of May 15, 1931.

In view of the foregoing, it is suggested that the question as to whether or not the proposed transfer of the aforesaid 30-foot strip of the site to the Orleans Levee District commissioners would affect the occupancy and use of the aforesaid building be submitted to the Department of Justice.

Draft of bill for the proposed transfer and sketches showing the dimensions of the 30-foot strip in question are returned to you herewith.

Very truly yours,

FERRY K. HEATH,
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Letter from the Attorney General, Mr. Mitchell:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1932.

Hon. J. O. FERNANDEZ,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: This will acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 19, 1932, inclosing draft of bill to transfer to the Board of Levee Commissioners of the Orleans Levee District a strip of land in front of the old mint building, now being remodeled for use as a Federal jail, for the purpose of rebuilding the levees in that region to protect the city of New Orleans from the Mississippi River.

This bill has been studied by the department, and I am inclosing another draft containing a few suggestions which we believe clarified to some extent the draft submitted by the Orleans Levee Commission.

Yours very truly,

W. D. MITCHELL, Attorney General.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MARCH 10, 1932

The Chaplain, Rev. Zebarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Unto Thee, O Father of the world, who hast made and lovest all, we commit the keeping of our souls, desiring of Thee whatsoever things are necessary for ourselves and for all men. Grant to us this day to know the joy that comes to those who serve, the joy that overtakes us when, in response to the call of duty, we hold fast to the truth that is revealed to us, however difficult and exacting its demands may be, and follow the guidance of Thy Holy Spirit, which ever lures us from the realm of lower impulse with its heat of passion to the higher, clearer atmosphere of sober judgment.

Again we invoke Thy blessing upon our President, Vice President, Members of the Congress, all who bear rule in our beloved land, every home and fireside, every citizen and sojourner in our midst, that peace and prosperity may abound and righteousness exalt us as a nation among the nations of the world. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. FESS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

LIMITATION OF FEDERAL POWERS TO ENJOIN STATE REGULATORY COMMISSIONS

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter to me from Hon. Clyde L. Seavey, president of the Railroad Commission of the State of California, and an address delivered by him, together with a statement of authorities upon the proposed amendment of section 24 of the Judicial Code, legislation for which is now pending before the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RAILROAD COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, Calif., December 9, 1931.

Hon. HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR JOHNSON: For many years past it has been the desire of this commission—and, we venture to say, the desire of practically all State public utility regulatory commissions throughout the country—that Congress enact certain legislation designed to limit the powers now possessed by the United States district courts to enjoin State regulatory orders. It is the view of State regulatory commissions generally that State courts in the first instance should be permitted to pass upon the validity of State regulatory orders, and that the Federal courts should be without jurisdiction to enjoin such orders when the State procedure affords to the utilities a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

Jurisdiction of the Federal courts to restrain State administrative action is derived from United States Code, title 28, section 41 (formerly Judicial Code, sec. 24), and United State Code, title 28, section 380 (formerly Judicial Code, sec. 266). Historically it should be noted that the courts of each State enjoyed full power prior to 1875 to construe their statutes and say what they meant. Before that date decisions of the State courts were reviewed by writs of error on which the Supreme Court of the United States determined whether or not the State law, as interpreted by the State court, violated the Federal Constitution. In 1875, however, the power of the State courts to construe State laws was impaired and diminished by the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. 470) (Judicial Code, sec. 24), which conferred original jurisdiction on the Federal courts in cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States.

The grant of power to the Federal courts in 1875 permitted a single Federal judge to restrain State officers and prevent the enforcement or construction of a State law whenever a complaint was brought in the Federal court alleging that the State statute violated some provision of the Federal Constitution. To acquire jurisdiction it was enough for the plaintiff to allege that there was a violation of the Federal Constitution, and so allege with sufficient plausibility to enable the Supreme Court to say that the Federal question was substantial. As a practical matter it was thus possible for the Federal courts to decide such cases under State law without even considering the Federal question presented (Chicago G. W. Ry. v. Kendall, 266 U. S. 94, 97). It was quite natural that after 1875 a large number of cases which had formerly been dealt with by State courts came before the Federal courts, with the result that a single Federal judge was permitted to restrain State officers from enforcing the statutes and to effectively prevent the construction of State statutes by the courts of the State itself.

In 1910, Congress enacted section 266 of the Judicial Code (36 Stat. 539, 557) (United States Code, title 28, section 380), which curbed the powers of the Federal courts to some extent. Under this enactment the power of a single judge to set aside State legislation was taken away, and it was provided that no application for an interlocutory injunction should be granted unless a majority of three judges concurred. "This was a compromise between the wish on the part of the House to deprive the Federal courts entirely of this jurisdiction, and the insistence of the Senate to the contrary." (41 Harvard Law Review 625.)

We know of no sound reason why the Federal courts should be permitted to construe and interpret regulatory commission orders and restrain such commissions where the State procedure affords to the public utilities a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by granting to the courts of the State an opportunity to independently review the commissions' orders on both the law and the facts. State regulatory orders are State statutes under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and it is logical that they should first be construed by the State courts. This practice would insure uniformity of construction. In Gilchrist v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. (1928) 279 U. S. 159, the Supreme Court recognized the desirability of permitting State courts to first determine questions of State law. Under Federal court practice injunctions are frequently issued upon affidavits, and the issues generally determined upon a record which is wholly or in part different from the record which was made before the State regulatory commission. The Federal court tries the matter de novo and as of a date later than the date of the regulatory commission order. The practice of a trial de novo in the Federal court results in great delay and unnecessary cost to the various State commissions and other parties. Not infrequently many years' time is required for the trial of a case before a master in the Federal court.

To accomplish the desired reform which has been discussed hereinabove, section 24 of the Judicial Code should be amended in the following form:

Section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. 1091), is hereby amended by the insertion at the end of the first paragraph thereof the provision following:

Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph no district court of the United States or judge thereof shall have jurisdiction to entertain any bill of complaint to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order affecting the rates to be charged by a public utility, not interfering with interstate commerce, made by an administrative board or commission of any State when acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State, on the ground of the unconstitutionality of such order, where such order has been made after hearing upon notice and where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy may be had at law or in equity in the courts of such State.

We are confident that some such bill would command the support of practically all State public utility commissions of the various States.

In opposition to such a bill it is conceivable that reference may be made to a proviso which is found in the Judicial Code, section 266 (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 380) wherein the following language appears:

"It is further provided that if before the final hearing of such application a suit shall have been brought in a court of the State having jurisdiction thereof under the laws of such State, to enforce such statute or order, accompanied by a stay in such State court of proceedings under such statute or order pending the determination of such suit by such State court, all proceedings in any court of the United States to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed pending the final determination of such suit in the courts of the State. Such stay may be vacated upon proof made after hearing, and notice of 10 days served upon the attorney general of the State, that the suit in the State courts is not being prosecuted with diligence and good faith."

The proviso has proven to be impracticable, and until recently no State legislature has undertaken to enact legislation which would enable the use of the proviso.

There are three obvious reasons why the proviso is impracticable: (1) The provisions thereof apply only where an interlocutory injunction is sought restraining the action of any officer of a State in the enforcement of a State statute or of an order made by an administrative board or commission acting under the statutes of the State. It does not apply where a permanent injunction alone is sought or where the State action which is attacked is manifested in some way other than by a statute or order, i. e., as by local ordinance; (2) To be effective for the purpose of defeating the Federal court jurisdiction, the stay granted by the State court must be as broad as the relief asked for in the Federal court, Dawson v. Kentucky Distilleries Co. (255 U. S. 288, 297). It is thus possible to prevent a general stay from being granted by the State court by praying for a relief in matters for which no stay could reasonably be granted; (3) Under the language of the proviso no suit at all can legally be begun in a State court after a Federal district judge issues a temporary restraining order, Union Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Railroad Commission (17 Fed. (2d) 143). It thus appears that the possibility of bringing a State suit may be defeated by the issuance of a restraining order by a single judge.

For your aid in this matter we are transmitting to you herewith a paper which has been prepared by Messrs. George, Rowell & Cassidy, attorneys for the commission, on the subject of "Judicial Review of State Administrative Action." This article is a critical study of the development of the constitutional requirement of due process of law as applied to the action of State administrative commissions, and particularly that mode of judicial review given to the Federal courts by the injunctive process, and embraces certain suggested congressional legislation to meet the demands of the States for relief against the existing procedure.

We are also transmitting to you herewith copy of an address made before the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners at their forty-third annual convention at Richmond, Va., on October 21, 1931. In this address there are set forth at considerable length the personal views of the members of the commission on the subject in question.

The subject under discussion is indeed a live one with the members of the national association, and in addition to having addressed the association upon the subject, we have personally discussed it with individual members on different occasions. We have been urged from many sources to endeavor to obtain your sponsorship to legislation such as proposed hereinabove. The Railroad Commission of California is confident that such a bill is constructive and will meet with the approval of other State commissions and commissioners.

Very truly yours,

C. L. SEAVEY, President.

ADDRESS BEFORE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RAILROAD AND UTILITIES COMMISSIONERS BY CLYDE L. SEAVEY, PRESIDENT CALIFORNIA RAILROAD COMMISSION

STATE COMMISSIONS AND FEDERAL COURTS

It is the purpose of this discussion to look at the relationship of the State commissions and the Federal courts in the matter of the "due process of law" clauses of the Constitution from the historical, practical, and comparative standpoints; to draw conclusions therefrom and make suggestions; confining ourselves, of course, primarily to the question of confiscation of property through the fixation of public-utility rates.

The first due-process clause in the Federal Constitution and addressed to the Federal Government occurs in the fifth amendment, which was added in 1778. This provision was not called into question before the Supreme Court until the year 1856—a period of 78 years. It came up in the case of Murray v. Hoboken Land Co. (18 How. 272). Here the Supreme Court held as conclusive the findings of the Comptroller of the Treasury, who had determined after a special proceeding that over a million dollars was due from the collector of customs at New York and had seized and sold lands belonging to the collector that the findings might be satisfied. Such findings, the court said, by an executive officer, under authority of Congress, is not a denial of due process of law.

The second due-process clause is addressed to the States, and occurs in the fourteenth amendment, adopted in 1866. Litigation very soon arose under this provision. The condition is indicated by Mr. Justice Miller in Davidson v. New Orleans (96 U. S. 97), wherein, after calling attention to the fact that although under the fifth amendment the powers of the Government had been under jealous scrutiny for nearly a century the provision had rarely been invoked, he said:

"But while it (the fourteenth amendment) has been a part of the Constitution as a restraint upon the power of the States only a few years, the docket of this court is crowded with cases in which we are asked to hold that the State courts and the State legislatures have deprived their own citizens of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. There is here abundant evidence that there exists some strange misconception of the scope of this provision as found in the fourteenth amendment."

The first and leading case decided by the Supreme Court in this barrage to escape State jurisdiction was Munn v. Illinois (94 U. S. 278), in which the court held that where property has taken on a public interest and the legislative action has taken place, then this legislative judgment was binding upon the courts as well as upon the people, and that recourse was not to the courts but to the legislature or to the polls.

This was a clear announcement that the reasonableness of rates may be left to the legislative branch of government and that the legislative conclusion on that question is final. Here we have a consistent position of the court upon the two amendments at a time when the meaning and intent of the fourteenth amendment was clearly in mind. But we will see later how this position was receded from and the rights to State legislative judgment eclipsed by the process of injunction.

Concurrent with the consideration of these first cases in the Supreme Court there was passed without apparent contest the judiciary act of 1875, giving a new and enlarged jurisdiction to the whole Federal judicial system. And here for the first time inferior Federal courts were clothed with original jurisdiction in equity to actually restrain the States in the administration of their legislative enactments.

This was a time when champions of the rights of States were either cowed, asleep, or dead.

At this same period the granger movement was under way to stop the imposition of exorbitant transportation rates and to prevent discriminations. And, too, during this time the States, after the Munn v. Illinois decision, saw the necessity and began the movement to delegate the rate-fixing function to expert boards or commissions, where facts adequately could be determined and scientific rate structures carefully worked out and applied.

Among those States so acting was Minnesota. Its railroad and warehouse commission, upon complaint and after hearing, issued an order fixing railroad rates on milk. This was taken to the State supreme court, which construed the State statute as making final and conclusive the finding of the commission on the question of the equality and reasonableness of the rates fixed. From this decision appeal was taken to the United States Supreme Court in the case of Chicago M. & St. Paul R. v. Minnesota (134 U. S. 418), a decision being rendered in 1890. A majority of that court held that the railroads had been deprived of a judicial investigation in violation of the requirement of the Constitution. So 12 years after the Munn v. Illinois decision the Supreme Court reversed its position. What caused this recession is not clear from the opinion of the court. The only distinctive feature suggested was that the rates had been fixed by a State commission rather than by the legislature, a distinction apparently without foundation in law or principle.

The line of decisions starting with this Minnesota case was soon augmented by decisions testing and invoking the new Federal injunctive power. In Regan v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. (154 U. S. 362) it was determined that such a suit was not against the State itself as prohibited by the eleventh amendment, nor was it an injunctive interference with a State judicial proceeding prohibited by provisions of the Judicial Code. The principle of the Regan case was definitely determined by the Supreme Court in 1908 in the case of ex parte Young in which case the Minnesota commission had refused to recognize an order of a Federal district judge enjoining the State's officers from enforcing certain rates which had been fixed by the commission. The court here saw a distinction between the power of the Federal courts to restrain individual State officers even though performing functions required of them by State law, and the power to entertain a suit against the State itself. But in this latter case the majority of the court gave some evidence of uneasiness and remarked that there was "nothing in the case before us that ought to breed hostility to the customary operation of Federal courts of justice in cases of this character." To which Mr. Justice Harlan, in a dissenting opinion forcefully replied that it was just such interference with the prerogatives of the States as would breed hostility and resentment. To him it appeared inconsistent with the whole scheme of our Government that the Federal judiciary could thus effectively close the doors of the State courts against the State itself. As a result of public indignation and criticism some attempted concessions were made through congressional action in Judicial Code amendments in 1911, 1913, and 1914. These were palliative rather than curative. In addition the Supreme Court developed a doctrine of comity as stated in the case of Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Railway (211 U. S. 210), requiring that the evidence in such cases "be laid in the first instance before the body having the last legislative word." This sounds generous but actually means very little. And it should be noted that this comity was to apply only to legislative action. It would seem that comity also should require that the Federal courts respect the rights of the States in their judicial action. But in confiscation cases involving utility property we find no application of such comity.

In 1920 the case of the Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon Borough (253 U. S. 287) was decided by the Supreme Court in which was presented the question as to whether due process of law had been accorded in the administrative and judicial tribunals of Pennsylvania. The procedure in that State provided for a review of orders of the public service commission, in the superior court and then in the State supreme court. The commission evaluated the water company's property and established rates. Upon appeal the superior court reversed the commission, finding a higher value. On appeal to the State supreme court the lower court was reversed and the order reinstated upon the ground that upon careful examination of the voluminous record there was found therein ample evidence to sustain the commission. The difference in value was found to be simply a substitution of judgment. In the Supreme Court of the United States, the State supreme court was reversed, Mr. Justice McReynolds saying—

"We are compelled to conclude that the Supreme Court (of Pennsylvania) interpreted the statute as withholding from the courts power to determine the question of confiscation according to their own independent judgment. * * * The order here involved prescribed a complete schedule of maximum future rates and was legislative in character. (Cases.) In all such cases if the owner claims confiscation of his property will result, the State must provide a fair opportunity for submitting that issue to a judicial tribunal for determination upon its own independent judgment as to both law and facts; otherwise the order is void because in conflict with the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment."

Following this in 1923 the case of Prendergast v. New York Tel. Co. (262 U. S. 43), was decided. Here the New York utility took exception to an order of the public service commission and sought relief by bill of equity to the United States district court. Mr. Justice Sanford said regarding that procedure—

"The application for the injunction was heard by the district court upon the pleadings and affidavits relating to the cost and value of the company's property, its revenues, and expenses. It was not necessary that the company offer in evidence the voluminous testimony that had been taken by the commission on the legislative question prior to making the orders in question. The bill did not challenge the orders of the commission on the ground that it acted arbitrarily without any evidence. The sole issue presented was whether or not the orders were confiscatory; which was to be determined by the court upon evidence submitted to it."

And so we see the Supreme Court of the United States construing the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment to require not only that there be a judicial review of State commissions' orders to ascertain as to fair hearing and sufficiency of evidence to sustain findings of fact but also that the court itself consider all or such evidence as it decides upon and exercise its independent judgment thereon. Should the review be in a court of the State, due process is not satisfied by that court's careful examination of the record made before the commission for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was competent evidence to sustain its findings. If judicial review is obtained by injunction suit in a Federal district court, the record made before the State commission need not be reviewed at all, but the independent judgment of the court may be predicated upon new evidence, or even upon affidavits alone. Not only is there no finality accorded to the conclusions of the State commission but apparently not even a presumption indulged that its conclusions are correct.

Thus we see the complete reversal of legal principle on the part of the Supreme Court, and the continual drawing in of Federal lines to the exclusion of any independent State legislative or State judicial determination of local utility rates.

We State commissions find ourselves in the anomolous position of having our judgment set aside by a legally superior judgment based upon records which were never before us for consideration. But let us digress slightly to complete this brief historical picture and discover what is the attitude of the Federal courts as to Federal administrative functions.

We have already referred to Murray v. Hoboken Land Co., giving finality to the findings of the Comptroller of the Treasury. The same principle was enunciated in sustaining the Secretary of Commerce in matters of immigration and deportation of aliens. The famous case of United States v. Ju Toy (198 U. S. 253) was decided in 1905. The same finality of the findings of the Postmaster General was sustained in 1904 in Public Clearing House v. Coyne (194 U. S. 497). The Supreme Court here found that "due process of law does not necessarily require the interference of the judicial power." The same is true with administrative acts of the Secretary of the Interior in matters involving land entries and withdrawals, and it is true in customs and taxation determinations by Federal officials. These cases may possibly be distinguished from those involving State administrative action on the theory that the Federal Government may entirely exclude all immigrants; may refuse all entries on public lands; and may permit only those it chooses to use the Federal postal system; and, therefore, that it may delegate to its officials authority to make all findings of fact without restraint of due process. But the determination of the fact of citizenship, or the fraudulent conduct in the use of the mails, certainly may result in as serious a deprivation of life, liberty, or property as the findings of a State administrative body in the regulation of a utility.

There are other Federal bodies, however, all or part of whose functions are entirely similar to State bodies—the Public Service Commission of the District of Columbia, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Radio Commission, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture, and others. Congress has expressly provided for the particular type of review which shall be given the findings of each of these bodies. The Supreme Court has held in ex parte Bakelite Corporation that Congress has power of control over matters of this class. "Congress may reserve to itself the power to decide, may delegate that power to executive officers, or may commit it to judicial tribunals."

In the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Curtis Publishing Co. (260 U. S. 568) the Supreme Court defined the extent of the judicial review required under such statute and held that if the findings of fact are supported by evidence they are conclusive.

In the case of Tagg Bros. v. Morehead (280 U. S. 420), where an action sought to enjoin the Secretary of Agriculture from enforcing certain rates prescribed by him, the Supreme Court held that the district court was bound by the findings of fact by the Secretary, and that they could not be reviewed by the district court in a trial de novo with the independent judgment of the court substituted for that of the administrative officer.

The United States district courts have been given jurisdiction to enforce and to restrain the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In the enforcement of reparation orders the statute provides that the findings of the commission shall be prima facie evidence of the facts found. In the enforcement of other orders it is provided that if, after hearing, the court determines that the order was regularly made and duly served the court shall enforce obedience. In suits to restrain enforcement of orders made by the commission the court is not limited in its review by any express provisions of the statute except that in valuation proceedings its finding of value is made prima facie evidence of the value of the carrier's property. In all such cases, however, the Supreme Court holds that the district court may not set aside an order of the commission on the ground that the weight of the evidence does not support the findings.

While these and many other cases involving the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission do not raise the question of confiscation, the Supreme Court has made no distinction and imposed no broader review of the facts in a valuation case than in others. In the O'Fallon case for instance, which raised the question of confiscation, the court made no such distinction.

It seems, therefore, within the sphere of Federal administrative action due process under the fifth amendment is satisfied if a regular hearing is had and the conclusion of the administrative body is based upon some competent evidence.

It is also interesting to discover what has happened in the field of State administration other than utility regulation, involving in particular the valuations in taxation and condemnation proceedings. In an Indiana case decided in 1894 (Pittsburgh, etc., Ry. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 241) the Supreme Court upheld a statute creating a board of tax commissioners empowered to pass finally upon valuations made for tax purposes. In that case Mr. Justice Brewer said:

"Wherever a question of fact is thus submitted to the determination of a special tribunal its decision creates something more than a mere presumption of fact, and if such determination comes into inquiry before the courts it can not be overthrown by evidence going only to show that the facts were otherwise than as so found and determined."

Also in a Nebraska case in 1907 (C. B. & Q. Ry. v. Babcock, 204 U. S. 585), coming up from an injunction suit in the United States district court and involving a tax valuation, Mr. Justice Holmes said:

"Within its jurisdiction, except, as we have said, in case of fraud or a clearly shown adoption of wrong principles, it (the State board of equalization) is the ultimate guardian of certain rights. The State has confided those rights to its protection and has entrusted to its honor and capacity as it confides the protection of other social relations to the courts of law. Somewhere there must be an end."

In the case of Doheny v. Rogers rendered in 1930 (281 U. S. 362) involving a valuation of State commissioners appointed to value property condemned under the Michigan highway commission act, the Supreme Court upheld the State body. Mr. Justice Stone had this to say:

"The due-process clause does not guarantee to a citizen of a State any particular form or method of State procedure. Under it he may neither claim a right to trial by jury, nor a right of appeal. Its requirements are satisfied if he has reasonable notice and a reasonable opportunity to be heard and to present his claim or defense, due regard being had to the nature of the proceeding and the character of the rights which may be affected by it."

From this sketchy historical discussion it is clearly apparent that in protecting due process, the Federal courts have established different requirements for judicial review, (1) as between utility commissions and other administrative bodies within the State, (2) as between judicial and administrative bodies within the State, (3) as between State and Federal utility regulatory bodies, and (4) as between the application of the fifth amendment and that of the fourteenth amendment.

The language of the due-process clause in each of these amendments is of the same significance and practically the same language. The powers and duties of the State and Federal regulatory bodies are essentially of the same nature. The functioning of the different administrative bodies within the State are of the same general character and importance within their spheres. Why are the distinctions made?

The court has set up a line of demarcation between State legislative and State judicial acts. In the matter of valuation for taxation or condemnation their findings and judgments based on competent evidence are conclusive. In the matter of valuation for utility rates the judgment of the regulatory body has no standing before the court.

Either of these judgments, however, is potentially confiscatory. In the case of tax valuation, the tax is levied and collected beyond recovery. In that of condemnation valuation the property is taken and forever removed from any corrective act. But in the valuation for rate purposes the matter remains always open for equitable adjustment. It would seem if any restrictive measures were necessary, primarily they should be applied to other than rate cases. In California the regulatory commission may determine compensation for the taking of public-utility property by condemnation and its judgment upon competent evidence is respected as conclusive. But when it steps across an artificial line to fix a value upon that same property for the purposes of establishing utility rates then its judgment is puerile, and of no effect. The reason for such discrimination against and the setting aside in a class by itself of the State rate-making power of the State remain lost in the unspoken majority of the court. Why private property dedicated to public use is more sensitive to confiscation than other property, or more important and susceptible to abuse than a private person's life or liberty, is not explained.

Historical data might suggest a reasonable answer. Direct regulation by a legislative body as at first applied was crude and unsatisfactory. The pressure of concentrated wealth against control is always continuously strong and persistent. Economic bugaboos and hysteria are usually effective in emphasizing rights except those of the naked individual or the inconsequential consumer. Long distances and long periods of time from the scene of action and the occasion change practical knowledge and reason into academic fantasy. That would be a natural human result if there were no other causes.

Following the past trend of legal procedure there seems no reason why the courts consistently should not take another step and substitute their judgment directly on a claim that current rates were presently confiscating utility property. There are established rulings against such a step, but it is not impossible, as we have seen, for court-made law to be changed. Fortunately there seems to be no danger of this and there is hope for a modification of judicial restraint in the present complexion of the court.

There can be, as has been pointed out heretofore to this association and otherwise, no proper and equitable fixation of rates by the substituted judgment of court, unless the court substitutes wholly in an administrative way. The courts as constituted are without the facilities and the experience to form a complete judgment. State utility commissions do not and can not form a true judgment merely upon a cold record. They and their staffs of experts follow the operations of the utilities from month to month and year to year. They form a judgment based upon experience. An experience which no court can have, an experience which is broader than the lone results of one utility. They gather a basis for judgment from many separate utilities and in many instances are better equipped to determine the reaction certain rate changes will have on the consuming public and their effects upon the individual utility. And while the courts continually in the production of affidavits and evidence by utility experts give particular weight because of experience in utility operation, nowhere have we seen allowance made for the possible bias of their employment. And neither do we seem to find allowance made for the possible unbiased experience of commission experts or for the unusual opportunity of the commissioners themselves to form an experienced judgment.

It truthfully can be said that if the courts would apply the same principle to themselves as judges of rates as they apply to sustaining utility experts, they would immediately disqualify themselves to sit in judgment.

The commissions themselves are undoubtedly to blame in not pressing these and other points before the tribunals and educating the courts and the people to facts underlying the actual operation of State regulation.

As a matter of fact it is extremely doubtful if under State regulation actual confiscation could take place because of commission action. Confiscation more probably would come from other causes. The economic necessity of proper service alone, if injury were done, would finally compel a recovery.

It is safe to say that in practically none, if any, of the cases in which there have been permanent injunctive orders issued by the Federal courts would actual confiscation have followed the commission findings. This is stated not only from general knowledge of the facts but from specific knowledge of the experience in California. A study of the court opinions indicates beyond reasonable doubt that in practically every major rate case in the last 17 years in that State the findings of the commission could not have withstood the test imposed by the Federal tribunals. And yet we find the affected utilities able adequately to finance, operating at relatively low rates, and giving good service. The same thing undoubtedly may be said of other States.

Only recently has the injunctive process been attempted in California. The first instance of permanent injunction was in the case of a street-railway system, which at present neither court nor commission can aid. The second is an injunctive action now before the 3-judge court in a gas-rate case.

What the outlook for future cases is, no one of course can predict. In California we are convinced that a potent factor against the injunction has been the liberal provision in the State constitution for municipal ownership and general sympathy toward public ownership. The utilities in that State have shown much wisdom. How long that wisdom will continue after change of management, or otherwise, may or may not be measured by the increasing difficulty to finance public ownership projects.

At any rate in California, as in other States, we face actual and potential dangers in the functioning of State regulation. We face more than the mere hurt of feelings at a substituted judgment. We face the elimination not only of State control of State rates but of effective State control of service and safety, and the maintenance of proper relationship between various groups and communities. If control of rates breaks down, the whole fabric breaks down. This form of regulation is a new venture. It has accomplished much as an impulsive movement. But to pass the final test in the minds of the people, as well as the courts, it must be clothed with some dignity and grounded on permanent authoritative substance.

Facing this situation, what is there to be done?

At the start may it be said that it is primarily incumbent upon the State commissions themselves to put their houses in order that no just cause may arise for criticism because of their acts or their omissions.

It is also equally incumbent upon the State commissions and those interested in the question of State regulation to carefully consider some remedy, if one is available, through congressional legislation for the correction of a condition which threatens to destroy the effectiveness of State regulatory action. As we have seen, the Supreme Court looks upon commission rate making as a legislative rather than a judicial act, and it construes due process of law to require a complete judicial review of such State commission action when confiscation of property is claimed. While we may believe this is neither good law nor equitable legal procedure, still it stands as the law unless some way be devised to overcome it. It is worthy of trial to see if Congress by statute may not effectively moderate such court definition.

The general grant of jurisdiction to lower Federal courts was accomplished by the enactment of section 24 of the Judicial Code. Congress, thus having granted this power, may either withdraw completely the extension of the jurisdiction or modify it and prescribe the procedure of such courts. This power of Congress is clearly expressed in Kline v. Burke Construction Co. (260 U. S. 226) wherein the court says:

"Only the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is derived directly from the Constitution. Every other court created by the General Government derives its jurisdiction wholly from the authority of Congress. That body may give, withhold, or restrict such jurisdiction at its discretion, provided it be not extended beyond the boundaries fixed by the Constitution."

To the end of so modifying the procedure of the Federal courts, section 266 of the Judicial Code was amended in 1913, with the object of giving the States the privilege of first testing the validity of their statutes in the courts of the State. Some able discussions have been had upon this provision, and the opinion seems to be general that it is a makeshift—that it does not meet the practical situation confronting the States. It certainly does not meet the general opposition to Federal courts taking jurisdiction. It imposes the condition that a stay must be granted by the State court whether equity requires it in a given case or not. It does not provide that the final judgment of the State court will thereafter be res adjudicata and reviewable only by appeal to the United States Supreme Court. And, lastly, the provision obviously applies only to suits wherein an interlocutory injunction is sought.

It seems to be, then, the avowed policy of Congress to permit the States to have transferred to their own courts those causes which the utilities see fit to take in the first instance to the Federal courts of equity. It must have been the intention and expectation of Congress when enacting such proviso in section 266 that the States might take full advantage of that right to stay a Federal injunction proceeding. If the principle thus expressed is proper, but the procedure provided for its exercise has in fact been found unavailing, why should not Congress now clearly and fairly meet the fundamental demands of the States by withdrawing the Federal injunctive power in such cases entirely? A great and increasing burden now imposed upon the specially constituted 3-judge Federal courts may be removed, and the demands of the States be met in the only satisfactory manner, by a single amendment to the Judicial Code. Such an amendment would prohibit any Federal injunctive interference with the administrative officers of a State in the enforcement of a State statute or administrative order wherever the State itself affords an adequate review on claims of constitutional right in its own courts.

The alternative procedure now available to utilities and others for testing the validity of State administrative action by way of the Federal injunctive process is an anomaly. Before State administrative action is questioned under the Constitution, the issue should first be presented to the highest court of the State, and from that court appeal taken, as in other cases, to the highest court of the land.

With such a change in the Judicial Code, State commissions would be freed of the present intolerable interference by lower Federal courts.

JUDICIAL REVIEW OF STATE ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION

A critical study of the development of the constitutional requirement of due process of law as applied to the action of State administrative commissions, and particularly that mode of judicial review given to the Federal courts by the injunctive process; with suggested congressional legislation to meet the demands of the States for relief against the existing procedure.

ARTHUR T. GEORGE.
IRA H. ROWELL.
RODERICK B. CASSIDY.

DECEMBER 4, 1931.

There are two ways in which an order of a State utility commission may finally reach the Supreme Court of the United States for review. In one the appeal from the administrative order is first taken to the highest tribunal of the State, as provided by appropriate State procedure, and thence, if a Federal question is involved, directly to the highest court of the United States. In the other the utility, without having first applied for a judicial review in the courts of the State, seeks injunctive relief in the inferior courts of the United States, and from such courts an appeal lies either directly or indirectly to the Supreme Court.[1]

In a few cases of this type the Federal question presented, giving the Federal courts jurisdiction, is a claimed violation of constitutional right under the commerce or impairment of contract clauses. In a vast majority of cases, however, the issue is one of confiscation of property, and the constitutional protection invoked by the utility is the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment.

The purpose of this discussion is to trace the development of the due process requirement of the Constitution as applied to judicial review of State administrative action, particularly the action of State regulatory commissions empowered to fix the rates of public utilities. If it be found that due process of law and public policy do not necessarily require that degree or form of judicial review which has in fact been accorded by the judiciary, it will be proper then to inquire whether a change in such procedure is demanded or should be effected.

In the year 1920 the Supreme Court rendered its decision in the case of Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon Borough.[2] The question presented was whether the utility had been accorded due process of law in the administrative and judicial tribunals of the State of Pennsylvania. By the State procedure provided a judicial review of the Public Service Commission's order might be had first in the superior court and then in the supreme court of the State. The commission had found the value of a water utility to be $924,744, and on that value had established a schedule of rates to yield a return of 7 per cent. Upon appeal the superior court placed a value of $1,324,621 thereon and reversed the commission. Upon further appeal the supreme court of the State reversed the lower court and reinstated the order of the commission. There was a voluminous record, which the State supreme court said it had examined carefully, and found therein competent evidence to sustain the commission's findings. In the items, it said, wherein the superior court differed from the commission upon the question of value, there had been merely the substitution of its judgment for that of the commission. Yet, even after such a careful review of the commission's action by the highest court of Pennsylvania, the Supreme Court of the United States concluded that the utility had not been afforded an adequate judicial hearing.

"Looking at the entire opinion," said Mr. Justice McReynolds, "we are compelled to conclude that the supreme court (of Pennsylvania) interpreted the statute as withholding from the courts power to determine the question of confiscation according to their own independent judgment * * *."

"The order here involved prescribed a complete schedule of maximum future rates and was legislative in character. (Cases.) In all such cases, if the owner claims confiscation of his property will result, the State must provide a fair opportunity for submitting that issue to a judicial tribunal for determination upon its own independent judgment as to both law and facts; otherwise the order is void because in conflict with the due-process clause, fourteenth amendment."

A New York utility shortly thereafter followed a different procedure to obtain judicial review. Feeling aggrieved by a rate order made by the public service commission, the utility did not seek relief in the courts of the State but at once presented its bill in equity to the United States district court, claiming confiscation and praying for an interlocutory and permanent injunction. Accompanying the pleadings were affidavits relating to the cost and value of its property and its revenues and expenses. Although the commission had based its order on voluminous testimony, the commission's record was not placed before the district court. An interlocutory injunction was granted. The commission appealed, and, in Prendergast v. New York Tel. Co.,[3] this is what Mr. Justice Sanford, for the court, had to say of such procedure:

"The application for the injunction was heard by the district court upon the pleadings and affidavits relating to the cost and value of the company's property, its revenues, and expenses. It was not necessary that the company offer in evidence the voluminous testimony that had been taken by the commission on the legislative question prior to making the orders in question. The bill did not challenge the orders of the commission on the ground that it had acted arbitrarily, without any evidence. * * * The sole issue presented was whether or not the orders were confiscatory, which was to be determined by the court upon the evidence submitted to it."

Thus we find the Supreme Court of the United States construing the due process of law provision of the fourteenth amendment to require not only that there be a judicial review of State regulatory commission action to ascertain whether a fair hearing has been accorded and evidence adduced to sustain the findings of fact, but also that the judicial tribunal shall itself consider all the evidence and exercise an independent judgment thereon.[4] If the review be in a court of the State due process is not satisfied by that court's careful examination of the record made before the commission for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was any competent evidence before it to sustain its findings. And should judicial review be obtained by the filing of an injunction suit in a district court of the United States, the record made before the State commission need not be "reviewed" at all, but the independent judgment of that court is obtained upon new evidence, or even upon affidavits alone. Not only is there no finality accorded to the conclusions of the State administrative body, but, apparently, not even a presumption indulged that its conclusions are correct. From these decisions of the Supreme Court, taken alone, it would appear that due process requires not merely a judicial review of the proceedings in the administrative forum below, but rather a judicial review going to the very substance of the administrative action in which an independent judgment is exercised on both the law and the facts.

This has not always been the concept of due process approved by the Supreme Court. Nor is it the requirement of due process to-day that all administrative or executive action be subjected to such judicial test. It is within the field of State utility regulation alone, and within comparatively recent years as well, that such concept has been developed.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE DUE PROCESS CONCEPT

In both the fifth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution there is found the admonition that no person shall be deprived "of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." One is addressed to the Federal Government and the other to the States. The two phrases have a common origin and the same meaning, and, therefore, restrict Federal and State governments alike.[5]

The fifth amendment was added to the Constitution in 1778. Not until 1856, however, was the Supreme Court called upon to define the meaning of the due-process clause. This was in the well-known case of Murray v. Hoboken Land Co.[6] One Swartwont was then the collector of customs at the port of New York. The Comptroller of the Treasury had an audit made of the collector's accounts and found a balance due of more than $1,000,000. Such finding was made at a special proceeding before the comptroller. Thereupon a distress warrant was issued by the Solicitor of the Treasury and the lands of Swartwont seized and sold. It was claimed that such procedure was without due process of law. The matter coming before the Supreme Court, it was held that this was an act of a Federal executive officer under authority of Congress, and, although it was a matter susceptible of judicial determination, Congress has seen fit to leave it to the executive. Hence the finding of the comptroller as to the fact that there was a sum due and the amount thereof was conclusive. And such finding by an executive officer, it was said, upon a matter committed to his determination is not a denial of due process of law.

The fourteenth amendment was added to the Constitution in 1866. It was scarcely more than a decade later that Mr. Justice Miller, in a decision for the Supreme Court,[7] made this significant statement:

"It is not a little remarkable that while this provision has been in the Constitution of the United States (referring to the due process clause in the fifth amendment) as a restraint upon the authority of the Federal Government for nearly a century, and while, during all that time, the manner in which the powers of that government have been exercised has been watched with jealousy and subjected to the most rigid criticism in all its branches, this special limitation upon its powers has rarely been invoked in the judicial forum or the more enlarged theater of public discussion. But while it (the fourteenth amendment) has been a part of the Constitution, as a restraint upon the power of the States, only a very few years, the docket of this court is crowded with cases in which we are asked to hold that State courts and State legislatures have deprived their own citizens of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. There is here abundant evidence that there exists some strange misconception of the scope of this provision as found in the fourteenth amendment."

It is enlightening to examine some of those cases which then crowded the Supreme Court, and brought there, as stated by Mr. Justice Miller, under some strange misconception of the scope of the due process clause.

In the preceding year (1877) the court had rendered its decision in a case which is the foundation stone for all State regulation of public utilities. The facts giving rise to the case of Munn v. Illinois[8] are known to all. One of the questions presented was whether the warehousemen were deprived of due process of law when the legislature fixed maximum charges for their services. The answer of the Supreme Court on that point was this:

"In countries where the common law prevails, it has been customary from time immemorial for the legislature to declare what shall be a reasonable compensation under such circumstances, or, perhaps more properly speaking, to fix a maximum beyond which any charge made would be unreasonable. Undoubtedly, in mere private contracts, relating to matters in which the public has no interest, what is reasonable must be ascertained judicially. But this is because the legislature has no control over such a contract. So, too, in matters which do affect the public interest, and as to which legislative control may by exercised, if there are no statutory regulations upon the subject, the courts must determine what is reasonable. The controlling fact is the power to regulate at all. If that exists, the right to establish the maximum of charge, as one of the means of regulation, is implied. * * *

"We know that this is a power which may be abused; but that is no argument against its existence. For protection against abuses by legislatures the people must resort to the polls, not the courts."

This principle was expressed even more concisely by Mr. Justice Waite in one of the companion cases to Munn v. Illinois rendered on the same day.[9] His statement was as follows:

"As to the claim that the courts must decide what is reasonable, and not the legislature. This is not new to this case. It has been fully considered in Munn v. People of Illinois. Where property has been clothed with a public interest, the legislature may fix a limit to that which shall in law be reasonable for its use. This limit binds the courts as well as the people. If it has been improperly fixed, the legislature, not the courts, must be appealed to for the change."

Thus at that time, a little more than a decade after the fourteenth amendment was added to the Constitution, the interpretation given by the Supreme Court to the due process clause was not that the question of the reasonableness of rates be determined in every case by a judicial body. On the other hand, it clearly announced the principle that the reasonableness of rates may be left to the legislative branch of government, and that the legislature's conclusions on that question is final. Like the finding of a Federal executive officer, the Comptroller of the Treasury, in an accounting with a customs collector, due process was had even without the intervention of the judiciary.

From that position, as will be shown presently, there was an immediate recession, at least in the application of the due process clause to the regulation of utility rates by the States. Following through briefly that transformation of the constitutional requirement of due process, we will consider only a few of the most important pronouncements of the court.

After the principle of the right of a State to regulate public utilities was established by the eventual decision in Munn v. Illinois, some of the progressive States saw the necessity of delegating the rate-fixing power to an expert board or commission. Minnesota was one of such States. Its railroad and warehouse commission, after complaint filed and hearing thereon, made an order fixing certain railroad rates for the transportation of milk. The railroads took the matter to the highest State court, claiming that the order was unreasonable and deprived them of their property without due process of law. The State court construed the statute which created the commission to make the finding of the commission final and conclusive on the question of the equality and reasonableness of the rates fixed. From this decision an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. That court, in a decision by Mr. Justice Blatchford,[10] held that the carriers had been deprived of a judicial investigation in violation of the constitutional requirement. This was the language of the Justice:

"The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company, involving as it does the element of reasonableness both as regards the company and as regards the public, is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination. If the company is deprived of the power of charging reasonable rates for the use of its property, and such deprivation takes place in the absence of an investigation by judicial machinery, it is deprived of the lawful use of its property, and thus, in substance and effect, of the property itself, without due process of law and in violation of the Constitution of the United States; * * *."

From that judgment Mr. Justice Bradley dissented in this vigorous manner:

"I can not agree to the decision of the court in this case. It practically overrules Munn v. Illinois and the several railroad cases that were decided at the same time. The governing principle of those cases was that the regulation and settlement of the fares of railroads and other public accommodations is a legislative prerogative and not a judicial one. This is a principle which I regard as of great importance. * * *

"But it is said that all charges should be reasonable, and that none but reasonable charges can be exacted, and it is urged that what is a reasonable charge is a judicial question. On the contrary, it is preeminently a legislative one, involving considerations of policy as well as of remuneration; * * *.

"* * * I repeat: When the legislature declares that the charges shall be reasonable, or, which is the same thing, allows the common-law rule to that effect to prevail, and leaves the matter there, then resort may be had to the courts to inquire judicially whether the charges are reasonable. Then, and not till then, is it a judicial question. But the legislature has the right, and it is its prerogative, if it chooses to exercise it, to declare what is reasonable. * * *

"* * * Due process of law does not always require a court. It merely requires such tribunals and proceedings as are proper to the subject in hand. * * * It is complained that the decisions of the board are final and without appeal. So are the decisions of the courts in matters within their jurisdiction. There must be a final tribunal somewhere for deciding every question in the world. Injustice may take place in all tribunals. All human institutions are imperfect—courts as well as commissions and legislatures. Whatever tribunal has jurisdiction, its decisions are final and conclusive unless an appeal is given therefrom."

This case is significant. The views of the majority of the court, as declared in the dissent of Mr. Justice Bradley, were undoubtedly in conflict with their distinct expressions a few years before to the effect that the judiciary had no power to interfere with such legislative action. What may have influenced the court to thus reverse its position does not appear from the decision itself. The only distinctive feature suggested was that here the rates had been fixed by a State commission rather than by a legislature, a distinction without foundation in law or principle.[11]

The explanation for the reversal may be found only in a study of the political and economic changes of that era. Federal supremacy was triumphant. The bitter conflict which had waged for a century over the authority of the Supreme Court to exercise even an appellate jurisdiction over State decisions[12] had at the close of the war ended in complete victory for the proponents of a strong Federal judiciary. With the passage by Congress without a struggle of the new judiciary act of 1875,[13] a new and enlarged jurisdiction was given to the whole Federal judicial system which was to be of momentous importance. Not only were the appellate powers originally granted in the first judiciary act of 1789 confirmed, but to the inferior courts there was granted for the first time original jurisdiction in equity to actually restrain the States in the administration of their legislative enactments. It was an era, it seems, when the cause of States rights was without a champion.

Thus it was that this decision of the Supreme Court in 1890, holding that the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of Minnesota could not finally determine the reasonableness of rates, together with the new broad power granted to the Federal judiciary, which marked the beginning of a new form of judicial review of State legislative and administrative action. It was the beginning of what might be termed the Federal injunctive era.

It was not long before the new Federal injunctive power was tested and found effective. In Regan v. The Farmers Loan & Trust Co.[14] it was determined that such a suit was not one against a State itself, prohibited by the eleventh amendment to the Constitution. Neither was it an injunctive intereference with a State judicial proceeding prohibited by another provision of the same judicial code.[15]

In the Regan case the reasoning of the court was significant. Before that time, as we have seen, it had been held, first, that the question of reasonableness was not one for judicial review, and then, completely reversing itself, the court held that the question of reasonableness was eminently a question for judicial investigation. But in the Regan case a new theory was developed.

"It is doubtless true," the court said through Mr. Justice Brewer, "as a general proposition, that the formation of a tariff of charges for the transportation by a common carrier of persons or property is a legislative or administrative rather than a judicial function. Yet it has always been recognized that, if a carrier attempted to charge a shipper an unreasonable sum, the courts had jurisdiction to inquire into the matter and to award to the shipper any amount exacted from him in excess of a reasonable rate; and also in a reverse case to render judgment in favor of the carrier for the amount found to be a reasonable charge. The province of the courts is not changed, nor the limit of judicial inquiry altered, because the legislature instead of the carrier prescribes the rates. The courts are not authorized to revise or change the body of rates imposed by a legislature or a commission; they do not determine whether one rate is preferable to another, or what under all the circumstances would be fair and reasonable as between the carriers and the shippers; they do not engage in any mere administrative work; but still there can be no doubt of their power and duty to inquire whether a body of rates prescribed by a legislature or a commission is unjust and unreasonable, and such as to work a practical destruction to rights of property, and if found so to be, to restrain its operation."

Apparently this was thought to be a concession to the States to permit them in the first instance to perform the legislative function of fixing what they deemed to be reasonable rates, but with a reservation still to the judiciary of the power to declare the rates so fixed unreasonable when it is claimed that they work a practical destruction to rights of property. Therefore, the court held it is not within the power of the lower Federal court to declare what the rates should be or to prepare a new schedule, but only to condemn or sustain the rates fixed as a whole and, if condemned, to restrain the State commission and the officers of the State in their enforcement.

As might have been expected, such a compromise doctrine did not satisfy the States. What privilege was it to be permitted to expend the effort of fixing rates if their labors were to be nullified by the Federal judiciary? They pressed their claim for a more effective recognition of their right to be unrestrained by the Federal judiciary. Again it was the State of Minnesota which led the fight. It openly refused to recognize an order of a Federal district judge enjoining the State's officers from enforcing certain rates which had been fixed by its commission. It was urged that such an interference by the judiciary was in effect a restraint upon the State itself expressly prohibited by the eleventh amendment. But again the Supreme Court in 1908[16] held that such power had been committed to the courts. It saw a distinction between the power of the Federal courts to restrain individual State officers, though performing functions required of them by State legislative act, and the power to entertain a suit against the State itself.

Conscious, however, of the storm of protest which had accompanied the assumption of such judicial authority and which might be certain to follow with renewed intensity, the court, in the majority opinion, somewhat ingeniously remarked:

"There is nothing in the case before us that ought to breed hostility to the customary operation of Federal courts of justice in cases of this character."

But to this remark Mr. Justice Harlan, in a forceful dissenting opinion, replied that it was just such an interference with the prerogatives of the States as this which would breed hostility and resentment. He said:

"Surely the right of a State to invoke the jurisdiction of its own courts is not less than the right of individuals to invoke the jurisdiction of a Federal court. The preservation of the dignity and sovereignty of the States, within the limits of their constitutional powers, is of the last importance and vital to the preservation of our system of government."

To Mr. Justice Harlan it appeared inconsistent with the whole scheme of our Government that the Federal judiciary could thus effectively close the doors of the State courts against the State itself.

The popular resentment against such acts by the Federal judiciary did in fact continue unabated. Also, a division of opinion continued within the court itself. But in the face of such criticism, the majority of the court did not recede from the position so taken. The flow of injunction cases to the Federal district courts continued.[17] However, for a time at least, there was some concession made to the demands of the States. Some were obtained through Congress in the form of restrictions placed upon the Federal judiciary in amendment to the Judicial Code.[18] Other concessions came from the Supreme Court itself in response, obviously, to the popular protest. A doctrine of comity was developed. The Federal courts, it was said, should not take jurisdiction in such cases too soon. In the well-known Prentis case,[19] it was said by Mr. Justice Holmes:

"The State of Virginia has endeavored to impose the highest safeguards possible upon the exercise of the great power given to the State corporation commission, not only by the character of the members of that commission, but by making its decisions dependent upon the assent of the same historic body that is intrusted with the preservation of the most valued constitutional rights, if the railroads see fit to appeal. It seems to us only a just recognition of the solicitude with which their rights have been guarded that they should make sure that the State, in its final legislative action, would not respect what they think their rights to be before resorting to the courts of the United States."

Therefore, it was said further, comity requires that the evidence in such cases "be laid in the first instance before the body having the last legislative word."[20]

It should be noted, however, that this rule of comity applies, as expressly stated, to legislative action. Rate making, it was definitely declared, is legislative, not judicial action, whether performed directly by the legislature or by other administrative tribunals. It may be asked why comity does not require also that the Federal courts respect the rights of the States in their judicial action. If a just recognition of the solicitude with which the rights of utilities have been guarded by the States in their provision not only for deliberate rate-fixing proceedings before competent administrative bodies, but also for adequate judicial review thereon in the courts of the State, why does not comity equally require that the utilities first make sure that the States in their final judicial action as well would not respect what they think their legal rights under the Constitution to be? Of course, it is true the utilities would then, after taking their case to the State courts, be foreclosed from going into the lower Federal courts to obtain an interlocutory injunction, but their right to an ultimate review by the Supreme Court of the United States would remain. And the right to an immediate restraining order in any case is only an equitable one, granted at the discretion of the court, and may be granted or denied by the State as well as the Federal judiciary.

DUE PROCESS IN FEDERAL ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION

It will be helpful in this discussion to go back at this point and examine another class of cases which follow the principle announced in Murray v. Hoboken Land Co., already discussed; cases defining the requirements of due process of law for the judicial review of legislative or executive action by Federal officers and commissions.

As already pointed out, the requirement of due process is a limitation upon Federal as well as State action. The same finality which was accorded, as we have seen, the findings of the Comptroller of the Treasury, has uniformly been accorded the findings of other Federal officers to whom Congress has delegated quasi-judicial authority. To the Secretary of Commerce, for instance, there has been given authority over matters of immigration and deportation of aliens. In the famous case of U. S. v. Ju Toy[21] the Secretary had heard the claim of Ju Toy, a Chinese, that he was an American citizen and might not be excluded from entry into the country, and the Secretary had found as a fact that Ju Toy was not a citizen. The Supreme Court held that this was not a reviewable matter judicially. The finding of the Secretary on this question was held final and conclusive. This was not a denial of due process of law, said Mr. Justice Holmes, for Ju Toy had been given a hearing, and due process does not require that such fact be determined by the judiciary, citing Murray v. Hoboken Land Co.

The same finality is accorded the findings of the Postmaster General. A corporation in Chicago was deprived of the privilege of using the United States mails because, as determined by him, the purpose of the use was to defraud the public. The Supreme Court was called upon to review such action by the Postmaster, General and held that his finding was conclusive.[22] "Due process of law," it was said "does not necessarily require the interference of the judicial power."

The same principle has been applied in reviewing the administrative acts of the Secretary of the Interior in matters involving land entries and withdrawals.[23] The same is true in customs and taxation determinations by Federal officials.[24]

Possibly these cases may properly be distinguished from those involving State administrative action on the theory that the Federal Government may entirely exclude all immigrants, may refuse all entries on public lands, and may permit only those whom it chooses to use the Federal Postal System, and, therefore, that it may delegate to its officials authority to make all findings of fact without restraint of due process. However that may be, the determination of the fact of citizenship, or of fraudulent conduct in the use of the mails, certainly may result in as serious a deprivation of life, liberty, or property as the findings of a State administrative body in the regulation of a utility corporation.

Another line of cases now to be considered can not, however, possibly be so distinguished.

[18] In 1911 (36 Stat. 1087, 1162) the provision taken from the Federal commerce act providing for the convening of a special 3-judge court in injunction cases was incorporated in sec. 266 of the Judicial Code. In 1913 (37 Stat. 1013) a proviso was inserted permitting a State in certain cases to stay the proceeding in the Federal court. And in 1914 (38 Stat. 737, 738) amendment was made to require a bond to secure costs and damages, and requiring the court to set forth its reasons for every injunction issued.

To certain Federal commissions Congress has delegated administrative powers comparable in every respect to those exercised by various State commissions—power to regulate business in the same manner as that which may be undertaken by the States themselves within the sphere of State authority. To the Public Service Commission of the District of Columbia, for example, there has been given the power to regulate the public utilities within the District. Similar regulatory powers, in the field of interstate commerce, have been conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Radio Commission, and others. Upon the Secretary of Commerce regulatory powers are conferred over commerce by air, and upon the Secretary of Agriculture the power to regulate packers and stockyards.

Congress has also expressly provided for the particular type of "review" which shall be given the findings of each of these bodies. In some cases a review of the findings of the administrative officer or body is in a court specially constituted by Congress, designated "legislative courts," which do not proceed "judicially," but may revise the action of the tribunal below and substitute their own conclusions, and, therefore, are declared to be merely a part of the machinery for carrying out the administrative purpose.[25] No judicial question is there presented, and, apparently, in some instances, no purely judicial review is possible.[26]

From the findings of others of these Federal administrative bodies, however, Congress has provided for a judicial review in constitutional courts, and has expressly defined the extent of such review. In such cases the evident intention of Congress was to make the findings of the administrative body, when made within the scope of its authority and supported by evidence, conclusive upon the judicial tribunals. Judicial review is not upon the law and the facts, permitting the reviewing court to weigh the evidence and to arrive at an independent judgment thereon, but is a review of the proceeding below for the purpose only of ascertaining whether the administrative body has accorded a proper hearing and has based its conclusions upon competent evidence—in other words, whether there was due process of law.

But, since the question before the legislative court in such cases is administrative and not judicial, the Supreme Court will not grant a judicial review. No purely judicial review having been provided for by Congress, the question arises whether all judicial review is not withheld, and whether the procedure provided, and approved by the Supreme Court, is not wholly opposed to the ruling in the Ohio Valley case.

For example, the Federal Trade Commission act[27] provides for the certification of the entire record made before the commission to the circuit court of appeals. It provided that the findings of the commission shall be final if supported by testimony. New testimony may be introduced upon review, if material, but the court may order such evidence to be first taken before the commission with the privilege of modifying its findings accordingly. In the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Curtis Publishing Co.[28] the Supreme Court denied the extent of the judicial review required under such statute in the following words:

"Manifestly, the court must inquire whether the commission's findings of fact are supported by evidence. If so supported they are conclusive."

Concerning further remarks made by the court in the main opinion relative to the duty of the court when additional evidence is offered, Justices Taft and Brandeis, doubting, stated in their separate opinion:

"* * * I think it of high importance that we should scrupulously comply with the evident intention of Congress that the Federal commission be made the fact-finding body, and that the court should, in its rulings, preserve the board's character as such, and not interject its views of the facts where there is any conflict in the evidence."

Another decision particularly pertinent to this discussion is that in Tagg Bros. v. Moorehead.[29] This case was brought up to the Supreme Court by appeal from a decree of the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska in an action brought to enjoin the Secretary of Agriculture in the enforcement of certain rates prescribed by him for the services performed by commission agents at the Omaha stockyards. Proceeding under an act of Congress conferring upon him such administrative duties, the Secretary of Agriculture had on his own motion suspended a tariff of charges filed by such agents at Omaha, and had voluminous testimony taken before an examiner. Upon the record made he concluded that some of their expenses were wasteful and unnecessary, and that the return of 7 per cent on their investment was unreasonable. He therefore suspended the tariff of charges filed and substituted one drawn by him. The 3-judge district court refused to restrain the enforcement of the order. The district court based its judgment upon a review of both the evidence taken before the Secretary and of additional evidence received before a special master. Appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, the contention of the agents being that the rate order of the Secretary was not supported by the evidence taken and was confiscatory.

Thus two important questions of procedure were presented; whether the district court was bound by the findings of fact made by the Secretary if supported by any evidence, and whether further testimony on the question of confiscation was admissible in the hearing before the court. On the latter point the Supreme Court refused to express an opinion, stating merely that there was thereby presented a serious question of procedure not argued by counsel. However, it stated, since the conclusion of the lower court conformed to the evidence, its decree denying an injunction should be sustained. But on the first point presented, the court's opinion is of greatest importance. Speaking for the undivided court, Mr. Justice Brandeis stated:

"A proceeding under section 316 of the Packers and Stockyards Act is a judicial review, not a trial de novo. The validity of an order of the Secretary, like an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, must be determined upon the record of the proceedings before him—save as there may be an exception of issues presenting claims of constitutional right, a matter which need not be considered or decided now. * * * On all other issues his findings must be accepted by the court as conclusive, if the evidence before him was legally sufficient to sustain them and there was no irregularity in the proceeding. To allow his findings to be attacked or supported in court by new evidence would substitute the court for the administrative tribunal as the rate-making body. Where it is believed that the Secretary erred in his findings because important evidence was not brought to his attention, the appropriate remedy is to apply for a rehearing before him or to institute new proceedings. He has the power and the duty to modify his order if new evidence warrants the change."

Here we have a recent and unequivocal declaration of the Supreme Court that the findings of fact of such an administrative officer, like those of the Interstate Commerce Commission, are not to be reviewed by a district court in a trial de novo, with the independent judgment of the court substituted for that of the administrative officer.

We will now turn to those cases which deal with the nature of the judicial review to be accorded the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

To the district courts of the United States there has been given jurisdiction both to enforce and to restrain the action of that commission. In the enforcement of reparation orders it is provided by statute that the findings of the commission shall be prima facie evidence of the facts found.[30] In the enforcement of other orders it is provided that if, after hearing, the court determines that the order was regularly made and duly served, the court shall enforce obedience.[31] In suits to restrain enforcement of orders made by the commission, the court is not limited in its review by any express provisions of the statute, except that in valuation proceedings its finding of value is made prima facie evidence of the value of the carrier's property. In all such cases, however, the Supreme Court holds that the district court may not set aside an order of the commission on the ground that the weight of the evidence does not support the findings. A typical declaration to that effect is found in Virginian Railway Co. v. United States[32] as follows:

"* * * There was clearly substantial evidence to support every fact specifically found. To consider the weight of the evidence before the commission, the soundness of the reasoning by which its conclusions were reached, or whether the findings are consistent with those made by it in other cases, is beyond our province. Whether a rate is unjustly discriminatory is a question on which the finding of the commission, supported by substantial evidence, is conclusive, unless there was some irregularity in the proceeding or some error in the application of rules of law."

Numerous cases containing similar language need not be cited.[33] It is a principle uniformly adhered to by the courts in reviewing orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

[26] The power of Congress to confer legislative powers upon such special courts is upheld. In the Bakelite case there is this statement:

"Legislative courts also may be created as special tribunals to examine and determine various matters arising between the Government and others, which from their nature do not require judicial determination and yet are susceptible of it. The mode of determining matters of this class is completely within congressional control. Congress may reserve to itself the power to decide, may delegate that power to executive officers, or may commit it to judicial tribunals."

[33] The cases are collected and excerpts therefrom quoted in a note to the opinion written by Mr. Justice Brandeis in the O'Fallon case (279 U. S. 461, 493), as follows:

"Alleged errors of the Interstate Commerce Commission in weighing evidence or drawing inferences therefrom have been urged as grounds for reversal in many cases. This court has consistently held that the commission's decisions as to such matters are not the proper subject for judicial review. See e. g. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 206 U. S. 142, 154, 51 L. ed. 995, 1000, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 206 U. S. 441, 51 L. ed. 1128, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois C. R. Co., 215 U. S. 452, 470, 54 L. ed. 280, 287, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Los Angeles Switching case (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.), 234 U. S. 294, 58 L. ed. 1319, 34

An attempt may be made to distinguish these various cases wherein the court has declared the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission, if supported by evidence, are conclusive. The point may be made that there was no question of confiscation involved. Although the commission's orders resulted in an immediate reduction of the carriers' net revenue, they did not involve the entire body of rate charges so as to deprive them permanently of an adequate return on their entire schedule of rates. But would such an argument be sound? Is there any valid basis, under the due-process requirement, for imposing a broader judicial review of the facts in a valuation case than in others? The Supreme Court itself has made no such distinction, but, on the contrary, in United States against Los Angeles & Salt Lake Ry.,[34] a valuation case, has reaffirmed the same principle in these words:

"The mere fact that Congress has, in terms, made 'all final valuations * * * and the classification thereof * * * prima facie evidence of the value of the property in all proceedings under the act to regulate commerce * * * in all judicial proceedings for the enforcement of the act * * * and in all judicial proceedings brought to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend, in whole or in part, any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission,' is, obviously, not a violation of the due-process clause justifying proceedings to annul the order."

And again, in the O'Fallon case,[35] one raising the question of confiscation, the court did not make such a distinction. The majority of the court decided the case solely upon the basis of statutory interpretation. And in the opinions of the dissenting justices there is no evidence that they were of the opinion that the fact of valuation must be found by the judiciary. Justice Brandeis, in his dissent, remarked:

"The commission is a fact-finding body. The question whether it must give to confessedly relevant facts evidential effect is solely one of adjective law.

"* * * But no case has been found in which this court has set aside an order on the ground that the commission failed to give effect to evidence which seemed to the court to be of probative force, or on the ground that the commission had drawn from the evidence an inference or conclusion deemed by the court to be erroneous. On the contrary, findings of the commission involving the appreciation or effect of evidence have been treated with the deference due to those of a tribunal 'informed by experience' and 'appointed by law' to deal with an intricate subject."

It clearly appears, therefore, that within the field of Federal administrative action the due-process requirement of the fifth amendment of the Constitution does not demand a judicial review of the administrative body's findings of fact to determine whether the weight of the evidence supports the findings made. Due process is completely satisfied if a regular hearing is had before the administrative body, and its conclusions based upon some competent evidence. For the judicial body, upon review judicially, the question is not whether the evidence supports the findings, but whether, merely, there is any evidence in the record to support them. The concern of the judiciary is not with the substantive result of the administrative action. It is entirely inappropriate, therefore, as the Supreme Court has declared, for the judicial tribunal to hear the evidence and try the issues de novo, or to substitute its conclusions for those of the administrative body.

OTHER STATE ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION

There is just one other class of cases on the question of due process of law to which reference need be made. These, again, are in the field of State administrative action, and are related closely to the State utility regulation cases. They are those involving valuations in taxation and condemnation proceedings.

In Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Ry. v. Backus,[36] the Supreme Court held valid a statute of the State of Indiana creating a board of tax commissioners to pass finally upon valuations made for tax purposes. Concerning such statute Mr. Justice Brewer stated:

"A hearing before judgment, with full opportunity to present all the evidence and the arguments which the party deems important, is all that can be adjudged vital. Rehearings, new trials are not essential to the due process of law, either in judicial or administrative proceedings.

"* * * If a single hearing is not due process, doubling it will not make it so; * * *.

* * * * * * *

"Whenever a question of fact is thus submitted to the determination of a special tribunal, its decision creates something more than a mere presumption of fact, and if such determination comes into inquiry before the courts, it can not be overthrown by evidence going only to show that the fact was otherwise than as so found and determined."

The case of C., B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Babcock[37] came up to the Supreme Court from an injunction suit in the United States district court for Nebraska. Again the question concerned a valuation made by a State board of equalization. This was the forceful language of Mr. Justice Holmes:

"It is said that this valuation is absurd and due to a misunderstanding of the table. But we have nothing to do with complaints of this nature, or with anything less than fraud, or a clear adoption of a fundamentally wrong principle. * * *

"* * * The board was created for the purpose of using its judgment and its knowledge. * * * Within its jurisdiction, except, as we have said, in case of fraud or a clearly shown adoption of wrong principles, it is the ultimate guardian of certain rights. The State has confided those rights to its protection and has trusted to its honor and capacity as it confides the protection of other social relations to the courts of law. Somewhere there must be an end."

Dohany v. Rogers[38] involved a valuation by commissioners appointed to value property taken under the Michigan Highway Commission act. Mr. Justice Stone made this declaration on the requirement of due process:

"The due-process clause does not guarantee to a citizen of a State any particular form or method of State procedure. Under it he may neither claim a right to trial by jury nor a right of appeal. Its requirements are satisfied if he has reasonable notice and a reasonable opportunity to be heard and to present his claim or defense, due regard being had to the nature of the proceeding and the character of the rights which may be affected by it."

THE RATE-MAKING FUNCTION

Thus far we have examined a few of the leading cases to develop historically a problem which has given rise to much discussion and one which remains vital to-day. We have seen that the due-process requirement for judicial review of administrative action is not uniform. The basis for the variation in the application of this constitutional provision defies analysis. There is no explanation for the variation in the extent of judicial review demanded between different types of State administrative action, or the difference between similar classes of State and Federal action, both restricted by the same constitutional requirement.

It must be true, as recently said by Mr. Justice Stone, that the requirements of due process are satisfied if a citizen has been given a reasonable opportunity to be heard and to present his claim or defense, "due regard being had to the nature of the proceeding and the character of the rights which may be affected by it." And so, having due regard for the nature of the proceedings before State regulatory bodies, whose members are "appointed by law and informed by experience," the question naturally arises: Why must the determination of such bodies be subjected to a review before a judicial tribunal on the law and the facts when not required of other administrative bodies exercising similar functions?

Coming back for a moment to the Ohio Valley case; it should be observed that the court has accepted for its major premise the doctrine of the separation of powers. Rate making, it has been said, is legislative action. A judicial review of a rate order on both the law and the facts is required not because it is an order of a body which does not bear the title of a court of law, but because a rate order, whether by commission or court, looks to the future and prescribes a rule for the future, and, therefore, is legislative in character. As expounded in the well-known Prentis case,[39] the distinction between a legislative and a judicial act is found, not in the name or nature of the body rendering judgment, but in the nature of the act itself. Some inferior courts, both State and Federal, as we have seen, have been empowered to aid commissions in their administrative functions. Yet, when so acting, they are not judicial tribunals. Within their judicial sphere their findings, based on competent evidence, are conclusive. But when a State court or commission renders a judgment in aid of the legislative process, its findings, seemingly, are entitled to no respect whatever when appeal is taken to a purely judicial tribunal.[40]

The rule of the Ohio Valley decision has almost uniformly been criticized by legal reviewers.[41] It is grounded upon the false premise that commission rate making must, under the separation of powers concept, be classified as a wholly legislative function. Even should that premise be accepted, it does not follow that the findings of the legislative branch must, under the due-process requirement, be subjected to full judicial review. That was not the requirement of due process prior to 1890, nor is it a requirement consistently applied by the Supreme Court to-day, except in the field of State utility regulation.

In many respect, it is submitted, a State administrative commission is a judicial body. It determines legal rights in disputes between adversary parties; it awards reparations; it passes upon the reasonableness of rates. All of these are functions belonging also to the courts.[42] In their primary field of rate regulation, such tribunals are adequately equipped as expert fact-finding bodies. In their hearings they observe all the essential safeguards known to courts of law for the presentation and examination of evidence. The record made is open to inspection, and their conclusions thereon preserved in written opinions, which in many States now constitute a considerable body of precedent in an important and technical field. To their judgments, therefore, there should be accorded a very wide margin of finality, the same finality which is readily conceded to the judgments of inferior courts of law, and certainly equal to that accorded to similar administrative bodies of Federal creation. Review should be for the correction of error, not for the substitution of another judgment.

Before the rendition of the decision in the Ohio Valley case it was taken for granted that the determinations of a State administrative body were to be treated by the courts as at least presumptively correct. The Supreme Court had repeatedly so declared. In spite of the acceptance of the doctrine that State commission action was restrainable by the Federal judiciary, the Supreme Court theretofore had frequently stated that the right was not without some restraint. A rule for the guidance of the courts was laid down which had in some measure allayed the antagonism which naturally followed the injunctive process. In San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, for example, it was declared:

"But it should be remembered that the judiciary ought not to interfere with the collection of rates established under legislative sanction unless they are so plainly and palpably unreasonable as to make their enforcement equivalent to the taking of property for public use without such compensation as under all the circumstances is just both to the owner and to the public; that is, judicial interference should never occur unless the case presents, clearly and beyond all doubt, such a flagrant attack upon the rights of property under the guise of regulations as to compel the court to say that the rates prescribed will necessarily have the effect to deny just compensation for private property taken for the public use."

Again in Louisville & Nashville Ry. v. Garrett,[44] another injunction case, it was said:

"The rate-making power necessarily implies a range of legislative discretion; and, so long as the legislative action is within its proper sphere, the courts are not entitled to interpose and upon their own investigation of traffic conditions and transportation problems to substitute their judgment with respect to the reasonableness of rates for that of the legislature or of the railroad commission exercising its delegated power."

In Darnell v. Edwards,[45] there is this statement:

"It is well established that in a question of rate-making there is a strong presumption in favor of the conclusions reached by an experienced administrative body after a full hearing."

And in People ex rel. New York & Queens Gas Co. v. McCall,[46] decided just three years before the Ohio Valley case, the Supreme Court admonished the lower Federal court in these plain words: "* * * the action of the commission complained of was not arbitrary or capricious, but was based on very substantial evidence, and therefore that, even if the courts differed with the commission as to the expediency or wisdom of the order, they are without authority to substitute for its judgment their views of what may be reasonable or wise."

We need not pause to consider what has been the trend since that unexpected decision in the Ohio Valley case. The decision remains unreversed and unexplained. The State courts have accepted it reluctantly. The subordinate Federal courts, it may be implied, have usually followed its principle without question. Occasionally, it is true, a more liberal Federal court has appreciated the result certain to follow from the exercise of such authority and has been disposed to accord to the findings of the State body some degree of conclusiveness.[47] Such cases are, however, the exception rather than the rule, and the flow of State utility regulation cases to the Federal courts by the injunctive process continues without sign of abatement.[48]

The State administrative tribunals, quasi-judicial as well as legislative, are no longer entitled to a respected place in the administration of State affairs. The Federal courts sit as boards of censors on every State enactment or administrative order that affects the property of utility corporations. Precisely that result which evidently was earlier feared by the Supreme Court when it rendered its decision in Ex parte Young[49] but did not, nevertheless, deter it when it said:

"There is nothing in the case before us which ought properly to breed hostility to the customary operation of the Federal courts of justice in cases of this character," has become a reality. State officers, in the administration of the duties imposed upon them by statute have not only become timid and subservient in the performance of those necessary duties, but have become actually hostile to the Federal judiciary.

And it is not surprising that this feeling of antagonism toward the Federal courts should exist. Not only do the qualified officers of the States naturally resent the usurpation of their functions by the judiciary, particularly the Federal judiciary, but they see their sincere efforts in the regulation of utilities to be a futile endeavor. The great initial expense incurred in valuing the utility's property in the usual rate proceeding before a State commission is needlessly doubled in a trial of the same issues before the judicial body, an expense which ultimately falls upon the rate payers themselves. Restraining orders and interlocutory injunctions are issued upon affidavits alone, and final injunctions granted usually not upon a consideration of the record made before the commission, but upon evidence adduced anew; evidence involving highly technical issues of valuation, accounting, depreciation, cost of financing, and a myriad issues pertaining to expenses of operation. And upon these highly technical issues the courts express their conclusions with an assurance that they are mere questions of legal right upon which they are given preeminent control.

The objections to such procedure are summed up in the report of William J. Donovan, counsel for the Commission for the State of New York for the Revision of the Public Service Commission Law, page 155 (1930), as follows:

"The reason for popular dissatisfaction with this system of revaluation by special masters in chancery is not hard to see. There are two distinct objections to this type of judicial review:

"(1) The second valuation of the utility property by the master is not only costly and time-consuming but serves no useful purpose.

"(2) The second basic objection to Federal judicial review in its present form rests on the theory that rate making is not only a problem of the mere interpretation of established law. The law demands that the utility rate or charge be fixed only after a proper weighing of various indices of value. Accountants, economists, and engineers dispute over these indices and their application. To resolve these disputes is the task of the judge. Plainly the proper resolution of these disputed theories requires understanding of matters far removed from the construction of statutes and the reconciliation of previous judicial decisions. The judge must himself appreciate the significance of certain economic phenomena. This important social problem should be preserved in the hands of the State judges. The State should not be required to surrender to the judges of the national courts so essential a key to the welfare of its people. We are convinced that some method should be evolved to insure to the courts of this State an opportunity to make a judicial determination of the matters involved in rate cases before any such determination shall be made by the Federal courts."

And see also the statement of the District Court for the Southern District of Indiana in Greencastle Water Works v. Public Service Commission of Indiana (1929), 31 Fed. C., title 28, sec. 380), see article by Pogue, 41 Harvard Law Review, 623 (1928). An analysis of the work of the Supreme Court for the 10-year period from 1921 to 1930, inclusive, reveals that 52 injunction cases went up to the Supreme Court from inferior Federal courts involving public utility regulations alone. About 60 more involved other forms of State administrative action. Only 23 utility regulation cases reached the Supreme Court by way of review of decisions of highest State courts. There were, of course, numerous injunction suits in the Federal district courts which did not reach the Supreme Court.

CONCLUSIONS

We arrive now to the problem of answering the question first proposed: What remedy may properly be applied for the correction of this condition so provocative of friction and conflict between State and Federal jurisdictions. That there exists a demand for a revision of our judicial machinery which permits the judiciary to thus revise the determinations of duly appointed State administrative bodies is evidenced by the various proposals made in Congress designed to effect such result.[50] These proposals will now be considered.

In designing a remedy two considerations must be borne in mind. First, there must be preserved within the States an adequate judicial review for the protection of utilities against invasion by the administrative branch of constitutional rights. This is a problem for the States themselves and need not here be considered. Most of the States now have adequate procedure to that end.[51] Unduly restrictive as the rule in the Ohio Valley case seems to be, it does not prevent these States from distributing legislative and judicial powers as they see fit nor does it circumscribe their right to create special regulatory bodies which shall in the first instance find the facts and declare rights within their special fields unrestricted by other State judicial tribunals except upon questions of constitutional right.

The second consideration is purely one of Federal policy. Whatever may be required by due process of law in the way of judicial review of administrative action in the courts of the States, it does not require also that all State administrative action be reviewable in the inferior Federal courts by the injunctive process. And certainly there is no constitutional requirement in such a suit that the facts adduced before the State body be ignored, nor that a hearing de novo be had before the Federal tribunal with the substitution of its judgment for that of the State body on all the facts commonly in dispute in a rate proceeding. It is here that we find the chief cause of the existing resentment against the Federal system and the end to which remedial legislation should be directed.

That Congress possesses full authority to revise the Federal injunctive procedure to meet the demands of the States can not be questioned. It has the power to limit the jurisdiction of subordinate Federal courts, or to deprive them of their injunctive jurisdiction entirely. They derive their power solely from authority of Congress.[52]

A review of the legislation proposed to date by Congress reveals that the demands of the States for remedial legislation have so far been based upon the belief that the Federal courts should be entirely deprived of jurisdiction to grant injunctions in such cases. Although the bills proposed have taken various forms, the effect of each is to deny injunctive power to the Federal courts if adequate judicial review exists in the courts of the State. Yet no attempt has been made to make the prohibition applicable to all cases involving the validity of State statutes or administrative orders made pursuant to such statutes. Injunctive power is denied only in cases affecting public utilities, and, by a few of the bills, further restricted to cases involving the validity of an order fixing the rates of public utilities.[53]

If the issue is primarily one of "State rights," the right of a State to have the question of the validity of its own statutes and administrative orders under the Federal Constitution first tried in the courts of the State, no basis exists for limiting the injunctive power of the Federal courts to statutes or orders affecting public utilities alone.

As an abstract principle of political or legal theory it may be contended that the original jurisdiction granted to the Federal courts in 1875 to restrain State officers in the enforcement of a State law alleged to be in violation of the Constitution should now be wholly withdrawn.[54] In such event there would appear to be no reason for the singling out of State utility commissions from other perhaps equally important State administrative bodies. The fundamental right of the States to construe their own laws and to pass judicially in the first instance upon all State administrative action would require that not only orders affecting utilities, but all other State administrative action be freed from Federal injunctive interference. Constitutional rights might still be fully protected by appeal from the highest State tribunal to the highest Federal tribunal, but the fundamental rights of the States, nevertheless, be observed. If, as has been suggested, there be added to such a broad withdrawal of injunctive power the proviso that a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy be available in the courts of the States, no constitutional rights of citizens affected by any State administrative order could possibly be jeopardized.

If it is, however, deemed advisable and proper not to urge such a broad measure withdrawing from the Federal courts all injunctive power over State action, but to confine such limitation to cases involving State utility regulation, Senate bill No. 3085, introduced by Senator WAGNER, of New York, in the last session (Seventy-first), in general, meets the requirements.[55]

[50] In the Seventy-first Congress 9 bills were introduced designed to limit the power of the Federal courts to issue injunctions in such cases: House bills Nos. 132, 135, 161, 9185, 9228, 9330, 9484, 9501, and Senate bill No. 3085. A similar measure was proposed in the Sixty-seventh Congress following the Ohio Valley decision. (H. R. 10212.) Hearings on this bill were had before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives on Apr. 25, 1922 (serial 34, pt. 2).

[52] The power of Congress to withhold or restrict the jurisdiction of the lower Federal courts is clearly expressed in Kline v. Burke Construction Co., 260 U. S. 226 (1922), as follows:

"The right of a litigant to maintain an action in the Federal court on the ground that there is a controversy between citizens of different States is not one derived from the Constitution of the United States, unless in a very indirect sense. Certainly it is not a right granted by the Constitution. The applicable provisions, so far as necessary to be quoted here, are contained in Article III. Section 1 of that article provides: 'The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time establish.' By section 2 of the same article it is provided that the judicial power shall extend to certain designated cases and controversies, and, among them 'to controversies * * * between citizens of different States. * * *.' The effect of these provisions is not to vest jurisdiction in the inferior courts over the designated cases and controversies, but to delimit those in respect of which Congress may confer jurisdiction upon such courts as it creates. Only the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is derived directly from the Constitution. Every other court created by the General Government derives its jurisdiction wholly from the authority of Congress. That body may give, withhold, or restrict such jurisdiction at its discretion, provided it be not extended beyond the boundaries fixed by the Constitution."

[53] Senate bill No. 3085, introduced by Senator WAGNER of New York, reads as follows: "To amend section 24 of the judicial code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits brought by or against public utility corporations.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 24 of the judicial code, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: 'Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, a district court shall not have jurisdiction thereunder of a suit brought by or against a public utility corporation, and/or any director, officer, employee, or receiver thereof in his capacity as such (1) if the corporation is engaged in business as a public utility solely within one State or if the suit relates solely to the intrastate business of the corporation, and jurisdiction is based solely upon the ground that the suit arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, or (2) if the suit is brought by or against a citizen of a State in which the corporation is engaged in business as a public utility, and jurisdiction is based solely upon the ground that the suit is between citizens of different States.'

"SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall not affect suits commenced in the district courts, either originally or by removal, prior to its passage; and all such suits shall be continued, proceedings therein had, appeals therein taken, and judgments therein rendered, in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed."

Two bills introduced in the House by O'CONNELL of New York, Nos. 9228 and 9501, are similar to the above, but are limited to orders affecting rates.

[54] See article by Lockwood, Maw, and Rosenberry, 43 Harvard Law Review, p. 426, in which the following addition to the Judicial Code was suggested:

"No injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of a State or ordinance of a municipality by restraining the action of any officer of such State or municipality in the enforcement or execution of such statute, or in the enforcement or execution of an order made by an administrative board or commission acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State or ordinance of such municipality shall be issued or granted by any Justice of the Supreme Court or by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of such statute or ordinance where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy may be had at law or in equity in the courts of the State.

"Provided, That in any case in which it is satisfactorily shown, after 10 days' notice to the State attorney general, that there is unreasonable and prejudicial delay in the accordance of the aforesaid remedy in the State courts it shall be competent for the Federal court to entertain a suit for injunctive relief in manner and form as if there had been no adequate remedy in the State court."

[55] The following bill, similar to the Wagner bill, is suggested: "Section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 1091), is hereby amended by the insertion at the end of the first paragraph thereof the provision following: 'Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, no district court of the United States or judge thereof shall have jurisdiction to entertain any bill of complaint to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order affecting the rates to be charged by a public utility, not interfering with interstate commerce, made by an administrative board or commission of any State when acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State, on the ground of the unconstitutionality of such order, where such order has been made after hearing upon notice and where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy may be had at law or in equity in the courts of such State.'"

Another approach to a solution of the problem may be made by revising the existing machinery whereby the Federal courts exercise injunctive control over State administrative action, rather than to deny the power entirely. If the necessity for some Federal injunctive power is conceded, the question remains as to what equitable procedure in such cases will best protect constitutional rights and at the same time be most conducive to comity and good will between State and Federal bodies.

Should the review of State commission action given by subordinate Federal courts in injunction cases be in fact a review to determine merely whether the utility has had due process of law, much of the resentment, no doubt, now entertained by the States against the existing procedure would be allayed.

If this is the end to be attained, the remedy is apparent. It is necessary only to revise the injunctive procedure so as to make the review accorded by the Federal courts identical with that now given to comparable Federal administrative bodies. Congress has already shown the way.[56]

Only one other observation need be made. It may be suggested that if the States entertain any resentment toward the Federal system which permits State statutes and administrative orders to be tested in the Federal courts without permitting the State judiciary first to pass upon their validity, the States may take advantage of a privilege already accorded them by a proviso contained in section 266 of the Judicial Code to try such questions in their own courts.[57] But it is doubtful whether the use of that procedure, even if actually available, would dispel the resentment against the assumption of jurisdiction by the Federal courts in the first instance.

But we believe that it can be conclusively shown that such proviso, as it stands, does not meet the practical situation confronting the States.[58] Until recently no State has attempted to revise its procedure so as to meet the terms of the provision. It imposes the condition that a stay must be granted by the State court whether equity requires it in a given case or not. It does not provide that the final judgment of the State court will thereafter be res adjudicata, and reviewable only by appeal to the Supreme Court as are other judgments of the State tribunal. And, moreover, the provision obviously applies only to suits wherein an interlocutory injunction is sought.[59]

Should the Federal injunctive power not be withdrawn altogether, some amendment to this proviso may remedy its more obvious defects, and may encourage the States to invoke the procedure permitted.

[56] Section 266 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 380), with suggested additions in italic and omissions in parentheses, is here given in full:

"No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of a State by restraining the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute, or in the enforcement or execution of an order made by an administrative board or commission acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State, shall be issued or granted by any justice of the Supreme Court, or by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of such statute, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit judge, and the other two may be either circuit or district judges, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. Whenever such application as aforesaid is presented to a justice of the Supreme Court, or to a judge, he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application two other judges: Provided, however, That one of such three judges shall be a justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit judge. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the governor and to the attorney general of the State, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That if of opinion that irreparable loss or damage would result to the complainant unless a temporary restraining order is granted, any justice of the Supreme Court, or any circuit or district judge, may grant such temporary restraining order at any time before such hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction, but such temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice as aforesaid. The hearing upon such application for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited, and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing, an interlocutory injunction in such case. The requirement respecting the presence of three judges shall also apply to the final hearing in such suit in the district court; and a direct appeal to the Supreme Court may be taken from a final decree granting or denying a permanent injunction in such suit: Provided, however, That in all suits brought to enjoin, suspend, or restrain in whole or in part any orders made by an administrative board or commission of a State acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State, the record made before such board or commission shall be admissible in evidence before the court, and the findings of such board or commission, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such evidence is material, the court may permit such additional evidence to be received upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper. It is further provided that if, before the final hearing of (such application) any suit brought to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement or execution of a statute of a State or of an order made by an administrative board or commission acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State, a suit shall have been brought in a court of the State having jurisdiction thereof under the laws of such State to enforce such statute or order, accompanied by a stay in such State court of proceedings under such statute or order pending the determination of such suit by such State court, all proceedings in any court of the United States to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed pending the final determination of such suit in the courts of the State. Upon the final determination of such suit in the courts of the State, the proceeding in the court of the United States shall be dismissed. Such stay in the court of the United States may be vacated upon proof made after hearing and notice of 10 days served upon the attorney general of the State, that the suit in the State courts is not being prosecuted with diligence and good faith."

[57] See last proviso in sec. 266 with suggested changes, note 56, supra.

[58] See article by Pogue, note 48, supra. The futility of any attempt on the part of the States to pursue the course provided under this section has been ably presented by counsel of the New York Transit Commission in his recommendations to the commission for the revision of the Public Service Commission Laws of New York, 1930, pp. 156–158.

[59] The ineffectiveness of the proviso is seen by the holding in the only case in which it has been construed. See Union Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Railroad Comm. of Kentucky (1926), 17 Fed. (2d) 143.

INVITATION OF THE PORTLAND (ME.) HISTORICAL SOCIETY

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate an invitation from the Historical Society of Portland, Me., and affiliated organizations, which will be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

The invitation is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The Portland Historical Society and affiliated organizations, on behalf of the people of Portland and the State of Maine, extend to you, your families and friends a most cordial invitation to attend the celebration on July 4, 1932, at the City Hall auditorium and any of the many subsequent exercises during the year in observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the first settlement of the world's best-loved poet's "beautiful town that is seated by the sea" and the one hundredth anniversary of its city charter.

ARTHUR CHARLES JACKSON,
President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a telegram from Gen. Wilder S. Metcalf, T. J. Sweeney, sr., Irving Hill, Chancellor E. H. Lindley, A. B. Weaver, W. C. Simons, and E. G. L. Harbour, dated Lawrence, Kans., the 7th instant, favoring the retention of the appropriations for the Board of Indian Commissioners in the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted at the annual meeting of the Young Women's Christian Association, at Pasadena, Calif., favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the American Hotel Association of the United States and Canada, through its executive council in session at Chicago, Ill., favoring the passage of legislation restoring to the several States the control of the liquor trade, provided such legislation shall not conflict with the duty of the Federal Government to protect each State against violation of its laws by citizens of other States, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the United States Patriotic Society, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the making of appropriations to distribute free of charge "The Constitution of the United States and What It Contains" in simplified form, "Makers of History," including messages from George Washington and other great Americans, etc., for the purpose of teaching the people, especially children, their rights and duties under the law, so that recourse will be had to the Government for relief in trying times and not to criminals and communists, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REED presented the petition of Chapter II of the Colonial Dames of America, of Wakefield, Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the making of adequate appropriations for the national defense and also opposing any reductions in the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or their components or civilian supplements, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRISON presented resolutions adopted by the south-wide meeting of the State Cotton Cooperatives, held at New Orleans, La., March 3, 4, and 5, 1932, protesting against the activities of persons seeking to hamper the effectiveness of the Federal Farm Board and the operation of the agricultural marketing act, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KING presented a resolution adopted by the Clarke Fork Development Association, Bridger, Mont., favoring the passage of the legislation known as the King bill, to reinstate oil and gas prospecting permits granted prior to March 12, 1929, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. TYDINGS presented resolutions adopted by groups of the Polish National Alliance, of Baltimore, Md., favoring the passage of legislation proclaiming October 11 in each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying for the maintenance of adequate appropriations for the National Guard and military encampments, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COSTIGAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Colorado, praying for the elimination of all unnecessary and wasteful expense in the operation of the Federal Government, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented memorials of 32 citizens of Kit Carson and 46 citizens of Pueblo, in the State of Colorado, remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for the closing of barber shops on Sunday in the District of Columbia, or other restrictive religious measures, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Free Methodist Church of Loveland, Rev. A. E. Lathrop, pastor; the Seventh Day Adventist Church of Monte Vista, representing 49 people; the Marsh Parent-Teacher Association of Monte Vista, representing 62 people; the official board of Rimm Community Church of Longmont, route 4, J. R. Jones, pastor; the First Baptist Church of Loveland, representing 400 people; the church board of the Nazarene Church of Haxtun; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Baptist Church, by Mrs. Jarngin, clerk pro tempore; Luther Martin, clerk, Adventist Church; Methodist Church, W. Hanford Miller, pastor; and the First Presbyterian Church, by W. H. Hamilton, elder, all in the State of Colorado, protesting against the proposed resubmission of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution to the States, and favoring the making of adequate appropriations for law enforcement and education in law observance, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by the American Hotel Association of the United States and Canada, through its executive council, in session at Chicago, Ill., favoring the passage of legislation restoring to the several States the control of the liquor trade, provided such legislation shall not conflict with the duty of the Federal Government to protect each State against violation of its laws by citizens of other States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry members of Columbia University, New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of legislation restricting the use of living dogs in scientific investigation, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Eliza M. Stevenson Council, No. 262, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the passage of legislation for the deportation of alien communists, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Cecil R. Perkins, chairman of the legislative committee, Seaboard Employees Cooperative Association, of Savannah, Ga., praying for the passage of Senate bill 2793, to regulate the transportation of persons and property in interstate and foreign commerce by motor carriers operating on the public highways, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Jamestown, N. Y., remonstrating against the imposition of a Federal tax on gasoline, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the St. Lawrence County (N. Y.) Dairymen's League Cooperative Association (Inc.), at Ogdensburg, N. Y., favoring the making of a treaty between Canada and the United States for the construction of an ocean waterway on the St. Lawrence River and Great Lakes for the development of electric power, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by groups of the Polish National Alliance of Buffalo and New Brighton, in the State of New York, favoring the passage of legislation proclaiming October 11 in each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fulton, N. Y., praying for the adoption of the so-called Sparks-Capper "stop alien representation amendment" to the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions and papers, in the nature of petitions, of sundry citizens and religious and temperance organizations in the State of New York, praying for the maintenance of the prohibition law and its enforcement, and protesting against proposals for the resubmission of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution to the States, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PER CAPITA CIRCULATION OF MONEY

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in connection with legislation proposed and pending to restore lasting confidence in banks generally and as indicating the apparent urgent need for some form of legislation which would safeguard the interests of stockholders as well as depositors, perhaps along the line of provisions contained in the bill S. 3826 introduced by me a few days ago, I request that an Associated Press dispatch which I send to the desk be printed in the RECORD. The dispatch appears in the newspapers of the 8th instant.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The dispatch is as follows:

FUNDS IN CIRCULATION DROP BY $37,189,973—PER CAPITA CIRCULATION OF MONEY ALSO DROPS OFF 33 CENTS, TREASURY SAYS

A decrease of $37,189,973 in money in circulation on February 29, as compared with the previous month, was shown to-day in the monthly statement of the Treasury.

There was $5,604,015,073 in circulation at the end of February, as compared with $5,641,205,046 on January 31.

The per capita circulation of money dropped off 33 cents to $44.93.

Money of all kinds in the United States amounted to $9,320,790,263, a decrease of $57,212,439. Total gold coin and bullion amounted to $4,353,489,470, as compared with $4,414,818,859 at the end of January.

The Treasury had $3,441,412,861 in gold, and outside of the Treasury there was a total of $912,076,609, of which $505,289,145 was held by Federal reserve banks and agents and $406,787,464 was in circulation.

The amount of gold outside the Treasury declined $9,000,000, as compared with the previous month; that held by Federal reserve banks and agents dropped approximately $9,000,000, and that in circulation fell off $1,000,000.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask leave to have read at the desk a letter from Mr. A. G. Prichard, chairman of the silver committee of the Chamber of Commerce of Tacoma, Wash., who is also a member of the International Chamber of Commerce, which met here recently. It is a letter addressed to Hon. WESLEY L. JONES. I have asked the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] whether he has any objection to having the letter placed in the RECORD, and he said he had none; so I ask unanimous consent that it be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

JANUARY 28, 1932.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Inclosed please find article which appeared in this morning's paper showing where three banks closed their doors in Tacoma yesterday. This, coming on top of the $2,000,000,000 so-called prosperity corporation which has been formed, is certainly staggering the confidence of the people in the present administration. While I believe the formation of the corporation was perhaps necessary to alleviate conditions, yet it is not correcting the fundamental cause for the present depression.

It is to be hoped that the so-called silver bloc in the Senate can get together soon and decide on some agreed-upon plan to restore silver, so that our trade with the silver countries can again be revived. The lumber industry is in a most precarious condition on account of the falling off in foreign trade, and at the request of a meeting of business leaders in Tacoma yesterday I am writing you urging your immediate action and help to bring about some kind of a definite program that can be announced toward the restoration of silver.

Very respectfully yours,

A. G. PRICHARD,
Chairman Silver Committee, Tacoma Chamber of Commerce.

PROPOSED THEATER-ADMISSION TAX

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I present numerous telegrams protesting against the proposed theater-admission tax, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams will be received, noted in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The telegrams in the nature of memorials, remonstrating against the imposition of a Federal tax on theater admissions, presented by Mr. KENDRICK and referred to the Committee on Finance, are from C. W. Morgan, mayor city of Rawlins; W. L. Alcorn, editor Rawlins Republican; and J. E. Bangs, all of Rawlins; Acme Theater, by Mrs. Lee Mote, of Riverton; Fred E. Bezold, manager Lotus, of Sheridan; Walter Bradley; Charles F. Mallin; State Federation of Labor, by Paul O'Brien, secretary; Paramount Theater, by Mel Todd; J. F. Weybrecht, mayor, H. A. Brookhart, commissioner, E. J. Smalley, commissioner; Wyoming Eagle, by T. S. McCracken; the Tribune Leader, by Win Cox; Lincoln Theater, by Chet Miller, manager; and Fred E. Warren, all of Cheyenne; Barbers Local No. 726; Painters and Decorators Local No. 370; Retail Clerks Local No. 102; Bakery Workers Local No. 350; Butcher Workers Local No. 306; Motion Picture Projectionists Local No. 426, by E. R. Trollope, secretary; the Casper Times, by C. W. Barton; the Casper Tribune-Herald; Laundry Workers Local No. 85; Casper Trades and Labor Assembly; J. Kent Kinniburgh, secretary-manager Casper Chamber of Commerce; Rialto Theatre (Inc.), by E. J. Schulte; and P. P. Anderson, chairman Theater Owners, all of Casper, all in the State of Wyoming.

PROPOSED MODIFICATION OF THE PROHIBITION LAW

Mr. KENDRICK. I also present memorials signed by hundreds of people of my State remonstrating against any modification of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution or the prohibition law. One of the interesting features of the memorials is that hundreds of the signers are young people in schools who will cast their first votes at the next election.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorials will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST SPANISH-SPEAKING WORKERS

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a petition signed by E. M. Quintana, Jacobo Arcelono, Jose T. Analla, M. M. Pacheco, Rumaldo Lopez, Patricio Cordova, and J. I. Padilla, representing the board of directors of the Spanish-American Citizens' Association, in the State of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent that the body of the petition may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and the body of it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The undersigned members of the board of directors of the Spanish-American Citizens' Association respectfully present the following facts and petition that such action as can within the limits prescribed by law be taken to correct the conditions hereinafter set forth:

The Spanish-American Citizens' Association is an organization composed of 800 Spanish-speaking citizens of the United States and of the State of Colorado, and this active membership represents some 15,000 American citizens residing in and near Denver and some 90,000 within the limits of the State of Colorado.

The undersigned directors respectfully show that there is now being practiced by practically all industrial organizations within the State of Colorado an unjust discrimination against Spanish-speaking workers, who are consistently refused opportunities for employment for no other reason or upon no other grounds than that the applicant is of Spanish descent and Spanish-speaking. The undersigned petitioners are descendants of the original settlers and colonizers of six States of the Union, which are represented by that number of stars in the American flag. Our people are not limited to the city wards or any particular industrial field, but are an integral part of entire States. We further assert that our rights to equal treatment with all other citizens were ratified by treaty 83 years ago and that the descendants of all white Spanish-American settlers and colonies must be received and recognized as in all respects the equals industrially, politically, and socially with all other Americans.

Your undersigned petitioners further protest against the influx into the State of Colorado of foreign labor brought into the State for the sugar harvest and at the conclusion thereof left without adequate means or opportunity to support themselves thereafter, and this influx of foreign labor has in the past seriously prejudiced the Spanish-speaking citizens in the industrial crisis above complained of.

Your undersigned petitioners in this connection further declare themselves in favor of all enacted laws for the restriction of the hours of labor throughout American industries and insist on the maintenance in all respects of American standards, including fair and living wages.

Conditions and opportunities for honest labor and honest employment have been steadfastly growing worse over the last few years, and some measures must be resorted to if the Spanish-speaking citizenry of the State is to survive and maintain respectability of any kind whatsoever.

Your undersigned petitioners show that the Spanish-American Citizens' Association is strongly opposed to the employment of child labor and the working of children in the fields or elsewhere, and they desire to keep their children in school and educate them to the end that they may grow up and become substantial American citizens. By reason of the industrial discrimination now being practiced against these people, many citizens have been required to take their children from the public schools because of their inability to maintain them there.

Your petitioners earnestly petition that such appeal as lies within the power of the United States Senator to whom this petition is addressed to take any such measures as can be taken to correct the deplorable conditions existing among law-abiding Spanish-American citizens be forthwith made and resorted to. This protest is primarily made against the discrimination of industry against Spanish-speaking labor, the importation into the State of the foreign labor by whose labor the sugar industry and other industries profit at the expense of the American Spanish-speaking citizens, and lastly the widespread use and employment of children of tender years in such work, thus depriving adults of a means of livelihood.

Conditions of the Spanish-speaking citizens must in some way be corrected and opportunities must in some way be presented for them to become self-sustaining.

Very respectfully submitted.

THE SPANISH-AMERICAN CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION.

RETRENCHMENT IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I hold in my hand and send to the desk petitions from sundry citizens of New Jersey making the following request:

First, a thorough reduction of the Federal salary and wage scale; second, the elimination of all Government positions and functions which constitute a duplication of the position or function in another department or bureau; and, third, the elimination of every bureau, position, and function in the Federal service the maintenance of which is not consonant with the strictest economy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be received and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

OPERATIONS OF THE FEDERAL FARM BOARD

Mr. BROUSSARD presented resolution adopted at the south-wide meeting of the State Cotton Cooperatives held at New Orleans, La., March 3, 4, and 5, 1932, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted at the Southwide meeting of the State Cotton Cooperatives held at New Orleans, La., March 3, 4, and 5, 1932

Whereas the movement among farmers to cooperatively market their own products is rapidly gaining in momentum, volume, and efficiency in accordance with the newly established national policy toward agriculture; and

Whereas the organized opposition of the merchants, traders, and speculators in such products are endeavoring to hamper and embarras the progress of this movement in the interest of their own selfish ends; and

Whereas the activities of those referred to consist of attempts to prejudice Congress and the public against the agricultural marketing act and the Federal Farm Board, while in reality they are endeavoring to undermine the effectiveness of cooperative marketing; and

Whereas another part of these activities consists in embarrassing the Farm Board in its financial operations: Therefore, be it

Resolved, By the south-wide conference of the officers and directors of the State Cotton Cooperatives from California, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, representing 208,052 actual grower members, in annual meeting assembled at New Orleans this 5th day of March, 1932, do hereby express our resentment of the tactics used by our enemies in carrying out their selfish and unpatriotic purpose, and we are amazed that many of the individuals and firms with whom we have in the past carried on mutually satisfactory business relations in the handling of our cotton permit themselves to be parties to such a campaign; be it further

Resolved, That we call upon our Senators and Members of Congress to guard themselves against the misrepresentations of the operations of the Farm Board and the cooperatives, and we particularly call the attention of our congressional delegations to the following attempts of the special interests referred to, which we ask our friends in Congress and the public to vigorously resist and overcome:

First, the reduction in the appropriation for the operating expenses of the Federal Farm Board. We call to the attention of Congress the tremendous task laid upon the Farm Board by the Congress of the United States—that is, the task of teaching the farmers of the country the principles of cooperative effort, assisting them in the organization of cooperative enterprises, guiding them in the sound conduct of such undertakings, and in financing their operations pending the accumulation of their own operating reserves. We look upon any attempt to impair or curtail the present activities of the Farm Board in assisting existing cooperatives, and the expansion of such activities to other groups of farmers as an unfriendly act on the part of our legislative representatives, thus supporting the program of our enemies and opposing our own interests and views.

Second, we look upon the attempt to reduce the salaries of members of the Federal Farm Board 20 per cent as simply a means of harassing and embarrassing those faithful representatives of agriculture in view of the fact that this agency of the Government has been singled out from all other departments, boards, and commissions as the one to which should be applied the rule of the greater economy in administrative costs. In view of this fact we regard such an attempt as insincere and discriminatory and unworthy of our trusted legislative representatives.

Third, the passage of a bill to contribute 40,000,000 bushels of wheat, held and owned by the Grain Stabilization Corporation for the benefit of the Red Cross and its needy subjects is commendatory from the standpoint of charity, humanity, and public necessity, but we call upon our Members in Congress to appropriate an amount of money sufficient to pay for this wheat based upon existing market prices and return to the revolving fund, provided in the agricultural marketing act, the amount thus derived. The failure to so reimburse the revolving fund would result in a depletion of the fund and therefore the curtailment of the activities of the Federal Farm Board, and is in violation of the spirit of Congress when it passed the agricultural marketing act for the benefit of farmers. Such a course is in line with the wishes of those who would dissipate the revolving funds for other purposes than those contemplated in the agricultural marketing act and is contrary to the interest and wishes of farmers; be it further

Resolved, That we earnestly appeal to the spirit of justice and fair play of the American people to stand by the farmers of the country in their defensive fight against powerful and sinister interests in the struggle which the farmers are making to set up their own marketing machinery in order that the economics and profits of efficient distribution may be fairly divided between the producer and the consumer rather than to be converted into channels of distributive or speculative middlemen, who are already the richest per capita business men of the South; be it further

Resolved, That we ask all bankers, merchants, professional men, governmental agencies, and State and Federal legislative representatives, who recognize their dependence upon the primary wealth producers of the country and who profess to be in sympathy with their welfare, that they show the genuineness of their interest in the farmer by the attitude which they take in the desperate struggle which our enemies are making to crush our cooperative effort at this time of our greatest financial difficulty and at the time that cooperation among ourselves offers the greatest hope for our future; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Representatives in Congress, the banks, chambers of commerce, and important trade organizations and newspapers of the South.

Resolutions Committee of Southwide Meeting of State Cotton Cooperatives.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3536) for the relief of Jerry O'Shea, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 410) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3908) to amend title 33, chapter 4, section 252, paragraph (a), of the Navigation Rules for the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 411) thereon.

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 44) providing for a Public Health Service investigation of District of Columbia sewage-disposal methods in the Potomac River, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 414) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1307) providing for an appropriation toward the alteration and repair of the buildings of Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 415) thereon.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, from the Committee on the District of Columbia I wish to report favorably two bills, one relating to licensing of real-estate agents in the District of Columbia and the other relating to the proposition to prevent fraud in relation to securities issued in the District of Columbia. The report on the bill relating to licenses for real-estate agents is in the course of preparation, and will be ready very shortly. I therefore desire to ask unanimous consent that as soon as I receive that report it may be given precedence on the calendar over the report I now submit on the securities measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the Senator would do well to withhold the request until the report shall have been submitted.

Mr. BLAINE. It is a very informal matter. I merely prefer to have the bill relating to the licensing of real-estate agents precede the other measure, the report on which I have just submitted. I think it is of no especial consequence either way.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 3362) to prevent fraud in the promotion or sale of stocks, bonds, or other securities sold or offered for sale within the District of Columbia; to control the sale of the same; to register persons selling stocks, bonds, or other securities; to provide punishment for the fraudulent or unauthorized sale of the same; to make uniform the law in relation thereto, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 412) thereon.

He also, subsequently, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2355) to define, regulate, and license real-estate brokers and real-estate salesmen; to create a real-estate commission in the District of Columbia; to protect the public against fraud in real-estate transactions, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 413) thereon.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the nature of a report from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, I present a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting for the approval of Congress a request for the destruction of certain worthless papers. I send the letter, with a list of papers, to the desk, and ask that the request may be granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 9th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 1861. An act authorizing the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to print and distribute additional sets of the writings of George Washington;

S. 2985. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Connecticut River State Bridge Commission, a statutory commission of the State of Connecticut created and existing under the provisions of special Act No. 496 of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, 1931 session, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Connecticut River; and

S. 3132. An act to extend the times for the commencement and completion of the bridge of the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad, in said county, in the State of Minnesota, and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg, in said county, in the State of North Dakota, across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF THE COMMERCE COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the following nominations, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar:

Jeremiah Strauther Morton, of Virginia, for promotion from aide (with relative rank of ensign in the Navy) to junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer (with relative rank of lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy) in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, vice B. G. Jones, resigned; and

Capt. John G. Drinkwater, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, for appointment as a member of the California Débris Commission, provided for by the act of Congress approved March 1, 1893, entitled "An act to create the California Débris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California," vice Maj. John R. D. Matheson, Corps of Engineers, relieved.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4007) for the relief of Mildred Hull; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 4008) to amend article 5 of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1897, relating to the approval of regulations for preventing collisions upon certain harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4009) granting a pension to Fred Burns (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4010) granting a pension to Ane Pedersen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BAILEY:

A bill (S. 4011) granting a pension to Ella Elizabeth Dale; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 4012) for the relief of Mrs. Mance Hardy; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 4013) for the relief of E. Walter Edwards; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 4014) for the relief of Mick C. Cooper; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4015) for the relief of Edgar L. Thawaites; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4016) granting a pension to J. C. Ruark (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 4017) granting a pension to Dora B. Mercer Ray (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PATTERSON:

A bill (S. 4018) granting a pension to Polly Ann Newton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 4019) granting an increase of pension to Frances M. Robinson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 4020) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of practice and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases after verdict; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A bill (S. 4021) granting additional war-risk insurance to Anna Christine Jones; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 4022) for the relief of Earl Lester Hall; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 4023) providing for the closing of barber shops one day in every seven in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 4024) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to cancel patent in fee issued to Victoria Arconge (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EMERGENCY HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION—AMENDMENT

Mr. BINGHAM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

UNITED STATES ROANOKE COLONY COMMISSION

Mr. BAILEY submitted a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 22), which was referred, with an accompanying paper, to the Committee on the Library, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a commission to be known as the United States Roanoke Colony Commission (hereinafter referred to as the commission), and to be composed of six commissioners, as follows: Three Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The commissioners shall serve without compensation and shall select a chairman from among their number.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the commissioners to prepare and report a plan or plans and a program for the commemoration in 1934 of the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of English-speaking civilization in America on Roanoke Island, N. C., with an estimate of the probable cost; to give due and proper consideration to such plan or plans as may be submitted to them for such celebration; to confer with such civic associations and organizations, and with such other commissions, Federal, State, and municipal, as may be appointed for purposes similar to the purpose of this resolution, and to take such steps as may be necessary to secure the coordination and correlation of plans prepared by such commissions; and to do all such other things as may be necessary to carry into full effect the intents and purposes of this resolution.

SEC. 3. That the commission, after selecting a chairman and a vice chairman from among their members, may employ a secretary and such other assistants as may be needed for clerical work connected with the duties of the commission: Provided, That said commission can so arrange that no part of the pay or expenses of such secretary and other assistants, if any, shall be paid by the United States.

SEC. 4. The commissioners shall receive no compensation for their services but shall be paid their actual and necessary traveling, hotel, and other expenses incurred in the discharge of their duties, and the same shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the House and Senate.

SEC. 5. That the said commission be, and the same is hereby, authorized to call upon the Commission of Fine Arts, in Washington, for their assistance and advice in connection with any plan or plans that may be submitted or considered, and the said Commission of Fine Arts is directed to render such assistance and advice as its other duties may permit and as may be within its power.

SEC. 6. That the commission shall, on or before the 15th day of December, 1932, make a report to the Congress in order that enabling legislation may be enacted.

SEC. 7. That the commission hereby created shall expire within one year after the expiration of the celebration.

SEC. 8. That this concurrent resolution shall take effect immediately.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 96. An act to punish the sending through the mails of certain threatening communications;

H. R. 278. An act to compensate the Post Office Department for the extra work caused by the payment of money orders at offices other than those on which the orders are drawn;

H. R. 8779. An act granting certain lands to the board of commissioners of the Orleans levee district in the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, for levee and street purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On March 8, 1932:

S. 3514. An act regulating the use of appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department.

On March 10, 1932:

S. 1861. An act authorizing the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to print and distribute additional sets of the writings of George Washington.

CANADIAN BANKING SYSTEM

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in the Springfield Daily Republican, of Springfield, Mass., on March 8 and 9 of this month there appeared two very illuminating articles written by Mr. M. Grattan O'Leary on the Canadian banking system. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The articles are as follows:

[From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, March 8, 1932]

CANADA'S BANKING SYSTEM—I

By M. Grattan O'Leary

OTTAWA, March 5.—According to reports of the Federal Reserve Board the years 1931–2 saw 3,635 United States banks suspend operations, with a net loss to depositors of $2,404,000,000. In the light of these disastrous consequences, United States readers may be interested in the operations of Canadian banks during the same years. The Canadian banking story, summed up briefly, is this:

1. Not a single Canadian bank has closed its doors since the beginning of the depression.

2. Since confederation, a period of 65 years, there have been but 26 Canadian bank failures, with a total loss to depositors of less than $13,500,000.

3. Since 1900 there have been but 9 failures, 5 of these being but small banks carrying deposits of less than $1,000,000; and in 5 of the 9 failures depositors did not lose a dollar.

4. During the present depression not a single Canadian bank has even reduced the rate of its dividend; all of them, without exception, have added to their reserves.

What is the explanation? How comes it that while United States banks have been failing by the thousand, and United States depositors losing up to billions, the people of Canada, living under similar economic conditions, have continued to enjoy banking safety, mobility of funds, a reasonable abundance of credit?

Two main answers are given by Canadian banking experts. The first is that the unified system of Canadian national banks, as opposed to the dual United States system under a divided federal and state control, makes for greater strength. The second is that the Canadian branch banking system is superior to the small unit-bank system in force in the United States.

STRICT FEDERAL CONTROL

Owen D. Young said a few weeks ago that if all American banks could be brought under Federal control their difficulties would soon disappear. Canada has held tenaciously to this view, and the Dominion Parliament and Government exercise the strictest control over the Dominion's 10 national banks. No new bank may be started without Federal legislation, and the regulation of banking, the incorporation of banks, and the issue of paper money fall exclusively within the legislative authority of the Federal Parliament. Banking, in fact, is regulated by the bank act, which, while usually revised at the end of 10-year periods, is subject to amendment by Parliament at any time. The entire responsibility for the Canadian banking structure, therefore, rests squarely upon the Government of the day—which is directly responsible to the public.

Canadian banks, established under the bank act, are called "chartered banks" and are authorized to open branches and agencies; to deal in coin and bullion; to deal in, to discount, and to lend money on the security of bills of exchange and other negotiable securities, and on the stocks, bonds, debentures, and obligations of municipal and other corporations, and Dominion, provincial, and other public securities, and to carry on generally the business of banking. They are prohibited, however, from loaning money upon the security of shares in the capital stock of any chartered bank or upon the security of real estate. The purpose of these prohibitions is to give reality to the "paid-up capital" of the chartered banks as a whole, and to keep their resources liquid by preventing these from being locked up in immovable property.

MOST FLEXIBLE SYSTEM

The Canadian banking system is a most flexible one. The banks have perfect control of the credit situation by reason of the fact that there are but 10 chartered banks in the Dominion, which banks have over 4,000 branches located in all portions of the Dominion and in Newfoundland. Thus the banking and credit system is under the supervision of a few large and powerful and well-managed institutions headed by trained bankers. Through the branch system they are able to keep closely in touch with every part of the country and to obtain accurate information regarding the status of any industry, both local and general, and of any borrower.

Canadian banks are able to extend a line of credit to borrowers much larger than would be considered safe under any other system of banking. The secret lies in the fact that a borrower can not seek credit indiscriminately. By custom he must deal with one bank, or, at most, in exceptional cases, with two or three, and then only by common consent; the lending bank thus becoming very closely in touch with the business of the borrower.

A Canadian bank may make loans to farmers for the purchase of seed grain, with the loans secured upon the resultant crops; may also make loans upon the security of fresh grain grown upon the farm and also upon the security of livestock. Under the operation of the law the bank becomes practically the owner of the duly pledged goods of such borrowers. The borrower retains the right to buy and sell, but in case of necessity the bank may take immediate possession of the pledged goods. And this principle applies to wholesale purchasers of or dealers in products of agriculture, the forest, mines, and manufacturing concerns. As a consequence, a large part of the commercial paper taken by the banks from borrowers is secured by what is practically title to the goods on farms and in warehouses, factories, and other places. These goods are actually the first security to the loan, while the general credit of the borrower supplements such security.

Under the bank act, Canadian banks are permitted to issue currency of their own up to the amount of their paid-up capital, plus their deposits in the central reserves of the Dominion (deposits to be in Dominion currency or in gold). Above that they are required to put into the reserve dollar for dollar in gold.

CIRCULATION REDEMPTION FUND

In order to guarantee against loss to holders of this currency, the banks founded a voluntary circulation-redemption fund in 1890. They each contribute in gold, or the equivalent, a sum equal to 5 per cent of their total currency circulation, this sum being available to meet any losses that may occur in the event of a bank failure.

It is an extraordinary fact that not $1 has been lost by the holder of a note of a Canadian bank in the past 50 years.

In the event of a bank failure, the claims upon the assets stand in this seniority:

1. The notes issued by the bank.
2. Bank debts owing to the Dominion Government.
3. Bank debts owing to the provincial governments.
4. The depositors.

At the present time, however, considering the position and assets of the 10 chartered Canadian banks, it would be necessary for them to drop nearly $1,000,000,000 before depositors would stand to lose.

Actually, there is hardly a chance in a million of a Canadian bank failure with possibility of depositors losing. All of them are in a prosperous condition. One of the 10 pays a dividend of 16 per cent, 6 pay a dividend of 12 per cent, 1 of 10 per cent, another of 9 per cent. These dividends are being well maintained, and the reserve funds, now standing at $160,000,000, are being added to.

[From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, March 9, 1932]

CANADA'S BANKING SYSTEM—II

By M. Grattan O'Leary

OTTAWA, MARCH 8.—Next to federal or national control, the great strength of the Canadian banking system is held to be in the policy of branch banking. A centralized system gives nation-wide direction to credit; loans are made where most needed and where safest, and a glut of money can be transferred. Direction of credit is not in the hands of local men but controlled by high executives, with credit policies formulated by leading bankers and common policies adopted by all banks. Local managers, managers of branches, are restricted as to the maximum of loans they may grant, this depending upon their district, and requests for larger loans must be referred to headquarters. This, possible without undue delay, is a tremendous factor for security.

The statement has been made that if all Canadian banks had been unit institutions 80 per cent of those situated west of the Great Lakes and possibly 40 per cent of those in the East would have failed, because many Canadian branches operated more or less consistently at a loss during the past few years. As it was, these branches could operate at a loss simply because their losses were more than offset by the profits of other branches of the same bank which were operating successfully in more prosperous districts. This, it is held, is the strongest possible argument, from the standpoint of security, for the Canadian branch-bank system.

One of the marked advantages of a nation-wide system of branches is that a shifting of funds may take place from those parts where there is an excess of deposits, where deposits are not absorbed entirely by local credit needs, to other sections which need credit and are not able to finance themselves. This is one of the best qualities of the Canadian system, and has been a potent factor in the development of the grain Provinces.

AVAILABILITY OF CREDITS

From the point of view of availability of credits, the branch system would also seem to be superior to the unit system. It is sometimes contended that branch banking leads to a restriction upon local loans, but this has not been the case in Canada. S. H. Logan, general manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, says:

"Any suggestion that the Canadian banking system involves a concentration of loans in larger centers to the detriment of smaller communities is as far from the mark as can possibly be. The very essence of successful banking in Canada is the more widely served entire community—agricultural, commercial, industrial, and financial—this being better for banks and for the growth of their business."

An argument often heard is that where branch banking exists there is no sympathy with local needs. The answer to that, so far as Canada is concerned, is that over 95 per cent of the total number of loans in any year are dealt with by branch managers, and complaints are rare over delay in dealing with loans for amounts beyond the limits of local managerial authority.

Another argument which is often heard is that where branch banking operates there is no protection against a banking monopoly. In actual practice, however, in Canada there has developed nothing like credit monopoly. But, on the contrary, there is severe competition in getting business, establishing branches, and in securing deposits through better service and convenience of location. Interest charges are reasonable and dividends paid are lower than those of the national banks in the United States.

Branch banking is also conducive to a more extensive knowledge of economic and financial developments abroad, an advantage that is not to be gainsaid. Branch banks can afford to employ more efficient executives, whose functions are to see that loans and investments are diversified and made in accordance with sound banking practice, that incompetent managers and employees are eliminated, and that regular audits are made.

Summed up, the extensive branch system is desirable because it permits greater unity of policy and approximate uniformity in regional interest rates, a larger capital behind each office, the ability to shift funds to where they are most needed, and, possibly, smaller overhead cost.

MORE OF A PROFESSION

There is the advantage, finally, of banking being made more of a profession, more responsible, and more efficient. The organization of the chartered banks of Canada is almost military in its completeness. By preference, the ranks of the official staff, practically without exception, are filled from the clerical staff which has been trained within the bank's own organization. Thus the officials are steeped with the bank's policies and traditions. They look upon their duties as professional and conduct the affairs of the bank upon lines found to be wise and safe over a long series of years.

The general manager, who is at the head of the organization, exercises almost autocratic powers. It is his duty to define the policy of the bank toward customers and to direct the activities of the working forces. While he reports to the president and the directors, actually they are guided by his judgment and ordinarily would hesitate to urge any course of action of which he would not approve.

The local manager, the manager of the branch bank, has considerable latitude as to loans. He can appeal to the district superintendent for advice and instructions and in turn the district superintendent can draw upon the authority and wisdom of the head office. Thus the client of the little branch in a remote section of the country may have at his disposal the ripe experience of the older bankers at district headquarters or at the head office. The Canadian system of branch banking is thus peculiarly adapted to the needs of a young and developing country. Branches can be established in many places where a bank ordinarily would not be profitable, or would be so small as not to be of value in upholding the business of the neighborhood.

A MINIMUM OF RISK

Under the bank act the affairs of each chartered bank must be examined by qualified auditors selected by the shareholders and approved by the Dominion Minister of Finance. The auditor's report must be attached to the statement submitted by the directors to the shareholders and must be read at the annual general meeting. A copy of the annual statement must also be filed with the Minister of Finance, with whom also a monthly return must be filed and regularly published. The Minister may also call for special returns from any bank whenever, in his judgment, they are necessary to afford a full and complete knowledge of its conditions. The result is a minimum of risk to the banks and to their clients.

TARIFF RELATIONS WITH CANADA

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two articles from the Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer on our tariff relations with Canada.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer, March 1, 1932]

CANADA'S RETALIATION FOR UNJUST UNITED STATES TARIFF

By M. Grattan O'Leary, noted Canadian journalist

(Herewith is the third of a series of special articles prepared by Grattan O'Leary, noted Canadian journalist, showing the baneful effects of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act and the need for reciprocal trade agreements between Canada and this Nation. The fourth article will appear at an early date.)

OTTAWA.—Study of official records reveals that the existing Canadian tariff against American goods is the highest in the history of trade relations between the two countries.

Mr. R. B. Bennett, put into office in 1930 on a high-tariff platform, and more particularly on a platform which called for high duties against the United States, has carried out his mandate with a resolute energy. His first act was to summon a special session of Parliament to revise the tariff upward on 250 American commodities. Later on, at a regular session of Parliament, he heightened tariffs again, increased them in several cases by as much as 100 per cent.

More than that, and proceeding to copy United States fiscal methods, he secured a flexible tariff, issued 60 or more orders-in-council boosting tariff rates.

The effect of this new Canadian policy may be seen from the following table of Canada's trade with the United States during the past 10 years:

	Exports to United States	Imports from United States
1921	$560,701,936	$856,176,820
1922	304,104,177	515,958,196
1923	380,347,721	540,989,738
1924	441,642,909	601,256,447
1925	427,184,643	509,780,009
1926	485,952,235	608,618,542
1927	479,336,230	687,022,521

Thus, in one year, Mr. Bennett's tariff policies have cut Canadian purchases from the United States by more than a quarter billion dollars. Something of this, of course, may be due to the depression, but most of it is due to prohibitive tariffs, coupled with a determination by Canadians to buy their own or Empire goods.

In other words, Canadians are but doing unto Americans what Americans are doing unto them; for in this same year American purchases from Canada, chiefly in farm products and undoubtedly due to the Hawley-Smoot tariff, fell off by $172,000,000.

Nor is Mr. Bennett satisfied with merely checking imports from the United States. He went to England, offered England increased preferences; and when an English Labor Government rejected his proposals he demanded an Empire economic conference in Ottawa.
